Mr. BACON. Yes; I have already spoken of one amendment. The other amendment, as made by the Senate under the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee, was as to the phraseology with reference to the beneficiaries of this bill. The language found in the bill as it passed the House was, "to be used for the government and benefit of Puerto Rico until otherwise provided by law." The general phraseology was considered by the Senate as too vague and indefinite, and that it was the duty of Congress in making this appropriation to be more specific. Therefore the Senate struck out that phraseology and introduced a clause in lieu of the words "and benefit of Puerto Rico until otherwise provided by law." I will read it in the connection in which it was. Speaking of the appropriation, the House bill said:

Shall be placed at the disposal of the President, to be used for the government and benefit of Puerto Rico until otherwise provided by law.

That was the phraseology which came from the House. The Senate struck that out and used this language:

Shall be placed at the disposal of the President, to be used for the government now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein.

Now, the House conferees appear to recede from their disagreement to the Senate amendment, but they do it with an amendment which restores practically the provision so far as the unbridled latitude and discretion are concerned, with the exact powers to the President which were in the House bill.

While it is expressed in the report that the House recedes from its disagreement to that amendment, it in fact, in receding from the disagreement, puts an amendment upon the amendment which it disagrees to, which practically restores it to the meaning which it had when it came from the House—not to the full extent, but in large part.

The amendment, however, which is of vital character is the one agreed upon in the conference report which proposes to restore to the bill the provision which the Senate, under the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, struck out of the bill. That is the Senate amendment which limited the appropriation to such revenues as had been received up to January 1, 1900. The House conferees, in disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate in striking this out, and the Senate conferees, in receding from the amendment, restore the provision by which not only the revenues up to January 1, 1900, are appropriated for this purpose, but by which all revenues since then received and hereafter to be received from the same source are to be appropriated, and indefinitely, without the expression of any amount or any limitation of time, all revenues hereafter received from that source are thus appropriated.

Now, Mr. President, this indefinite appropriation is wrong. An appropriation should definitely specify amounts. It ought to give at least a limit. It is common to appropriate such an amount or so much thereof as may be necessary, but as to indefinitely appropriating all the money which may be received from a certain source without a limitation either as to amount or as to time, even if there is a precedent for it, which I doubt, it is certainly an improper way to legislate.

But, Mr. President, it is not that criticism which induces me to oppose the adoption of the conference report. It is one still more grave. What is the purpose of the House in insisting not only that the appropriation shall cover the revenues received from importations from Puerto Rico up to January 1, but that they shall cover all subsequent revenues? I do not think I can do injustice when I say that the purpose is to provide for the contingency that the bill now pending in the Senate looking to the regulation of tariff relations between Puerto Rico and other territories within the jurisdiction of the United States may fail, and that if it does fail this revenue may be continued under the rates of the Dingley tariff on all products coming from Puerto Rico.

I say that that is the legitimate conclusion of the purpose. What other purpose can they have? Is it for the purpose of enlarging an amount deemed otherwise to be insufficient? Is it because it is thought or contended that the amount specified in the bill, which is the revenue received up to January 1, 1900, will be insufficient for the needs of the people of Puerto Rico, and that, therefore, this additional amount shall be put upon it?

If so, Mr. President, there is no question about the fact that the amount of $2,000,000 and upward which is specified in the bill is more than sufficient for any present needs, more than sufficient for any needs which can possibly be developed prior to such time as it may be determined whether or not we will have the general legislation with reference to Puerto Rico which will settle the tariff question.

Now, Mr. President, it is instructive to see what has been the history of this legislation. I had occasion to remark a few days ago that up to a very short period in the past there was no manifestation of this great solicitude that there should be money appropriated for this purpose. There was no realization of the fact that there was such suffering in Puerto Rico that there must be this immediate and large appropriation for this relief.

At the time when this Congress assembled everything which had been indicated by the Administration and by the dominant party as the policy which it intended to pursue with reference to Puerto Rico was in harmony with what would generally be recognized as a proper course to be pursued toward this new acquisition. It was a policy which indicated that our institutions were to be extended to that island. It was a policy which indicated that they were to have no burdens except such as we bore, and that we would not exact from them, either directly or indirectly, any tribute.

We were told by the President of the United States in his message that they had been cut off from other markets; that by their cession to this country the ports of Spain were closed to them; that there was no place in the world to which they could go for a market but to the United States, and that it was our plain duty to put them upon the same platform that all other parts of the United States were put upon—that there should be absolute free trade between Puerto Rico and all other parts of the United States.

In pursuance of that, in the House of Representatives a bill was introduced by the chairman of the proper committee, in which there was no suggestion of any purpose to establish tariff relations between Puerto Rico and the rest of the United States—a bill which provided for absolute free trade. In the Senate a like bill was introduced by the chairman of the committee charged with Puerto Rican affairs.

If the utterance of the Republican press is to be credited—I am not speaking now about what Democrats have said or what the Democratic press has said—but if the Republican press is to be credited, it was not until certain protected industries and interests came to this Capitol and represented that free trade with Puerto Rico would be detrimental to those interests that the Administration and the dominant party, both in the other House and in this, awoke to the necessity of establishing a tariff wall between Puerto Rico and the United States. They soon claimed that the purpose in imposing a tariff on imports from Puerto Rico was to raise a revenue for Puerto Rico, but everybody knows that this proposition to impose this tariff was in response to the demands of those protected interests.

In obedience to these peremptory demands, a new bill was introduced in the House, in which a tariff was proposed to be levied upon the products of Puerto Rico coming to the United States and also a tariff on products of the United States going to Puerto Rico. That bill progressed through its various stages, and after a most heated debate passed the House of Representatives and came to the Senate. Before it did so the bill which had previously been introduced in the Senate and which recognized that there should be free trade between Puerto Rico and the balance of the territory of the United States was practically withdrawn, and in its place one was substituted which also proposed to recognize and to erect a tariff wall between Puerto Rico and the United States.

It was well known how those who were in the minority stood upon that issue. We were, as we are still, all opposed to the tariff wall between Puerto Rico and the rest of the United States. But the outcry which arose in this country was not limited to those who belong to the Democratic party. All over this country, regardless of party, there went up the greatest and most spontaneous outcry that has ever come from a people upon a question of simple justice or injustice to a small, helpless, dependent territory which had fallen under our care and into our keeping.

Mr. President, I am relating this not for the purpose of the criticism which what I am saying necessarily conveys, but for the purpose of tracing the reason why the bill upon which the conference report now under consideration has been submitted was introduced in the other House, why it was passed, and why the particular feature in it which I am now combating was put into that bill.

The outcry that went up was one sufficient to startle our friends who are responsible for legislation in this Congress, and the question was how should they shelter themselves from the storm of indignation which rose up all over this country, and which reached not only the House of Representatives and this Chamber, but also the White House, not in an echo, but in a great uproar.

How should they shelter themselves from such a tornado of popular indignation? There had been a physical storm, a hurricane, in Puerto Rico six months ago. It had created great devastation. It had wrecked the agricultural interests. It had almost paralyzed business. Nobody heard anything during all those long weary months about any large appropriation to be made out of the United States Treasury to relieve the misery and desolation it had wrought, from whatever source the fund might come. They were deaf to the cries of distress; they were blind to the nakedness and want of the Puerto Ricans.

There was not a word uttered in this Chamber; there was not a suggestion in the other House; there was not a suggestion from the Administration that there should be this appropriation to relieve this distress; there was not a thought of any appropriation to relieve this distress until after the passage in the House of the Puerto Rican tariff bill, until after the furious storm which it created arose, and when in a frenzied panic the Republicans cried out to each other, What shall we do to protect ourselves from its fury? In their dismay the answer was that as we have done this thing, as we have imposed upon the Puerto Ricans an unjust tariff, we will repair it; we will endeavor to appease the wrath of the public by returning to them the money which we have improperly taken from them.

Mr. President, what other motive could there have been? Aside from the fact that the sudden manifestation of this benevolent purpose has been without premonition, why was that the particular amount named in this bill; why was it that this two million and odd thousand dollars, the exact amount which had been received in duties from Puerto Rican imports, was adjudged to be the particular amount necessary to relieve the suffering in Puerto Rico? Could it have been by any chance that the exact amount needed was the amount which had been received from those duties?

Of course that is not so; and there is but one suggestion in reply, and that is that the party that had stirred up the indignation of the people by proposing to exact tariff duties from the Puerto Ricans proposed to present a peace offering to appease the indignation of the people—the amount which had been illegally and unjustly wrung from the Puerto Ricans—a peace offering to your own consciences, a peace offering to the Republican Senators and Representatives who rebel against this unjust tariff. It is a conscience fund to restore what has been illegally taken, and as the purpose is to continue the plunder, the atonement must continue, and the conscience fund must also continue to be paid. But, as I shall show, this conscience fund is not returned to the individuals who have been illegally and unjustly plundered by the illegal collection of this tariff. It was a practical confession that the tariff duties ought not to have been collected; and while they obeyed the command of the protected interests in their purpose to continue to collect the tariff, while they intended to continue the sin, they would endeavor to make atonement by returning what they illegally exacted. Why should provision be made to return every dollar collected by tariff laws from Puerto Rico except upon the recognition that every dollar thus collected has been unjustly and illegally collected, and therefore every dollar must be returned.

This unjust imposition of tariff did not simply stir up trouble in the country at large, but it stirred up trouble in this Chamber. If we are correctly informed, and if the utterances in the public press are to be credited, we have had among our brethren in the majority the institution of a committee, the like of which I never heard before in a political body, a peace committee—a peace committee to make peace among our friends upon this question, upon which not only they are divided, but upon which the country at large, including the Republican party, is also divided.

Mr. President, what is the purpose of the insistence on the part of the House of Representatives of the continuance in this bill of the provision that not only the money which has been received from imports from Puerto Rico up to January 1, 1900, shall be devoted to this benevolent charity, but that indefinitely in the future not only that which has been received up to the present time, but that which shall be received in the future shall be devoted to a like purpose?

Under existing law, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] suggests to me, the revenues which are now being collected, and which will continue to be collected on Puerto Rican products if there is no legislation on the subject of Puerto Rico, are 100 per cent of the Dingley law, and this rate will continue, in the absence of legislation, to be collected upon all products of Puerto Rico coming to the United States.

What, I say, is the purpose of the insistence of the House of Representatives that this shall be done? Mr. President, of course we can not prophesy with certainty what is to occur; but what is said by Senators generally finds a correct expression in the outgivings of the press; and we are told—I hope it may not be so—but we are told that it is a common utterance now that the passage of this bill will relieve the necessity of the passage of any revenue law with reference to Puerto Rico. As a consequence, instead of 15 per cent of the Dingley tariff rate, if the present status is to remain and if there is to be no tariff legislation, the effect is to be that, so far from having free trade with Puerto Rico, we are to continue to have the tariff duties levied by the Dingley law collected upon all products of Puerto Rico coming into the United States.

Mr. President, there has been read here the decision in 9 Howard, in the case of Fleming vs. Page, which I have here, but can not refer to just at this moment, and it is not necessary that I should, in which there are some expressions under which it is claimed that the United States has the right to levy and to continue to collect the duties of the Dingley law upon all products of Puerto Rico coming into the United States until there has been a collection district organized for Puerto Rico.

Whether that is right or wrong—and I think it is certainly wrong, but I shall not stop to discuss that now—that was a case which originated and had reference to a question of tariff between Tampico, a port in Mexico, and the United States; and the other expression in it had no reference to any particular issue made in the case as to the right to collect tariff duties between any part of the territory which had been acquired by the United States. But aside from the question whether it is right or wrong, those now in power took that as the rule, and from the time of the acquisition of Puerto Rico up to this good day we have not only been collecting from those poor people all the rate of tariff prescribed in the Dingley law, but we have been making them pay, if I understand it correctly, the rate of tariff on goods going from the United States to Puerto Rico—a regular whipsaw arrangement.

Mr. President, it is important that Senators should bear this matter in mind; that they should meet the responsibility, and that responsibility should be clearly kept in view and recognized, that to adopt this conference report recognizes the continuance of a tariff wall between Puerto Rico and the United States; recognizes and contemplates not only a tariff of 15 per cent, but a tariff of 100 per cent of the Dingley law.

Senators who do not believe that there should be a tariff between Puerto Rico and the United States must not close their eyes to the fact that if the conference report be adopted, and if no legislation thereafter is enacted by this Congress relative to the question of tariff between Puerto Rico and the United States, and this Congress adjourns without any such legislation—I say Senators who recognize and believe that there should be no tariff wall between Puerto Rico and the United States must not close their eyes to the fact that they go away from here leaving in existence the tariff wall of the Dingley law, not only under the sanction of the construction which is put by the supporters of this tariff upon Fleming vs. Page, but under the sanction of its implied recognition in the terms of this bill.

What is past, Mr. President, we can not undo. If there has been an illegal tariff collected from those people, the least we can do is to restore to them the money, although, as I shall endeavor to show, if I do not trespass too long upon the time of the Senate, our effort to restore it is to a large extent futile, because it is impossible to restore the money to those who have really paid it. Not only under the construction of that case as contended for by the tariff supporters, but under the express terms of this bill, not only disposing of that which has been collected, but recognizing and contemplating and thus affirming and approving the continuance of the Dingley law, this tariff will be continued between Puerto Rico and the remainder of the United States. And that, I submit, Mr. President, is the direct purpose of those who have insisted on restoring this feature of the House bill which was stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. President, what other purpose can the House of Representatives have in insisting upon it? Is it because of their eagerness to relieve this great distress? Is it because of the haste to which we were so eloquently urged in this Chamber, and which, with equal eloquence, was urged in the other House—the haste that we should make to relieve this storm-swept, this devastated, this suffering island?

If so, Mr. President, why was it when the House bill went back to the House with the Senate amendment, and when it was perfectly practicable for the other House in twenty minutes or less time to have passed that bill and made it a law—why was it that it was a matter of such great importance that this amendment should be kept in, that, in spite of all the adjurement that we had had that we should not be slow to relieve this distress, in order to keep this simple provision here there has been caused a delay which, with the time consumed by the conference committee and with the utmost expedition this Senate can give it, and without there being any purpose or effort of delay, there must be at least the lapse of a week in loss of time?

Mr. President, there was a great purpose in it; and I insist upon it that the purpose was that if mayhap the dominant party in this Chamber can not agree upon legislation with reference to a tariff between Puerto Rico and the balance of the United States, and if, perhaps, it should so fall out that we should adjourn without any such legislation, these interests which had come here, and which had demanded that there should not be free trade between Puerto Rico and the United States, would still have the protection of the tariff of the Dingley law to be levied and collected upon the products of Puerto Rico coming to the United States.

Mr. President, I insist upon it that there never was a higher duty upon a people, never a more sacred obligation upon a people, than that which now rests upon the people of the United States not only to give free trade to Puerto Rico with the United States, but to do it quickly.

All of this talk about charity and about benevolence is an afterthought. It is done for the purpose, as I said, of making peace with an outraged people; and Senators must not close their eyes to the fact that what is brought in here, while appearing to be a mere innocent report of a conference committee, is one which involves the question whether or not there shall continue not only a moderate tariff law, but whether we shall continue, under the contention of the Administration, in the absence of any legislation, the present Dingley law between Puerto Rico and every other part of the United States.

I insist upon it, Mr. President, as we have heard from the Puerto Ricans themselves that, while it is all right and proper for us to relieve the present distress—and I voted for the bill when in the Senate, although it went much beyond that, because I would include something which is not entitled to relief rather than to deny it to those who are entitled—I say, as we have heard from the Puerto Ricans that, while the relief of distress is all right and proper, their great need is that we shall by legislation put them in a position to help themselves.

Senators have said—and I return to that, although I have passed it—that the money which has been collected from the imports from Puerto Rico has been paid by our own people, and that the Puerto Ricans have not suffered thereby. That raises the question as to whether or not tariff duties are practically paid by the producers in another country or whether they are paid by the consumers in our own country. That is no new question, and it is one about which there should be no difficulty. There are some instances under which tariff duties necessarily fall upon the consumers in this country, and there are other instances under which they undoubtedly fall upon the producers in other countries.

What is the rule? Where does the line run? The simple test is this: Wherever a tariff is levied the effect of which is to raise prices in this country, necessarily that increase is paid by our own people; but wherever duties are levied which do not raise prices in this country, necessarily the difference must be paid by the producer in the other country, because our people pay no more for the article than they did before. Somebody must lose, as the goods are sold for no more in this country by reason of the tariff, and necessarily the producer must sell for less in the country where the article is produced. That is in the hornbooks; it is in the elementary principles of political economy, the A B C's. The only question is, to which class does this belong?

Does the levying of a tariff upon Puerto Rican sugar raise the price of sugar in America? Certainly not. Why? Because the tariff upon sugar has already fixed the price, and the additional amount of sugar coming Puerto Rico into this country under the tariff is so insignificant compared to the whole amount that it does not make any difference in the cost of sugar in this country; and yet if the Puerto Rican could bring his sugar here without paying any duty, he would sell it at as high a price as the German sells his sugar when he brings it here, and without any deduction on account of the tariff. But as his sugar is to be sold here, and as the tariff duty on his sugar does not appreciably raise the cost of sugar in this country, therefore our people pay no more for sugar on account of the Puerto Rican tariff.

Somebody has got to pay it, and consequently there is no possible escape from the proposition that it is taken out of the pockets of those poor devils over there whom we have taken to our breasts to protect, to love, and to advance. What is true of sugar is true of tobacco and true of all other products of Puerto Rico upon which we levy a tariff. There is no product of Puerto Rico which comes into this country the tariff upon which raises the hundredth part of a mill the cost of that article in this country. The tariff must be paid, and as our people pay no advance, those who produce it and sell it in the island must necessarily receive that much less for their goods.

So I say, Mr. President, as I undertook to say in the beginning, that while we are proposing to return this money to Puerto Rico, we are not returning it to the people from whom it has come; it is impossible to do so. It has not only come out of the man who produced the sugar, but it has affected the wages of every man by whose labor the sugar was produced, a little here and a little there, all over that island. These $2,000,000 have been collected from the scanty store and the scanty wages of those poor people heretofore so downcast, whom we were so suddenly to lift up into a life of civilization and into the blessings of our advanced institutions. Therefore, the benevolent device by which the Republican party in control of the Government undertakes by this bill to return the money unjustly collected from the people of Puerto Rico is, so far as that object is concerned, an unmitigated fraud. It is not returned to those who have paid it. To continue this system is to continue this unmitigated, inhumane, and indefensible fraud, plundering a helpless people under a pretense of making a restitution which is not made and which can not be possibly made.

Mr. President, a few days ago I made some remarks to the Senate upon this subject, and I certainly did not expect this morning to make any extended speech. I then sent to the Secretary's desk and had read an address by the merchants and manufacturers and agriculturists of Puerto Rico, in which they said they did not need charity. It was an address made to the Congress of the United States and which is on its way here now, but has not yet been received, stating that they did not need charity.

They said they did not, as had been contended in the other House and has been contended here, need revenues from a tariff upon their goods to be collected by the United States and then sent to them as a charity, and they pointed out the different ways in which on that island, under the laws of the United States, there could be collected ample, and more than enough, to pay all the expenses of that government and leave them the great boon which they desired, of free intercourse and free trade with the great American people, with whose destiny their lot had been so recently cast. That is in the RECORD, Mr. President. I have forgotten the date, but it was a few days ago, and any Senator can read it there who wishes.

Since that time there has been a great mass meeting of 10,000 people, 10,000 suffering people, 10,000 people downcast and helpless because their industries have been strangled and paralyzed by the failure of the American Government to do its duty by them. Ten thousand of those people assembled in San Juan, in Puerto Rico. Here is a cable dispatch dated March 19, with the resolutions adopted.

Before the cablegram is read, I wish to state that I have only a few more words to say in regard to this question, although I am very frank to say that there would be no difficulty in continuing the discussion of it almost indefinitely. The more one thinks about it the larger the subject appears, the greater the injustice, the absolute inhumanity, and the more the necessity that we should act promptly and act properly.

I now ask that the address which has been cabled may be read from the Secretary's desk. It is the address of a large gathering of 10,000 people at San Juan, headed by the San Juan Chamber of Commerce, assembled at the palace of the Governor-General, to submit a petition with reference to the needs of the island. From the reading of this, if Senators will give heed to it, they will see how utterly paralyzed is the business of that island by reason of the fact that we have erected this tariff wall between Puerto Rico and the United States, and by reason of the further fact that this matter is left in utter doubt as to the shape in which we are going to leave it at the end of this session of Congress. I ask that the paper be read; and I request that Senators will listen to it in order that they may appreciate the gravity of the situation in which those unhappy people are now placed.

The Secretary read as follows:

ASK STABILITY, NOT RELIEF—NEEDS OF PUERTO RICANS PRESENTED BY PETITION AT SAN JUAN—DISTRESS AND ALARM DAILY BECOMING MORE HARASSING FOR WANT OF A FIXED POLICY—UTTERLY UNABLE TO HOLD OUT MUCH LONGER.

SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO, March 19, 1900.

A large gathering of 10,000 people, headed by the San Juan Chamber of Commerce, assembled at the palace of the Governor-General to-day to submit a petition with reference to the needs of the island. The deputation selected to present it was received, in the absence of General Davis, who was indisposed, by Lieutenant-Colonel Hall, adjutant-general. On behalf of General Davis, Lieutenant-Colonel Hall expressed pleasure at seeing so many people who were interested in a question of such importance, and assured them that Puerto Rico would receive justice. An account of the proceedings will be transmitted to Washington.

The crowd was orderly and dispersed without confusion amid "vivas" for the United States and the Governor-General. Following is the text of the petition:

"The people of Puerto Rico, of all classes, represented by the mayor of this city and by the chamber of commerce, in peaceful assembly convened, call upon Governor-General Davis respectfully to direct his attention, and through him the attention of Washington, to the following most salient points of the present critical condition of the island:

"First. The consternation into which the business community in general has been thrown on account of recent cabled news from the United States, setting forth the negative attitude of the Senate as regards the tariff question.

"Second. The utter inability of the island to hold out much longer under existing conditions, as the Senate's delay in coming to a decision on the tariff simply aggravates the almost absolute state of penury throughout the island.

"Third. The urgent necessity of a final settlement of the question as a means of saving to their owners, mostly men of small means, the sugar and tobacco crops, which would pass under the control of speculators if a conclusion is not soon reached, this being the time for planting new crops, and a failure to act promptly being also calculated to have most prejudicial results.

"Fourth. The distress and alarm that are daily becoming more harassing in all branches of trade, owing to the virtual lack of a fixed and definite standard for transactions and the grave apprehensions as to the future, now so generally entertained by all merchants.

"Fifth. The absence of buyers for products, which, with the loss of their former markets, as a consequence of the new régime, are now at a practical standstill.

"Sixth. The enormous depreciation of property, more especially on plantations, and the ruin staring a majority of the planters in the face as the result of the unnatural uneasiness which has made itself felt among capitalists and loan institutions, leading them to curtail or to shut off entirely the credit necessary in moving crops.

"Seventh. The lack of power as well as the absence of credit to contract a loan for the relief of most of the present necessities and the development of resources.

"Eighth. The need of undertakings of a public nature, instead of relief supplies, which, although necessary, tend to make paupers of the working classes.

"These statements, respectfully made, your petitioners respectfully request the Governor-General to bring to the knowledge of the Government at Washington, trusting that a favorable solution may speedily be found.

"ANDRES CROSAS,
"President of the Chamber of Commerce of San Juan.
"M. IGOZCUE,
"Mayor of the City of San Juan."

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it seems to me that this presentation of that condition of affairs in the island of Puerto Rico is an appeal to which the Congress of the United States should not turn a deaf ear, but to which it should make a most immediate response. The incorporation of Puerto Rico into our political system ought not to be a difficult thing to do. They are practically if not technically a part of this continent.

Their people, except an element of colored people, such as we have in this country, are Caucasians. They are a people capable of being assimilated with ours. They are a people capable, after a reasonable tutelage, of being fully invested with civil government so far as we have ever granted it to a Territory; and it does seem to me that the pressing duty of the hour on the part of Congress, not of the month or of the week, but of the day, is to make a declaration which shall put an end to a condition of affairs such as is portrayed in that address of this unhappy people.

The duties which are now being collected are collected under the authority of the President of the United States as the Commander of the Army—the duties being collected from Puerto Rico here.

Mr. TILLMAN. And in Puerto Rico, too.

Mr. BACON. And in Puerto Rico; certainly those which are being collected there.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will not claim that those which are being collected here are.

Mr. BACON. I will not say that, but I will say, and I challenge the Senator to dispute it——

Mr. FORAKER. I remind the Senator, if he will allow me——

Mr. BACON. Let me finish the sentence and I will yield with pleasure. I do say that so far as the collection of duties in Puerto Rico is concerned, it is under the military order of the President as Commander in Chief.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Georgia challenged me. I accept the challenge, and agree with the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I like that sort of a challenge and that sort of agreement. There is no fight in it.

Mr. FORAKER. I rose merely to remind the Senator from Georgia that the President informed us in his message recommending the appropriation of the $2,000,000 that he had reduced the tariff and had put some articles on the free list going into Puerto Rico, but that he had no authority to change the tariff upon articles coming from Puerto Rico into the United States.

Mr. BACON. That is true. The President can entirely relieve them. He can not only relieve them in part, but entirely; and it ought to be done immediately. They ought to be relieved from tariff duties upon articles going into Puerto Rico, and this Congress ought this day to relieve them of duties upon articles coming from Puerto Rico to the balance of the United States, and we ought not to linger here day after day and week after week until questions of differences may be settled between those among whom there should be no difference upon the great question of this people who have been deprived of all other markets; and, outside of the constitutional question and constitutional obligations, having the highest claim upon us that we should give them free access to our own markets.

Mr. President, I think if the dominant party in Congress were to agree upon that, there would be no difficulty in passing a bill, not after a short time, but immediately. We think, or I myself think—I am not authorized to speak for anybody else—that the government to which Puerto Rico is entitled is a Territorial government, a free Territorial government; that it should be put upon the same basis as Oklahoma or Alaska or New Mexico or Arizona; that it should have every right and every privilege granted to any citizen of any one of those Territories, and that above all, in order that it may be lifted up out of its condition of absolute depression and impending destruction, it should enjoy the unlimited right of free trade with the other parts of the United States.

Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has been as anxious as any of us that there should be a conclusion to the legislation on that subject with which he is charged. I recognize the difficulties with which he is confronted. I want to say to him and to those with whom he is acting that whenever they are ready to present a bill of that kind which shall give to Puerto Rico a Territorial government such as Oklahoma enjoys to-day, with all the rights under that Territorial government, including free trade with this country, we will vote with him upon that bill without one word of discussion and without one minute's delay.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I rise to ask the Senator if he will agree as to a time when we can vote on the bill that is now pending?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir; so far as I am concerned.

Mr. FORAKER. To fix a time.

Mr. BACON. I am not authorized to speak for anybody else; but so far as I am concerned—others can speak for themselves, but I have no doubt that what I say will be agreed to—we will be more than happy if the Senator will fix just as early a day to vote on the bill as is compatible with a reasonable examination of the many amendments.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest, in view of what the Senator from Georgia has said, that we fix a time to vote on these bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us get through the vote on the bill now pending before we agree upon a time to vote on any other bill.

Mr. FORAKER. If there is objection, of course I can not do more than to say that I am ready to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not find any objection.

Mr. FORAKER. And to say that I was going to suggest an early day for taking a vote and would ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will not find any objection unless it comes from his side of the Chamber. There may be objection to fixing a time for a vote that will not give opportunity to examine the very many amendments which the Senator himself is proposing. The bill has not yet been presented in the shape in which his own committee desires it to be presented to the Senate, but I will assure the Senator that just so soon as he gets the bill in shape, and says, Here is the bill our committee wants, and just so soon as he gives opportunity for a very few days of consideration of those various amendments, we will not only be ready, but anxious that it may be acted upon, because we are disturbed, if the Senator will permit me, by the whisperings which are going around that it is not the intention of the dominant party to bring to a vote a bill which shall settle the question of the tariff relations between Puerto Rico and the other parts of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to relieve the Senator of the disturbance to which he refers by assuring him that I have not heard anything of that kind on this side of the Chamber. While I would not, of course, ask any Senator to vote until he has had a full opportunity to examine all of the many amendments referred to, yet at an early day I shall ask, acting upon the suggestion which the Senator from Georgia makes, that a date be fixed for a vote.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will find very prompt and cordial cooperation on this side of the Chamber. Mr. President, I must apologize to the Senate. I rose thinking I would probably be upon my feet five or ten minutes. I have been led, I fear, to trespass unduly upon its time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this is the first time in nineteen years' service upon the Committee on Appropriations and upon conference committees that I have been compelled to decline to sign a conference report. I did it because the report agreed upon reversed the entire policy which had been outlined in the bill as passed by the Senate, and, in my judgment, is morally, politically, and from a Christian standpoint wrong, in violation of the plighted faith and solemn pledges of the United States, and in violation of the noblest and first and best impulses of the whole Republican party.

The bill as passed by the Senate appropriated a specific sum of money for the relief of Puerto Rico, leaving in the clause that that sum of money had been collected from duties imposed upon articles imported from Puerto Rico. We stated then, and the Senate so held, that that mere description amounted to nothing. There the Senate bill stopped. I voted for it. I believed that there was an emergency which justified the expenditure.

Then the bill went into conference, and it comes back to us wholly changed. Not only does this bill appropriate the specific sum named in the amended bill as it passed the Senate, but it also appropriates an indefinite sum for an indefinite time to come, and necessarily and unavoidably and directly imposes upon all articles imported from Puerto Rico for all time to come, until there shall be further legislation, all the duties imposed by the Dingley tariff act. It is a new declaration, that the Dingley tariff duties shall be continued indefinitely upon all articles imported from Puerto Rico, and under this proposed law, if no additional legislation is enacted, the Dingley tariff duties will be imposed and collected for the remainder of this year and for the remainder of the time that Puerto Rico may remain in the condition in which she is now.

This is practically a declaration by the Senate of the United States of an imposition of the Dingley tariff duties upon Puerto Rican imports, because we authorize by this bill the continued collection of those duties upon imported products from Puerto Rico and thereby affirm, confirm, and carry out the Dingley tariff law by direct action.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose the House had concurred in the Senate amendments to the House bill; what effect would that have had upon the Dingley tariff law?

Mr. COCKRELL. None on earth.

Mr. SPOONER. None on earth?

Mr. COCKRELL. None on earth so far as that is concerned—so far as continuing it is concerned. It would not have been any declaration in favor of it. It would have been no recognition of the right to continue it—none on earth. It would not have modified the Dingley tariff law, so far as that is concerned, but it would not have been a declaration in continuance of it, a Congressional continuance of it, as this bill is.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, he will agree that the Dingley tariff law would have remained in force just the same until changed by Congress. The only difference, then, between the bill as it comes to the Senate now and as it was when we sent it back would have been that the duties collected under the Dingley law upon products coming in from Puerto Rico would have gone into our Treasury, while under this amendment they are to go to the Puerto Ricans. That is the difference, and the only difference.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, it is far different from that. The Senator may ease his conscience by that makeshift, by resort to the supposition that the Puerto Rican people are to be the beneficiaries of these tariff duties which are to be collected. They are not. Take off the duties from articles imported from Puerto Rico, admit them free of duty, and then the producers of those articles in Puerto Rico would get the benefit of it in the increased price which they would get for their products.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator from Missouri be good enough to permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Do I understand the Senator's apprehension to be that the bill is for the purpose of continuing in force indefinitely the rates fixed by the Dingley law?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a recognition of it beyond any question.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. A recognition?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly it is; a Congressional recognition.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And a continuance of it in force?

Mr. COCKRELL. A Congressional recognition of the continuance of that.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will ask the Senator if he is not unduly apprehensive? He is a member of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico. As such member does he not know that that committee has reported to the Senate a bill which is now pending here and which has for its purpose at least a very substantial reduction of the Dingley rates?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, I know that, and I know other things about that matter; and if the Senator will just be patient I will go over them before we get through with this subject. That is not the only little secret there is in the Foraker bill, as I will show before I get through.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. But the fact is that that bill seeks a very substantial reduction of the Dingley rates.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seeks a great many things.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It seeks that one thing.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no question about that, as a matter of course. The House bill as it came to us sought to impose 25 per cent. I believe that in the Foraker bill it has been brought down to 15 per cent, but I will analyze both of those measures before I get through.

Mr. TILLMAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact——

Mr. COCKRELL. Please let me finish.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to call the Senator's attention to an error which he has just made. He said the House bill came here with duties of 25 per cent, whereas the House could not pass a bill providing for 25 per cent, and they had to reduce it to 15 per cent in order to get support for the measure.

Mr. COCKRELL. I knew the rate was discussed there, but I had forgotten that the House changed it.

Mr. President, I want to go back to first principles. I am opposed to these impositions of duties upon products imported from Puerto Rico for the reasons I have stated. Now, I want to go into some other facts. I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of War, dated the 29th day of November, 1899. I want to read an extract from this report of the Secretary of War. This is not Democratic authority. I am not discussing this question from a Democratic or Republican standpoint, but from the standpoint of right, of justice, of patriotism, and of the very best interests of the people of the United States and of Puerto Rico. I will read from the report of the Secretary of War. Speaking of the island, he says——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. From what page is the Senator about to read?

Mr. COCKRELL. Page 32, third subdivision.

The question of the economic treatment of the island underlies all the others. If the people are prosperous and have an abundance of the necessities of life, they will with justice be easily governed, and will with patience be easily educated. If they are left in hunger and hopeless poverty, they will be discontented, intractable, and mutinous. The principal difficulty now in the island of Puerto Rico is that the transfer of the island from Spain to the United States has not resulted in an increase of prosperity, but in the reverse. The industry of the island is almost entirely agricultural. The people live upon the products of their own soil and upon the articles for which they exchange their surplus products abroad. Their production is in the main of coffee, sugar, and tobacco. The prosperity of the island depends upon their success in selling these products.

So long as the island was a part of the Spanish possessions there was substantially free trade with Spain and with Cuba. The total exports from Puerto Rico for the four years preceding 1897 averaged about $18,000,000, of which an average of less than one-sixth part ($2,630,000) was sold to the United States, and an average of one-half ($8,025,000) was sold to Spain and Cuba. Immediately upon the transfer of the island from Spain to the United States Spain erected a tariff barrier against the introduction of Puerto Rican products. The interests of Cuban agriculture led to the erection of a similar barrier in the tariff adopted for Cuba, so that Puerto Rico was debarred from the principal markets which she had previously enjoyed, and at the same time this country has maintained its tariff against Puerto Rican products just as it existed while the island was Spanish territory. The result is that there has been a wall built around the industry of Puerto Rico.

Even before the hurricane of August 8, 1899, two crops of tobacco lay in the warehouses of Puerto Rico, which the owners were unable to sell at prices equal to the cost of production. Their sugar shared the prevailing depression in that commodity, arising from the competition of bounty-fed beet sugar. Their coffee was practically unknown in the United States and had no market here. It is plain that it is essential to the prosperity of the island that she should receive substantially the same treatment at our hands as she received from Spain while a Spanish colony, and that the markets of the United States should be opened to her as were the markets of Spain and Cuba before the transfer of allegiance. Congress has the legal right to regulate the customs duties between the United States and Puerto Rico as it pleases, but the highest considerations of justice and good faith demand that we should not disappoint the confident expectation of sharing in our prosperity with which the people of Puerto Rico so gladly transferred their allegiance to the United States, and that we should treat the interests of this people as our own; and I wish most strongly to urge that the customs duties between Puerto Rico and the United States be removed.

That is from the report of the Secretary of War on the 29th day of November last. The commanding general and acting governor of Puerto Rico, General Davis, well known to many members of this body, after surveying the entire field over, a man of broad and liberal and generous views, reported to the Secretary of War substantially the same thing that the Secretary of War here stated, recommending that no duties be imposed upon products from Puerto Rico.

Now, I go a little further. I come to the message of the President of the United States of December 5, 1899. None of our friends can accuse the President of not being a Republican and an advocate of Republican principles and policies. He stands to-day at the head of the Republican organization, at the head of the Executive Administration of this Government, Republican in all its branches, and that he is to be the standard bearer of the Republican party in the coming political contest in November next seems absolutely certain now. I read what he said in his message to Congress, what advice and information he gave us in regard to this question. On page 49 of the pamphlet form of the message he says:

It must be borne in mind that since the cession Puerto Rico has been denied the principal markets she had long enjoyed and our tariffs have been continued against her products as when she was under Spanish sovereignty. The markets of Spain are closed to her products except upon terms to which the commerce of all nations is subjected. The island of Cuba, which used to buy her cattle and tobacco without customs duties, now imposes the same duties upon these products as from any other country entering her ports. She has therefore lost her free intercourse with Spain and Cuba without any compensating benefits in this market. Her coffee was little known and not in use by our people, and therefore there was no demand here for this, one of her chief products. The markets of the United States should be opened up to her products. Our plain duty—

I would that I could inscribe this upon the tablets of the sleeping and dreaming memories of the majority upon the opposite side of the Chamber—

Our plain duty—

No mistaking it, no evading it—

Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Puerto Rico and give her products free access to our markets.

That was the Republican doctrine on the 5th of December, 1899, proclaimed by the President of the United States, indorsing the recommendations of his Secretary of War and his commanding general in the island of Puerto Rico, and carrying out the plighted faith of this great nation to the inhabitants of Puerto Rico when they so quickly and so mildly and generously yielded to American domination there.

Mr. President, the views that I have read of the Secretary of War and of the President of the United States, not one of which has yet been repudiated, were not only their views, but they were the views of many other distinguished Republicans; and now I want to hold up before the Senate of the United States no less a distinguished personage than the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. I want to show the Senate what he thought of this matter, what he believed was the right and duty of the people of the United States and of the Senate in regard to the duties on imported articles from Puerto Rico.

I hold in my hand Senate bill No. 2264, a bill to provide a government for the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes, and I read from section 8 of that bill, presented on the 9th of January, 1900, and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico:

SEC. 8. That on and after the passage of this act all merchandise coming into the United States from the island of Puerto Rico, and all merchandise going from the United States into the island of Puerto Rico, shall be admitted into the respective ports of entry free of all tariffs, customs, and duties, all laws and parts of laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

That was the view of the distinguished Senator at that time. There was no dissenting from that principle at that time. It was not only held by so distinguished a Republican Senator as Senator FORAKER in this body, but it was also held in the House of Representatives by no less a distinguished Republican than Mr. PAYNE, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives. I hold in my hand House bill 6883, introduced in the House January 19, 1900, by Mr. PAYNE, to extend the laws relating to customs and internal revenue over the island of Puerto Rico ceded to the United States. In that bill not one solitary duty is imposed upon any article imported from Puerto Rico into the United States. Under that bill all imports from Puerto Rico into the United States would come in free of duty.

Now, here are the distinguished leaders in the Senate and the House—Senator FORAKER, January 9, and Representative PAYNE, January 19—introducing bills permitting and authorizing all the products of Puerto Rico to come into the United States free of all tariff duties of all kinds. Did not the country have a right to believe, in view of all these facts, that the Republican party had pledged itself to this course and this policy; that it had done it because it was right, because it was the duty of our Government to treat the island of Puerto Rico as kindly and humanely as Spain had done? Was it not the sentiment of the people of the United States, the sentiment of the patriots in the Senate, in the House, that we should at least permit the Puerto Ricans, who had so kindly surrendered, so submissively yielded to the authority and jurisdiction of the United States and asked to be made a part of our country, to receive the beneficent blessings and influences of our laws by the admission of their products free of all duties?

Now, here is the situation. Here this question, the freedom from all duties, was presented to the country, to the Senate, and to the House by representative men, by the head of the Republican party, by the head of the War Department, by the governor of the territory, by the Senator from Ohio and the leader of the Republican members in the House of Representatives.

But all at once some mysterious influence and power unknown to us began to operate, began to work and to ferment, and to produce results. Step by step has been taken until now it is proposed by this bill that we shall permit by legislative sanction a violation of what the President and the Secretary of War have recommended, and what has been sanctioned by the Senator from Ohio and the leader of the Republicans in the House.

Now, my Republican friends, I want to appeal to you as honest, patriotic citizens, Do you intend to place your President in the position of stultifying himself by compelling him to sign this bill? In his message when legislation was here recommended he has told you that he had no power to suspend or relieve American products from the payment of import duties, but he had to some extent relieved the Puerto Ricans from the payment of some duties upon articles imported into their country from the United States.

Now, Mr. President, in view of this entire record, in view of the principles involved in this matter, I can not vote for this conference report. I shall take pleasure in recording my vote "nay" against the whole measure now, although I was heartily in favor of the appropriation of the sum that was defined in the bill, which was not contingent and did not control the future.

Mr. President, I desire to read in conclusion the resolutions passed by a very distinguished body, and I will say a body largely Republican, the Chamber of Commerce of the great State of New York, at the monthly meeting held Thursday, March 1. They are as follows:

Whereas in accepting the cession of the island of Puerto Rico, and in assuming the control of the destinies of this new territory, the people of the United States have undertaken a solemn duty and obligation toward the people of that island, and are in good faith bound to recognize the welfare and the interests of its inhabitants as identical in every particular with our own; and

Whereas the President of the United States in his message to Congress unequivocally declares that the markets of the United States should be opened to Puerto Rico's products, and that our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariffs between the United States and Puerto Rico, and to give to her products free access to our markets; and

Whereas the Secretary of War, in his last report to the President, states that the highest considerations of justice and good faith demand that we should not disappoint the confident expectation of sharing in our prosperity with which the people of Puerto Rico so gladly transferred their allegiance to the United States, and that we should treat the interests of this people as our own, and should remove the customs duties between Puerto Rico and the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York records its emphatic opinion that every consideration of honor, justice, and humanity demands that trade between the United States and the island of Puerto Rico shall be unrestricted by any customs duties whatever; and be it further

Resolved, That early and prompt action should be taken by the Congress to redeem the good faith and the implied pledges of this nation as sponsor for the future welfare of Puerto Rico.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in respect to the pending bill. Having voted to ratify the treaty with Spain, believing as I did that that was a proper thing to do, believing still to-day that that was the right and proper thing to do, it only emphasizes to my mind the impropriety on the part of this Government, after having thus obtained possession and control of that territory, Puerto Rico, and those people inhabiting the island, that we should treat them as aliens, as strangers, and worse than the people who live in any one of our Territories.

There can be no doubt about the question as to what is right and fair. Suppose you say technically it is true; that ex proprio vigore the Constitution does not go there because the flag does; suppose you grant that as a matter of truth, as a matter of abstract right, yet the conscience of the people of the United States does not adopt and will not agree to that view. Our people do not believe that the people in Puerto Rico should be treated in this way. I do not believe that any man, when it comes down to a matter of justice and right, believes that the Puerto Ricans ought to be taxed any more than the people of Louisiana or Florida upon their products, exported or imported.

Suppose you were to undertake to put a tax upon the sugar that is raised in Louisiana and brought into New York or some other State. It would be just as fair, just as honest as a tax put upon any product raised in the island of Puerto Rico. It is immaterial whether you have the abstract right now by law to require those people to pay 15 per cent of the Dingley tariff rates on the products brought from there to this country. When those people were incorporated as a part of the United States it followed that we should treat them justly and fairly and not discriminate against them in such a way as to destroy and to ruin their enterprises and their business there in that part of our own territory.

I listened some days ago to the discussion of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], in which he showed very clearly that the people of Puerto Rico who lost the tax would not get the benefit of this money provided by this bill if paid back to those who nominally paid the duties on goods brought from Puerto Rico, because those who produced the exported property received less to the extent of the tax than the property was fairly worth, and yet such producer would not get the money. I believed all the way long that this money that we were to give back for the purpose of relieving their immediate necessities should be put plainly and flatly upon the ground of a gratuity. I never have thought that it was proper or right to say we gave it back because it represented the amount of dollars and cents that had been extracted from them under this tariff. The fact is that if it was wrong to collect these dues, we should wipe that out entirely and hand back the whole sum, not as a matter of gratuity, a matter of kindness, a matter of grace, but a matter of absolute justice. Yet it should be paid to those who really lost it—the producers.

We have been appealed to here time and again. The argument has been that those people had greatly suffered by reason of the storm that prevailed there and for that reason we ought to give them something out of our abundance as matter of charity. Giving them this is one way to put it, but not the way this bill puts it, and the same moment we return this money so wrongfully collected we ought to wipe from the statute book or take from the United States the right to collect any part of any tariff there. I say it is immaterial to me whether or not technically we have a right to collect it or not, common fairness forbids it. It is wrong, and we should here and now emphasize our objection to the collection of any part of any duty from any goods either coming from Puerto Rico or going there. We can never explain that it is right to claim Puerto Rico as part of our possessions and subject to our control and at the same time deny them the rights of the meanest citizens of our Territories.

There can not be one law for one part of our land and another law for another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLEN and Mr. ALLISON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word or two in defense of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the discussion of the conference report may continue.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Chair for that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it points a moral and adorns a tale as well. Here we have an appropriation of money to relieve the present situation and condition of the people of Puerto Rico, and yet Senators occupy time on the other side—my good friend from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] not very much time—in insisting that we shall proceed to deal with every question relating to Puerto Rico, and without delay, when it is well known by all in this Chamber that those in the majority, having the control of the order of business here, agreed with the President of the United States, with the Secretary of War, and those in charge of the administration of the affairs of Puerto Rico that the situation there is so exigent that the bill looking to dealing with every question involved in Puerto Rico shall stand in the forefront of the business of the Senate. It has been the order of business, if I remember rightly, for more than two weeks, and it has been taken up day by day here.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] in charge of that bill rose in his place a few minutes ago and asked Senators on the other side to fix a day when every question involved in the bill just now laid aside temporarily might be disposed of, including all the questions respecting tariff, internal revenue, civil government, and all the details now in that bill; and no one of them can get out of that bill except by a majority vote in this Chamber. Now, what those on this side of the Chamber desire to do, so far as I know, is to go on with the details of that bill and ascertain the best judgment of the majority of this Chamber upon every detail. But all Senators on the other side and on this side know that it is a bill of details and that it involves many questions that are not to be settled by haphazard and perfunctory statements respecting free trade.

The situation as respects the island of Puerto Rico, its productions, and its trade relations to the United States requires the most careful consideration. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] says, "Let us have free trade with Puerto Rico." Very well; but in making up an arrangement with regard to the trade with Puerto Rico we must take into consideration the relations of the productions of Puerto Rico with the productions of other parts of our country, assuming Puerto Rico now to be a part of our country.

The Senator from Georgia read a few days ago a statement made at a public meeting in the city of San Juan whereby they desired to shift this question of taxation to internal revenue wholly, and suggested that we should apply there our internal-revenue laws; that we should collect taxes in Puerto Rico from distilled spirits and tobacco and the other specific articles that come within the purview of our internal-revenue laws. I submit that that alternative is not a wise one to apply at this time, nor is it one that will yield revenue sufficient to carry on the government which is provided for in the Territorial bill now upon our table and now being considered.

Therefore it is that when we take up the question of our relations with the island of Puerto Rico, we must see whether or not we are to place the products of Puerto Rico, as respects rum and tobacco, upon the same basis that we apply to other Territories of the United States without at the same time placing an obstacle in the way of collecting the necessary revenue in our own country.

I take it there is not a Senator on this floor who proposes to destroy our internal-revenue system, as applied to distilled spirit in all its forms and as applied to tobacco in all its forms. Here are a people who have lived for three or four hundred years without the kind of impositions that we would have to put upon them, without their having any ability to pay, as all the statements and reports disclose the fact that the property of the island of Puerto Rico is in the hands of a few people and that the great body of the people there are in poverty practically. They have their system of use as respects the articles I have named; yet I have not heard in this debate a single suggestion that we should take up the question of the taxation of Puerto Rico, internal and external, and deal with it as Senators having the responsibility of caring for the people of Puerto Rico and caring for the revenues of the United States.

I do not disagree with Senators on the other side, and I know of no Senator on this side who does not agree that we must adjust our relations with the island which by the accident of war we have taken into our possession in such way as to make those people prosperous, and thereby contribute their portion of their prosperity to our prosperity. We must deal with them generously. We must deal with them in such a way as will enable them, according to their condition and situation, to support the dense population upon that island. After hearing these arguments you would suppose that we could in five minutes prepare a law governing that territory of ours, unique in its nature, special in its interests, and special in its productions, by simply spreading a blanket over it, so far as our laws prevailing in this country are concerned.

I submit to Senators that the questions in detail as respects those people are questions which deserve consideration, and that they ought to have consideration now. We are obliged to make such laws here as will provide a revenue for the support of that government in the main, a revenue which will not oppress those people, but a revenue that can be easily collected for the purposes of their local government. I venture the prediction that no laws we will pass at the present session or within a year or two will be sufficient to maintain the government which we propose to set up and establish there. It is as inevitable to my mind as that two and two make four that there will be a deficit in the support of the government which we are about to establish, no matter what system of revenue we provide for them.

Mr. MORGAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. Suppose we should tax the vast amount of mortgage indebtedness that is there. We are informed that there is a great amount of mortgage indebtedness hanging over Puerto Rico. Suppose we should impose either a specific tax or an income tax upon it, would not that support the government of the island?

Mr. ALLISON. I believe there is a mortgage indebtedness upon a large portion of the property. How large that debt is or where it is held I do not know. This is the first suggestion I have heard made that we shall enact a provision of law which will specifically destroy that debt in the hands of those who may hold it. I do not believe that that will restore the prosperity of Puerto Rico. I believe that what we want to do is to so adjust those affairs as to establish the credit of Puerto Rico in such way as that they can create for the time being more debt, and that we may provide for them roads and means of conveyance. But I do not wish to enter into that discussion at all.

I rose only to call attention to these questions for the purpose of showing that we ought to dispose of this measure and then go on immediately with the measure that is under consideration as the unfinished business. I will assure the Senator from Georgia that he need not be disturbed concerning what he calls differences on this side of the Chamber. Whatever those differences may be as respects details, one thing is certain, that we will go on and deal with this question and be content, as we must be, with the majority of the votes in this Chamber.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say just one word more. We have enlarged the uses to which this money may be applied. That was consented to for two reasons by the Senate conferees. First, most of the speeches made on the other side of the Chamber insisted that because we limited the expenditure to governmental purposes they were indifferent to it, and they wanted an opportunity to vote such relief as was absolutely necessary to the people in Puerto Rico who have not the ability and the means to support themselves. That very discussion on the other side of the Chamber threw a doubt, as the Senator from Missouri will agree with me, upon the phraseology which we had employed. Therefore it might be said that as it had been stated in the debate in this Chamber over and over again that no part of this money could be used to furnish seed to the farmers, or used for the purpose of reinvigorating and renovating temporarily the soil, or for the purchase of implements, etc., to enable those people to continue their agricultural operations during the present spring, we ought to so enlarge it that General Davis, in command there, would so exert his power and so utilize this money as to put the people of Puerto Rico at work.

I have in my drawer here, but I will not stop to read it, a statement from him that what he needed was an opportunity to put the people at work there in order that they might earn their own living for the next ninety days, and that if they had such an opportunity, they would be self-sustaining thereafter. So we enlarged the uses to which this money may be applied, as I have stated.

I submit to my friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who disagreed to the conference report, that it does not change in the slightest degree the law as it now exists, nor does it in any degree legislate at all. In all that we did in the Senate we impliedly provided—not by express statute—that the customs duties should continue to be collected, because we did not undertake to modify or repeal the provisions of the Dingley Act. Therefore that law is to continue in force until further legislation by Congress. That is not changed at all by the House provision to which we finally assented; but, on the other hand, it distinctly states that these appropriations shall be made under existing law; and the moment the law is changed this appropriation ceases.

I can not for the life of me see—and I should be glad to learn, and I tried to learn, from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]—what difference there can be in appropriating a sum of money which has already been paid into the Treasury, or which may hereafter be paid into the Treasury, if we establish the principle, which the bill as agreed to by the Senate did establish, that the receipts from customs collected from the island of Puerto Rico put into our Treasury should be restored to those people. So I see no difference in principle in the bill as it stands upon the report of the conference committee and the bill as it was amended in the Senate.

All I desire now is, if we are in earnest in endeavoring to relieve those people from the situation in which they are placed and to start them on the pathway of improvement in the island, that we shall pass this bill to-day and then take up the bill of the Senator from Ohio and go on with it until that bill becomes a law as well as this bill.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BERRY. When the House bill was before the committee the Senator thought it important to change that bill so as not to dispose of the customs revenues received hereafter. Now, I ask the Senator if he himself thought it important that that provision should go in and voted to put it in why he has yielded that proposition to the House? If he wanted to have the bill passed, why did he not insist upon passing it with that amendment and have the matter concluded?

Mr. ALLISON. That, Mr. President, of course is a very proper question for the Senator to ask, but it was suggested in the committee of conference, and I suppose the Senator in making this inquiry wants to know what happened in the committee——

Mr. BERRY. Not necessarily. I only wanted to know why the Senator yielded to the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. It was suggested in the committee that we should make this appropriation specific, so far as possible, and that there would be no objection to making a specific appropriation, so far as the amount collected had been ascertained; and, as a member of the committee, desiring, as I always do and as members of such committees generally do, to secure harmony in the committee, I was perfectly willing to appropriate a specific sum, so as not to delay the final passage of the bill, and then at another time appropriate another specific sum, but there was no principle involved in it, or it did not occur to me that there was a principle involved in it.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me one more question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Does not the Senator believe that the specific proposition to appropriate the revenues hereafter received from customs duties recognizes that the Dingley law shall continue and remain in force and the right to impose taxes therein?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not; no more than the original bill did. They both recognize the Dingley law as in force, and that we shall continue to collect revenue under it.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will permit me, the bill as passed by the Senate was a simple disposition of the money already received; which was given back to those people, thereby recognizing, as I conceive, that we had no right originally to collect it—that is, no right in morals, whatever the law might have been. The Senate committee, recognizing that, when the House bill was pending here confined it to the amount we had already collected, and struck out the House provision that we should refund the duties hereafter collected. Now, the Senator from Iowa has, without a struggle or without coming back to the Senate for instructions, after having put that amendment on the bill, yielded to the House members of the conference committee, thereby, as I believe, meaning to recognize the right and the principle that we impose a tax upon the people of one of the Territories of this Government.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator states that he favored the original proposition because it returned the money we had collected.

Mr. BERRY. Wrongfully.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose this conference report provided for the return of all the money that had been collected up to this day at 12 o'clock noon, would the Senator vote for it?

Mr. BERRY. That is a very different proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. But let me ask the Senator this question: If we had collected up to 12 o'clock to-day $50,000 from those people under our tariff laws; if he was in favor of returning this $2,000,000, would he be in favor of returning the $50,000?

Mr. BERRY. I would be in favor of returning every dollar we had collected immorally, if not illegally, but I would not put a provision in a bill which recognized the right to still collect duties from those people when we had no authority to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I understand the Senator to say that he would now vote to refund all the revenues collected up to noon to-day?

Mr. BERRY. And then stop collecting any more. That is exactly what I would want to do.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, I know you do; but you want to do that without doing anything else. This is not a bill for Puerto Rico or its government, but an appropriation bill. The Senator now says he would be willing to vote to return all we had collected up to noon to-day; and if it were to-morrow, he would be willing to vote to return all we collected up to noon to-morrow; and so every day we should be refunding to those people the duties which would be collected. The conferees believed that it was an easier way and a more simple method to provide in this bill for the return of all the duties which have been collected up to date and all that may be collected for ten or fifteen days or two months during the pendency of the Puerto Rican bill.

It is a distinction without a difference; it is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee; and the sooner we quit debating this question the sooner we shall get to the business of Puerto Rico.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I only want to say a word or two more, and then I shall yield.

The Senator says that there is no difference between these propositions; that it is only the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. It is remarkable that the Senator did not think that way three or four days ago when he voted to put in the House bill the Senate amendment. The Senator may say that he has changed his mind; he may be like the President was when he said it was our "plain duty" to take off these taxes from the people of Puerto Rico. He has a right to change his mind, but it seems strange to me that the Senator, who had that amendment put upon the bill, who insisted upon having it put on, and thought it important then to do so, should now come in three days afterwards and say it is immaterial and there is no more difference between the one proposition and the other than the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. President, this whole proposition is under the pretext of hurrying to relieve those people, when a bill could have been passed purely to appropriate this two million and odd thousand dollars days and days ago if they had desired to do so and if they had been anxious to extend that relief. On the contrary, they are attempting to put in this bill indirectly what some of the members on the other side of the Chamber are unwilling to vote for directly.

The Senator talks about the delay of the Puerto Rican bill in charge of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. He knows that that Senator has not yet got his bill perfected in such a way that he is willing to have it passed. The responsibility for the failure of its passage rests not with us, but upon the majority in this Chamber.

Mr. FORAKER. My suggestion was to fix a time when the vote could be taken on the bill and all pending amendments.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Senator if the bill is in the shape he wants to have it when the vote is to be taken upon it?

Mr. FORAKER. Pretty nearly.

Mr. BERRY. Pretty nearly.

Mr. FORAKER. It is as nearly ready as any bill in the Senate ever is when it is asked that a time be fixed to vote upon it.

Mr. BERRY. But it is not in such a shape that the Senator is willing to put it upon its passage, as I understand him.

Mr. FORAKER. It is usual for a number of amendments to be pending when we fix a time to vote on a bill. What I wanted to do was to fix a time when the vote could be taken on the bill and all the pending amendments. I will call that up later, when the pending matter is concluded.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I wish to say that it is not usual to fix a time for a vote upon a bill. The usual practice is to fix a time when the debate upon a bill shall be concluded.

While I am upon my feet I want to repel the insinuation of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that the failure to vote on the bill in charge of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] rests with this side of the Senate Chamber. The reason why the vote has not been had on the bill of the Senator from Ohio is because the majority have not been ready to take the vote; they are not now ready to take it, and they have not been ready a single day from the time the bill was first taken up until now. When, days ago, some of us on this side of the Chamber were asking when there would be a vote on that bill, we were told that some Senators wished to make speeches hereafter. The bill has been delayed and delayed by the majority from day to day and from time to time to accomplish a purpose of their own. It has not been delayed one hour by the action of the minority in this Chamber.

Mr. FORAKER. Nothing has been said by myself, I am sure the Senator will concede, indicating that there has been any delay by his side of the Chamber.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Of course not.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not found any fault with anybody.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Of course not. I was not criticising the Senator from Ohio, but I was criticising the Senator from Iowa, who distinctly insinuated that the reason the vote could not be had was because unanimous consent could not be obtained.

Mr. FORAKER. I simply suggested a moment ago that a time might be fixed when the vote may be taken upon the bill and amendments—not at this time. I will call that up later.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ALLEN. I had the floor and addressed the Chair before the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] or the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] or the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] were recognized, and, under the rules, I was entitled to recognition.

Mr. HALE. I make no question with the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Nebraska desires to proceed, I hope he will do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not aware that the Senator from Nebraska had addressed the Chair.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to say that I was not aware that the Senator from Nebraska had addressed the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not mean the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I want to say, in justice to myself, that I did not know the Senator from Nebraska had the floor. I should not have interfered with him if I had the slightest idea he wished to say anything; but the Senator from Iowa had just raised a question upon which I had been trying to get the floor for fifteen minutes to reply to a remark made by that Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I have nothing to say about that.

Mr. HALE. I am entirely willing the Senator from Nebraska should go on.

Mr. ALLEN. I have been on the floor for some time.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. No; let the Senator from Maine proceed. I will yield.

Mr. HALE. No; I will follow the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BACON. Allow me one moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] is recognized.

Mr. BACON. I merely want to say a word.

Mr. ALLEN. I yield temporarily to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I am informed by a Senator on the floor that a statement made by me in the course of the remarks I submitted to the Senate may be construed into meaning that I was going to vote for the conference report. If any such language fell from me, I am sure what I said in the argument will indicate my entire opposition to it. What I intended to say, and what I will ask permission to insert in the RECORD, if the report shall not show it, is that I would vote for the bill, and did vote for the bill as it was in the Senate and went from the Senate, but under no circumstances would I vote to agree to the conference report.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall be more than pleased to yield to the senior Senator from Maine if he desires the floor.

Mr. HALE. No; let the Senator go on.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, this measure was before the Senate a few days ago, and it was advocated and pressed by our Republican friends on the ground that it was a charity which ought to be extended to the suffering people of Puerto Rico. It was placed wholly upon that ground. It was said that the people of Puerto Rico were storm stricken; that great devastation had taken place in the island; and that they were in a condition requiring Congress to speedily and promptly extend them some aid. It was not claimed at that time by our friends on the other side of the Chamber, what I believe to be really the truth of the matter, that it is a measure to enable the Republican party to escape from an unpleasant dilemma.

It now develops, Mr. President, that such is its purpose; that it is being advocated upon one ground and for one reason, while the real reason actuating its advocacy and passage has been obscured as far as possible from the American people.

I do not believe there was an instance in the history of this country where a sum of money has been placed at the disposal of the President of the United States without requiring him to account for it before we voted in the Fifty-fifth Congress $50,000,000 to the President to prepare the country for defense against Spanish invasion. I voted for that measure, and I rejoice now that I did so, for I had the utmost confidence in the integrity of the President, as I have now, and believed that that was a wise and a patriotic thing to do. But that was exceptional, Mr. President; that was at a time when we knew that war would be declared within a very few days at most.

It was a thing that occurs very rarely in the history of a nation; it was a bad precedent; but here we propose to place a sum of money at the disposal of the Chief Executive of the nation in a time of profound peace, without requiring him to account for its distribution or without directing the methods of its distribution. It is to be wholly in his hands, and much, Mr. President, as I regard the President of the United States, highly as I regard him, much as I believe in his integrity—and I do believe in it—there is no man who occupies or who will ever occupy or ever has occupied the office of Chief Executive of this nation who ought to be intrusted with this power except in those rare cases such as the one I have mentioned.

But one of the vices of this bill, and its chief vice, is that it is to be continuing in its effect. We are not only to return to the Puerto Ricans—who are now our fellow-citizens to all intents and purposes except they are debarred from the elective franchise—$2,095,000; but by the terms of this bill we are to continue to pass over to them from time to time the money we may collect for an indefinite period; it may be one year, two years, ten years, or fifty years, for this portion of this bill is permanent in its character and not merely tentative.

Mr. President, in my judgment that is wrong. It is wrong in principle; it sets a bad precedent for the future. It will be pointed out, no doubt, in after years by those who are to succeed us as a precedent to be followed; and it is doing no injustice to any President of the United States or any gentleman who may be President to say that it is a precedent that Congress ought not to encourage.

I voted for this measure upon the supposition that it was a charitable measure. I did not want our friends to stand here and say to the country that the people of Puerto Rico were suffering for something to eat and something to wear and that we refused to relieve them. I did not want to be guilty of inhumanity, and I will not be, consciously at least; but when we analyze the situation as it is developed from day to day we discover that the Republican ship is leaking and is about to founder, that it is hedged in between a Puerto Rican tariff on the one hand and a United States tariff or a Dingley law upon the other, and that it must be rescued and repaired.

But a few days ago a measure appeared elsewhere in accordance with the recommendation of the President in his annual message, a free-trade measure, a measure that practically extended the Constitution and all of its provisions over the island of Puerto Rico and its inhabitants; and it was hailed with great acclaim by those who introduced it and by those who were to pass it. Like Blind Tom, they cheered their own act. A short time after that silence fell upon the Republicans. There were whispered gatherings and hurried gatherings and hurried consultations; and within a short time another measure appeared at that same place, imposing a duty of 25 per cent of the Dingley tariff law; and that was to be a permanent measure. It was not to be repealed the next day or the next week or the next year; but it was to establish a permanent policy between the United States and the people of Puerto Rico. Then there burst upon the country throughout its length and breadth a storm of indignation from Republicans and from all other classes of the people against the proposed imposition of a tariff upon those people. So, from day to day, we have been passing along here waiting for developments. The bill of which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has charge has been permitted to drift like a rudderless ship. It is to drift along, Mr. President, for weeks yet, until the temper of the American people can be ascertained and until the road out of this difficulty is discovered.

Mr. President, I think the Republican party, as a political organization in its machinery, is the greatest party known in the history of the world. There never was a political organization in its compactness, in its discipline, equal to it. Whatever the head of that party thinks, it makes no difference who he may be, every man rolls his eyes to heaven, and says "Amen;" he bows his own convictions and his own will in subordination to the wishes of the chief. That party is like a vast and well-disciplined army, and it is a powerful political machine. There is not that cohesion in party politics either among Democrats or among the members of the party to which I owe allegiance.

But a day or two ago we were told that the Senate was to listen to the fervid eloquence of the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and that the intelligence of the Senate was to be entertained by his exposition of the Constitution and constitutional principles. To-day was the time set apart; and yet the Senator from Indiana does not appear upon the scene. The newspapers have announced that his amendment to the Puerto Rican bill is to be withdrawn, or it is to sleep the eternal sleep; that the bill is to be permitted to drift along from time to time, and that the policy, after all, is to have a tariff wall between Puerto Rico and the United States.

Mr. President, the bill the people are now thinking about, a bill that was railroaded through another branch of this Government so speedily, will not be taken up or considered here. The honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who, in my mind, is the greatest political general of the age and who in the domain of politics compares favorably with Napoleon as a military chieftain, never will permit that bill to see daylight in this Chamber. It is doomed, Mr. President. A road out of the difficulty must be found; and how is it to be found? We have an average tariff duty of 50 per cent against the Puerto Ricans. Everything they ship to this country must pay an average duty of 50 per cent under the existing law. Everything we ship there, with certain exceptions, must also pay an average duty of 50 per cent.

What general would disturb a situation of that kind and reduce it to 25 or 15 per cent? The status quo is to prevail. It is to go on until after the election. The Republican party to-day in both branches of Congress is looking more to the election than it is to the interests of the country. This is to continue until after the election; and we are informed the question is now before the Supreme Court, or will be shortly after the ides of November, after the people have been deceived again, if they can be deceived—the Supreme Court will reaffirm the doctrine of the Dred Scott case, will reaffirm that which I believe no man conscientiously disbelieves, that the Constitution by its own operation extends to the island of Puerto Rico and that the citizens of that island are constitutionally entitled to free trade with us. But the danger point will then have been passed, and the Moses of the party will have led the children of Israel out of the wilderness.

Mr. President, according to the press dispatches this morning the Republican party is more concerned to-day in raising a campaign fund for the election of 1900 than in anything else. We are told that $30,000,000 is to be wrung by the Republican party from the trusts; that in 1896 they paid $18,000,000 into the funds of that organization, and that in 1900 they are to pay $30,000,000; and the $30,000,000 is to be taken by that party to violate the ballot box and to corrupt weak voters, if they can be corrupted, into voting that ticket. The press is particular, Mr. President; it names the gentlemen who are now engaged in collecting this revenue. I shall not call their names. They are well known in the political history of the country.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. To what press does the Senator refer?

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will read the morning papers he will discover.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is a little general. I read a portion of the morning press, and I have not seen any such statement.

Mr. ALLEN. I will send the statement to the Senator, if he has not seen it and wants to see it. I do not care to be any more specific at this time. I will send out and buy a paper and give the Senator a marked copy, if he desires.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from Nebraska is usually so precise and accurate in his information that I did not suppose my inquiry would lead to any embarrassment. I supposed he had the information before him.

Mr. ALLEN. It is no embarrassment whatever, Mr. President—not the slightest—and the accuracy of my information is sufficient for my purposes at all times.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Just so the Senator keeps the information to himself——

Mr. ALLEN. No. My information has guided me for fifty-three years, and it will guide me the remainder of the time allotted me upon earth. I shall not ask the Senator from Indiana whether he approves or disapproves of my information or my conduct, and it will not concern me, either, whether he does or does not.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I rose for a polite inquiry, and I am sorry to see that the Senator is somewhat irritated.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I had no intention of irritating him.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not irritated in the slightest degree, but I simply wanted to convey to the Senator from Indiana, as politely as I could, the intimation that his assumed superiority of knowledge and information was not acceptable to me. I say "assumed." Perhaps I had better withdraw the word "assumed."

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I confess my humility when I ask the distinguished Senator for information.

Mr. ALLEN. Perhaps I should withdraw the word "assumed" and say the real superiority. So I will send the paper to the Senator if he expresses a desire to see it. This is the report. It is current. Everybody, I presume, has read it but the Senator from Indiana, and I presume he is in a situation where he does not need to read that fact in the press. I think he is in the sanctum sanctorum, and perhaps knows more about it than the press itself.

Mr. President, I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet, but I predict the time will never come in the history of this Congress, or before the election in November, when a measure of any kind will be introduced or pressed here to relieve the situation. Inactivity, delay, procrastination constitute the policy of the dominant party in this Chamber at the present hour. What does the bill of the Senator from Ohio have to do with this measure? Nothing. When questioned a few days ago about the adjustment of the tariff in that bill, the Senator from Ohio said to the Senate, in reply to a question that I put to him, that that question would be taken up at another time and in another measure. So we have the distinct announcement from the Senator from Ohio that the tariff question as respects the relations of the United States and Puerto Rico is not to be touched in this measure.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ALLEN. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not make any such statement as I understand the Senator from Nebraska to be attributing to me. When this bill was under consideration, if I recall correctly, the Senator offered an amendment and was proceeding to discuss it, and I did join with other Senators on the floor of the Chamber in requesting that that question go over until our bill, the one of which I am in charge, providing a civil government for Puerto Rico, and also embodying the question about the tariff, should come up for consideration, when we would have plenty of time to discuss that question. But there was no remark made by me which indicated that the question was not to be reached at all, as I now understand the Senator from Nebraska to say.

Mr. ALLEN. The RECORD will show whether the Senator is correct or whether I am correct, and I am perfectly willing to leave it to history, as already written.

Mr. FORAKER. I am quite willing to leave it there, too.

Mr. ALLEN. So, whenever the Puerto Rican bill is touched we are told by those in charge of it that the question of tariff will be settled by another measure, and whenever we turn to the leadership of the Republican party in this Chamber and ask them what they propose to do respecting the tariff, they inform us that the question is under consideration. As one distinguished Senator said here some time ago, they are pondering over it. But there is nothing tangible; nothing has been said and nothing will be said, in my humble judgment, about this measure, and the Republican party will not be smoked out into the open upon it if there is a possibility of secreting the question from the Senate and from the country.

You do not dare to bring the House measure before the Senate and put it upon a vote to-day or at any time in the future during this session of Congress. But you expect to deceive the people by the attitude you are now taking. You will go to the people and say, "We did not touch the tariff. It is true the House of Representatives hastily passed a bill. When it came to the Senate the combined wisdom of our party thought it was not advisable to put it before the Senate or to recommend it or to put it upon its passage, and we let it sleep in one of the numerous caverns around the Capitol. We did not do anything." But you will never tell them that you suffered a tariff that averages 50 per cent upon everything that is imported from and exported to Puerto Rico to remain as the law of the land.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the Senator from Nebraska to say that we will not dare, to use the language employed by him——

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir, that is my language.

Mr. FORAKER. To bring the House bill to a vote in the Senate to-day as a House bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the Senator if he will agree, on behalf of the other side, they consenting, that we may withdraw the substitute reported from our committee for the House bill and vote on the House bill before we adjourn to-day at any hour to be named?

Mr. ALLEN. I represent nobody but myself in this Chamber. I am not a Democrat, I repeat for the fifth or sixth time. I represent myself alone.

Mr. FORAKER. In view of what the Senator has said, I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw the amendment which was offered as a substitute for the House bill, and that the House bill may be brought to a vote to-day before we adjourn.

Mr. ALLEN. The 15 per cent bill?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN. I join in that request. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the tariff measure contained in the Puerto Rico bill may be separated from the bill itself and that a vote be taken upon it as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to place myself on record as joining in that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And that a vote be taken to-day.

Mr. FORAKER. I suggest at 5 o'clock, to make it more specific.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BACON. I suppose it is absolutely unheard of that unanimous consent should be requested that a committee may bring in a bill and that we shall vote on it——

Mr. ALLISON. The bill is here.

Mr. FORAKER. The bill is here now, under consideration as the unfinished business.

Mr. BACON. The committee is the one which has offered the substitute for the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Let us consent to it.

Mr. BACON. Let them put their bill in the shape in which they propose it, and we will then see whether we agree.

Mr. FORAKER. I will put it in that shape immediately.

Mr. BACON. Then do it. Everybody knows such a request is not in order now, while we are proceeding with the consideration of a conference report. As soon as we get through, we will take it up.

Mr. FORAKER. There were challenges one after another that we would not make progress toward taking a vote on the House bill.

Mr. BERRY. The bill of which you have charge.

Mr. FORAKER. The challenge of the Senator from Nebraska was explicit that we did not dare to vote to-day on the House bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I repeat it.

Mr. FORAKER. He repeats it. In response to that, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the committee amendment, which will leave the House bill pending without any amendment, and that we vote on it at 5 o'clock or at any other hour we may agree upon, so it be before we adjourn for the day.

Mr. ALLEN. In that request I join.

Mr. BERRY. I want to ask whether the House bill is before the committee and not before the Senate?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly not. It is before the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. Reported back from the committee?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BERRY. And now on the Calendar?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it now before the Senate?

Mr. FORAKER. It is before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Having been reported.

Mr. FORAKER. It is the unfinished business.

Mr. BERRY. Was not the House bill stricken out and a substitute offered for it?

Mr. FORAKER. The House bill is here with an amendment.

Mr. BERRY. I know it.

Mr. FORAKER. We proposed to strike out the House bill and insert a substitute. My request now is that we withdraw the amendment and vote on the House bill at 5 o'clock to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will fix a time which will enable us to offer amendments, say to-morrow, I am willing, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. FORAKER. I will fix any time to-morrow.

Mr. ALLEN. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. BERRY. With the right to offer amendments?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very much in favor of almost the entire frame and project of the substitute, and I am unwilling to see it withdrawn.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I will not withdraw it except only as an amendment to this bill. I will immediately bring it before the Senate when the House bill has been voted on and disposed of, so that you will then have a bill providing a civil government pure and simple. We will have the two propositions separated, and we can vote upon each.

Mr. MORGAN. I will not object on that understanding.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the bill of the Senator from Ohio is already on the Calendar, being Senate bill 2264. The House bill was placed on the Calendar and is now before the Senate. So I understand the Senator from Ohio to propose that we vote upon the House bill with amendments.

Mr. ALLEN. Withdrawing the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly; withdrawing the Senate amendment. He asks the Senate to proceed to vote upon the House bill and such amendments as may be offered to it.

Mr. BERRY. With the right to offer amendments?

Mr. ALLISON. With the right to offer amendments; and after that is done, he will call up his bill, now on the Calendar.

Mr. FORAKER. Senate bill 2264. I will move the substitute now attached to House bill 8245 as a substitute for Senate bill 2264.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me ask the Senator a question. The understanding is that we shall have a direct vote upon the House bill as it passed the House, without any Senate amendments, except such as may be offered hereafter?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir; that is what I mean. I can not prevent a Senator from offering amendments.

Mr. ALLEN. We shall have a square vote upon the question whether or not we shall tax these people?

Mr. FORAKER. We shall have a square vote on the question whether or not we concur in the House bill precisely as the House passed it.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the 15 per cent bill?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir; House bill 8245.

Mr. ALLEN. So far as I am concerned, I agree to that.

Mr. BERRY. So do I.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At what hour?

Mr. ALLEN. Any time before we adjourn.

Mr. FORAKER. That is, to-morrow?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PROCTOR. What time is it proposed to vote on the tariff bill?

Mr. FORAKER. It was proposed to vote to-day, but at the suggestion of Senators who are not prepared to vote to-day we have agreed, so far as any agreement has been arrived at, to vote to-morrow.

Mr. ALLEN. Let us vote to-morrow at 3 o'clock.

Mr. FORAKER. Three o'clock, or 4, or 5 o'clock, as Senators may agree.

Mr. ALLEN. Say before we adjourn.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us fix some hour.

Mr. HALE. Fix some hour.

Mr. PROCTOR. This is an unexpected turn of affairs. Those on this side who are opposed to this tariff had not expected that it would be taken up so early. I for one want no unreasonable delay, but as this is a surprise I must object to an agreement to vote this week. I should be willing to take a vote next week, the middle of next week; a week from to-day or Wednesday.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not ask that we delay so long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects. The matter is not before the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS. Regular order.

Mr. FORAKER. I will meet the objection of the Senator from Vermont, if Senators will agree with me. I suggest Monday. Will that meet his convenience?

Mr. PROCTOR. I should prefer a day or two later. I do that on account of some Senators on this side, rather than myself, who desire a day or two.

Mr. FORAKER. Will Tuesday do?

Mr. PROCTOR. I should not object to Wednesday.

Mr. FORAKER. Will not Tuesday do? I have a special reason, referring to my own convenience, for preferring Tuesday to Wednesday.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have consulted with one or two others who are very anxious that it shall be as late as Thursday.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Nebraska bear with me for a moment? We are making headway.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not like the Senator from Ohio to run away from the proposition and fix some other day. I should like to vote to-day. I knew somebody would rise here to object to this proposition. The Senator undertook to run a bluff, and his own party called him. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask——

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the regular order of business.

Mr. FORAKER. Having reached this stage, can we not agree to vote on Tuesday?

Mr. PROCTOR. It is an entire surprise to me and to others. I had only a minute's chance for conference, and those with whom I conferred are very anxious that it shall be postponed until Thursday. I do not feel ready, in view of what they have said, to do more than to split the difference between Tuesday and Thursday and call it Wednesday, at any hour the Senator may fix.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a minute?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont whether he hopes that the peace commission or the peace committee or the steering committee, or whatever other designation you may use in describing it, will probably come to an understanding to relieve the terrible distress that now exists on the other side, because there is a difference of opinion among them for the first time since I have been a member of this body?

Mr. PROCTOR. That is a case beyond my jurisdiction.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask, then, that we may have a vote on the House bill, the substitute being withdrawn, on Wednesday next at 3 o'clock.

Mr. ALLEN. Put it Monday.

Mr. FORAKER. I will gladly put it Monday, but the Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. ALLEN. Let us put it to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. I tried to put it to-morrow.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Ohio tried to have it fixed for to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama demands the regular order. That is the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Nebraska yields to me. We shall be making time if we can come to some agreement.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not know whether I or the Senator from Ohio was the regular order.

Mr. FORAKER. Will not the Senator——

Mr. PETTUS. I rise to a point of order. I do not think the gentlemen ought to consume the entire day of the Senate here bragging one against the other. I call for the regular order. I insist that I am entitled to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I regret that the Senator from Alabama objects to the Senator from Ohio and myself congratulating ourselves slightly.

Mr. President, I know very well when the Senator from Ohio rose and made his proposition that he was walking into fire farther than he could stand the heat. There was no purpose, and there is no purpose I repeat, upon the part of the Republican party in this Chamber to suffer that bill to come to a vote within any reasonable time. The policy is delay, delay; to see if the country can not be induced or wheedled, in one form or another, to extricate that great political organization from its present unpleasant situation.

I was glad that no Senator upon this side of the Chamber raised his voice against fixing a time to vote upon that measure. We are prepared to meet it at any time, so far as the Populist Senators are concerned. The measure is inexcusable. It is without precedent. It is in violation of the plain letter and spirit of the Constitution and in violation of every decision of the Supreme Court of the United States from the day of Ellsworth down to the present Chief Justice. Of course Senators can sport and make light of it if they see fit, but you have more to deal with than the Senate of the United States.

You have more to deal with than the people of the State of Maine, Mr. President. You will have the people of forty-five States in this Union to deal with in November next. They will speak upon this question in no uncertain sound. The objection came from the proper source. It came from the rock-ribbed Republican State of Vermont, where it would be impossible to elect any man to office except a Republican, where the Senator is in no danger from his people by making this objection. It came from the Republican side of the Chamber. It is a part and parcel of the delay instituted by that side. Every man performs his part, and I suppose that part was assigned to the Senator from whom the objection came.

Mr. President, I have said all I desire to say upon this measure.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Colorado to withdraw his motion for one moment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to vote on the conference report, if there is no desire to discuss it further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that a vote may now be taken on the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I want to make a very brief statement before the vote is taken.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me for one moment, I should be very glad——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama said he desires to make a brief statement.

Mr. ALLISON. If I can have a vote after the brief statement by the Senator from Alabama, I hope the Senator from Colorado will withdraw his motion.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator can not have a vote on the conference report to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then, if the Senator from Alabama does not care to make his statement for the moment, as I take it, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to put into the RECORD a tabulated statement by Governor Davis in regard to the mortgage debt resting upon the people of Puerto Rico, which amounts to 31,046,810.29 pesos.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PUERTO RICAN REVENUES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thought the conference report had passed from the consideration of the Senate when we went into executive session.

Mr. ALLISON. It was only passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given that the unfinished business should be temporarily laid aside until the discussion of the conference report should be completed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desired to discuss that report somewhat, and I still want to discuss it; but I am feeling somewhat unwell, and if the Senator from Iowa will agree to put it off until to-morrow, as there is no exigency involved——

Mr. ALLISON. It is important that prompt action should be had upon it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand; but I do not think the Senator will press it when I have requested him to please defer action upon it until to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, if the Senator is not able to go on.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not feel that I could do the subject the same justice now that I can to-morrow. If the Senator insists and will not have that kindness which he generally manifests toward his colleagues, of course I will have to yield.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not insist under the circumstances, and will consent that the report may go over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3419, known as the Alaska bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Alaskan bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I objected, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] yield to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN]?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I objected twice.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Alabama objected twice before consent was announced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator object once.

Mr. MORGAN. I am aware of that, Mr. President; but still I objected twice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to the request of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], the unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1996) revoking and annulling the subdivision of Pencote Heights, in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I want the regular order. I insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to this bill?

Mr. MORGAN. Of course I do. I insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I now wish to inquire of the Chair what is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill reported by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], known as the Puerto Rican bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Is any amendment pending to that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is an amendment, which will be stated to the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. What amendment is pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, section 30, line 23, after the word "also," it is proposed to insert "as to railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated.

Mr. PETTUS. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. These franchises, Mr. President, are very important matters. The bill started out with a limit to them; and the right to grant them is given to the executive council; it is not given to the legislative body under this bill. I have proposed an amendment that it shall be given to the legislative body. This amendment excepts only one or two of the important matters and leaves the others at the discretion of the council.

Mr. MORGAN. That amendment had better be passed over.

Mr. FORAKER. I think in a word I can give such an explanation as that the Senate may pass upon it now as well as at any other time.

It is true, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] says, that, according to the provision of this section, the authority to grant franchises is given to the executive council and not to the legislative body. The reason for that is that the executive council will be constantly in session, day by day, the year through, from the beginning to the end, while the legislative assembly is not allowed, by the provisions of this bill, to be in session more than sixty days in any one year.

The franchises authorized to be granted are, of course, all kinds of franchises; there is no limitation—franchises for electric lighting in municipalities, franchises for gas lighting, and every other kind of minor as well as important franchises.

The provision as it originally was put in the bill was that no franchises should be granted except only by the executive council on the approval of the governor, and also subject to the approval of the President of the United States. The amendment is to alter that in this way, that only railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises shall be subject, in addition to the approval of the governor, to the approval of the President of the United States, the idea being that as to those minor franchises, it was hardly worth while to bother the President of the United States with the duty of passing upon them, but that they might be disposed of by the executive council, subject to the approval of the governor.

I think the provision is reasonable and that the amendment ought to prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. I will ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I think all these franchises ought to be granted by the legislative body.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. CHILTON's name was called). I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. CHILTON] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. PETTUS. If in order, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FORAKER. Can that motion be made while the roll is being called?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The announcement has not yet been made.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the result of the roll call be announced.

The roll call having been completed, it appeared that the following Senators had answered to their names:

Allison,	Cockrell,	Hoitfeld,	Sewell,
Bacon,	Culberson,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Bard,	Cullom,	McBride,	Simon,
Bate,	Davis,	McComas,	Stewart,
Berry,	Deboe,	Morgan,	Sullivan,
Beveridge,	Depew,	Perkins,	Taliaferro,
Burrows,	Fairbanks,	Pettus,	Tillman,
Butler,	Foraker,	Platt, N. Y.	Turley,
Carter,	Frye,	Pritchard,	Wetmore,
Clark, Wyo.	Hanna,	Quarles,	Wolcott.
Clay,	Hawley,	Ross,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names on the roll call; not a quorum.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 23, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 22, 1900.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 22, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

The SPEAKER. The special order will come up now, and the Chair understands the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is first to be recognized. At this point it is proper for the Chair to state that each side has consumed an equal amount of time.

Mr. MOON. I understand that to be the fact, Mr. Speaker, and I understand the gentleman from California desires that all his time be taken up in closing the debate by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LOUD. This side will occupy the balance of their time in one speech.

Mr. MOON. Then I understand we proceed to take half of the time, and you consume the balance in one argument?

Mr. LOUD. That is correct.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to speak but a short time. Indeed, I had not intended to speak until an hour ago. Gentlemen upon this side desire to further participate in the discussion, but owing to the absence of my friend from Illinois I will proceed in the time that I had promised to him. I shall refer to a few features of the bill.

When the law was enacted—the law now sought to be amended—it was done clearly with a purpose. That purpose was not solely to raise revenue for the Government upon every class of postal matter. The Congress of the United States sought the establishment of a correct postal system, and in the same connection the welfare and interest, and particularly the educational interest, of the people. Congress was called upon to establish the different classes of mail matter—necessarily called upon arbitrarily to discriminate with a view to the purposes to be accomplished. They established or classified mail matter as first, second, third, and fourth class matter. They provided by law that all matter that went through the Post-Office Department, carried for the benefit of the Government and the people, should be divided into these four classes. It was thought wise, looking to the public interests, that written matter, letters and matter of that character should be classified as first-class matter; that unbound books, magazines, periodicals, etc., should be classified in the second class, bound books in the third class, and general merchandise should go to the fourth class.

It would seem proper, abstractly speaking, that each one of these classes should bear the proportionate rate of the burden, but Congress had in view another purpose. It desired to disseminate knowledge and information among the people as to public matters. It desired to give some benefit to the literary and scientific institutions of the country. This could not be done if the burden was placed equally upon all; therefore they made an arbitrary discrimination as to postage in favor of second-class matter. It was determined that no deficiency would finally exist in the operation of the postal system if first-class matter was carried at 32 cents per pound, second-class matter at 1 cent per pound, third-class matter at 8 cents, and fourth-class matter at 16 cents per pound.

It will be observed that the discrimination is very marked between the second class and other classes of matter. The first-class matter pays four times the cost of carriage under the present contract, the third-class matter pays the cost of carriage, and the fourth-class matter pays twice the cost of carriage; while the second-class matter, which includes the newspapers and unbound volumes of books and reprints, were to be carried at 1 cent per pound, or at a loss of 7 cents a pound. That is under the present contract and previous contract arrangements with the transportation companies. As a matter of fact, the transportation companies could carry it at a rate less than one-half of the present contract.

The reason for discrimination in behalf of second-class matter is very apparent. The calculation of a profit was not made upon this matter. There was no intent or purpose on the part of the Congress to make a profit on this matter, which affords the means of education to the people upon all great public questions and furnishes light to the rising generation; it was not intended to interfere with this means of education to the people. Therefore it was placed at this low rate in order that publications might go out at a low cost to the people, the Government wisely assuming that in the education of the people upon these great issues more benefit would come to the Government of the United States than if the matter were treated purely as one of revenue. The discrimination was made in the interest of education, and I do not care whether there is a loss of 7 cents or 4 cents, the Government is amply repaid in making this concession to the educational interests of this country. This much, Mr. Speaker, on the subject of the purpose and object of the Government of the United States in the matter of this discrimination.

It was also viewed from a financial standpoint. It was assumed, and correctly assumed, that if this low rate of postage were given to second-class matter, although the bulk of all the mail transportation might be along this line (the great proportion of it), the increase of revenue to be directly derived from first-class matter, which pays four times the cost of carriage, would in part compensate for the loss on the second-class matter; and so as to the fourth-class matter, and the third-class matter, which carries the bound books on the same educational idea.

So we see from the beginning the purpose of the Government in establishing the Post-Office Department, not as a mere source of revenue, but a source of instruction and education of the people of the United States. I believe that from a financial standpoint the purpose of the Congress of the United States in establishing these discriminating figures was wise; because it has occurred since the enactment of this law that notwithstanding the deficiency of sixteen millions six years ago, that deficiency in the operation of law, under the increased carriage of the first and fourth class matter, has nearly made good all the loss that has occurred on the second-class matter, and to-day the deficiency is only a little over four millions as against twelve millions two years ago. So there has been no evil effect resulting from this view of the case, considering the postal system as a whole.

It is insisted here that this deficiency would be wiped out if we change the policy upon this question. Concede, as a matter of argument, that that would be true; then I present the proposition to this House that the policy pursued by the Government in the interest of the education of the people is worth more to the people of the United States than the possible increase of $2,000,000 on second-class matter, when it is already apparent that under the present system, if continued, the deficiency will be totally wiped out in 1902, as shown by the Postmaster-General's report.

Another view of this proposition. Suppose that we enacted that provision into law, and what is the result? This second-class matter will necessarily fall by operation of law into the third class. Assume that it will be placed on the same basis of 8 cents; the contract price between this Government and the transportation companies is soon to be renewed. On the best information to be obtained from the reports of the Department, from hearings before the committee, the transportation companies to-day are receiving twice or three times the cost of actual transportation. Now, raise this matter to 8 cents, and what is the result? It is then immaterial with the transportation companies whether any contract be renewed upon this line of postal matter with the Government, because at once the publishers of these documents will seek the means of transportation cheaper than that which can be afforded by the Government of the United States.

The transportation companies will fall to 7 cents a pound when the Government is demanding 8 cents; they will carry the goods with the same expedition they do now, and the whole second-class matter will fall under the arbitrary control and dictation of the transportation companies. The Government will practically go out of the control of the second-class matter. Then, instead of the Government being enabled to make a contract that will force the transportation companies down to 3 cents, the companies under the existing law will ask nothing from this Government, but the publishers themselves will contract directly with the transportation companies, and the people will lose the difference between the amount that the companies ought to be forced to carry this matter for and the amount they will arbitrarily fix.

The Government under this arrangement and rate would lose the carriage of second-class matter, and the people would lose the excess over the 1-cent rate which the transportation companies would charge, which would amount to many millions of dollars under this item alone. That is all I desire to say upon that view of the case.

Now, this bill is one in which we can have no special feeling. We have no desire in any way to offer a word that would be inimical to the suggestion that this Government, if possible, ought to place the Post-Office Department upon a self-supporting basis. In my humble judgment it can not be done by this bill.

There are features of the bill which I do not oppose, and to which I will refer later, because I think they are wholesome. But when we look at the fact of the enormous cost of carrying these mails, the amount paid for the handling of them, the excessive number of employees in the Department, the prices paid, the establishment of new systems for the transportation of the mails in large cities, we shall find ample room to cut down expenditures and wipe out the deficit.

In this connection I may ask gentlemen on this floor, why the necessity of urging this bill? Have they forgotten that two years ago on this floor, after mature consideration, this bill met a defeat, and that following that defeat this House came to the solemn conclusion that no intelligent action could be taken upon this question by the passage of a bill relating merely to a single class of matter, but that the whole postal system needed investigation? Have they forgotten that a commission was appointed for that purpose? Where is that commission? What have they done? Why have they failed to report to this House? They have heard the proof. Their statistician has made some of the figures and given them to the public. Why not make their report to this House, that we may intelligently act on this question, instead of attempting to rush through this bill defeated in the last Congress?

A MEMBER. Have you seen that report?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I have not seen that report, nor is it possible for me to get a copy of it. But I have seen, and I have in my possession, an article prepared by a gentleman whom I understand to be the statistician of that commission—an article which goes into the question of the transportation or handling of these mails under the proof adduced before that commission; and as a net result he shows that by reducing the cost of transportation—and I shall not take time to read the figures—to a legitimate figure, which will still give a fair profit to the transportation companies, there would be an increase in the revenues of $8,825,000, and there would now be a profit to the Federal Treasury upon the whole postal system of more than $2,000,000.

Regardless of that proposition—reverting again to the original policy and theory of the law—it is clear that if the deficiency has gradually, by the increase of business in respect to first-class and fourth-class matter, been reduced from $16,000,000 in four years to $4,000,000, the statement of the Postmaster-General that in 1903 it will be wiped out under the present law is evidently correct. We can not, we must not, for the paltry saving, if any there be, wipe out the advantages given by existing law to second-class matter. We can not afford to reverse the policy of this Government from the beginning upon this great question. We can not afford, by the consideration of a paltry measure of this character, to divert the attention of Congress and the people from the extravagances and excesses and the partiality shown to private individuals dealing with the Government in the postal system.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another proposition going to this bill that I desire to discuss for a few moments. It was announced on this floor that the bill in its present shape would not exclude the publications of colleges, universities, scientific associations, historical associations, literary associations, and State bulletins. The gentleman from Michigan, the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Maine, the gentleman from Georgia—in fact, nearly every gentleman who has spoken on the opposite side of this question—asserted to this House that those publications would not be excluded. I watched with a good deal of interest the effort to draw from the chairman of this committee the admission that such would be the fact.

If I understood him correctly, he has not so admitted to this moment; yet these gentlemen, by reason of a construction which they assume to place on the bill, have perhaps satisfied themselves. Let us see. I say that under this bill they are excluded. Why? Let us look at the bill a moment. The fourth section provides—

That all periodical publications regularly issued from a known place of publication at stated intervals as frequently as four times a year, by or under the auspices of benevolent or fraternal societies, trade unions, or orders organized under the lodge system, and having a bona fide membership of not less than 1,000 persons, shall be entitled to the privilege of second-class mail matter: Provided, That such matter shall be originated and published to further the objects and purposes of such society or order.

So far as the section proceeds it is a literal copy of the act of 1894. Let us look at that act and see how much further it proceeded. Following the very language I have just read, it continues:

And that publications of strictly professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including the bulletins issued by State boards of health, shall be admitted to the mails as second-class matter.

What was the purpose? If they proposed to reenact the law—if they proposed to include the publications of historical, scientific, and literary associations, of colleges and universities—why did they halt when they came to the provision that permitted literature of insurance associations under a lodge system to pass through the mails as second-class matter?

The evident purpose was to permit the continuation of the law to the extent copied in the fourth section and to deny to the other matter, the literary matter of the country, the privileges of second class. The inclusion of the one, by a correct interpretation, is a necessary exclusion of the other.

But if gentlemen differ, and I have heard some gentlemen express a difference on that rule of construction, then there can be no doubt when we come to the seventh section of this bill. It provides that the act of Congress in regard to second-class mail matter, approved July 15, 1894, the very act which I have read, and all parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

There stands a part of the act inconsistent with the other part of the act. Here comes a bill reenacting in part the provisions of the law, and by construction removing the balance of the provision, therefore repealing the law by implication at least. But that is not all. Listen to the language. The act of Congress in regard to second-class mail matter, approved July 15, 1894, is repealed. There is a direct repeal of this provision of the law. The act is repealed by implication and it is repealed by direct language and designation. There can be no doubt left upon this question.

Now, there is no money made out of this class of matter. It is purely literary. It is intended for the education of the people. Its purpose is for the enlightenment of the citizenship of this land. Why exclude it; why deny the plain interpretation of this law?

For what reason do you discriminate in this way? Why is it that you are willing that associations of a large order—insurance companies (because they fall under that general description when they operate as a lodge)—shall have the benefit of this rate, when your historical associations, your literary associations, your scientific associations, every other instrumentality that goes to the education of the people of this country, are excluded by the express provisions of the bill? I take it that the intelligence of this House will demand that before the bill is passed it be amended in this particular, as it ought to be.

There is another feature of this bill. The act of 1894, providing the conditions upon which mail matter may be rated as second class, is literally incorporated word for word in this bill. Now, what is the reason or purpose of that? Unless a law has become obsolete—and certainly the acts of 1894 are not obsolete—you can not give any more effect to it by its mere reenactment than it originally had. This section is surplusage. I care nothing about it, whether it goes in or goes out. It may be a wholesome section; but it is insisted by gentlemen that the reason for its incorporation grows out of the fact that the Postmaster-General, in construing this law, permits to go under it certain classes of publications which they say the law by express terms excludes.

Now I come to that part of the bill upon which I do not seriously differ with gentlemen on the other side. If a publication is made for the purpose of advertising, if it adds nothing to the sum of human knowledge and intelligence, then the policy foreshadowed by this act on the part of the Government is subverted by that sort of a construction. I do not believe that particular class of matter should be given this privilege. I refer to purely advertising sheets and circulars which are distributed at a nominal cost. That was not the policy of the law. The debate in this House upon that question does but little credit to the administration of the Post-Office Department. It is said that we will reenact it because they have construed that under the provisions of this law this noxious literature can be, and will be, admitted in the mails. If that is the construction, what (if you will pardon the expression) is the sense in reenacting the law with identically the same language which you say has been misconstrued, and upon which you say the Post-Office Department is mistaken? It will give it no more force and effect to repeat the language and to reenact it. You can not give courage to a Postmaster-General who has not the manhood and firmness to enforce a law by merely reenacting the same law.

We suggest to you that if the Department has been derelict in its duty, this section, instead of being reenacted in terms, should contain some provision of legislative construction upon the subject. We do not favor the passage through the mails of this particular class of literature, but we do insist that because you desire to eradicate this system, you desire to break down this construction by the Department, that you shall not at the same time destroy the policy of the Government upon this great and vital issue; and it is no compliment to our intelligence for us to say to that Department, "You have misconstrued the law," and to say it only in the silent terms of a reenactment. Let the provision be amended so as to call the attention of the Department to the intent of the legislative body upon this question.

There is another feature upon which I do not wholly differ with the majority of the committee. That is the return of sample copies of newspapers. Fairness in this contention would impel me to admit that the original policy of the law did not contemplate a construction of that sort. Its language may do so. I have no contention with the Postmaster-General on that question. I seriously doubt if our view is correct. He may be right. Whether right or wrong, let us give the direction that we intend. Those sample copies ought not to come back at the exact rate at which they went out. There ought to be some increase of postage along that line, because they are not accomplishing in their return the purpose of the original issuance.

On yesterday my friend from Texas [Mr. BURKE] proposed to yield time to me (when I had time to spare) to explain to this House any objections that I might have to that provision of the bill that permitted a newspaper to stand upon its original basis under the act of 1894, except that it should be permitted to send out sample copies in excess of 50 per cent of its circulation and in excess of 500. My objection to that provision in this bill is because it retards, without any corresponding benefit to the public, this most beneficent means of public instruction. That is one objection. The other objection arises from the fact that the censorship practically established over the newspapers in the original act, of which no serious complaint has been made, is enlarged by the sixth section of this act, which practically requires every newspaper in the United States to establish a post-office in its own department and prepare the mails to be transmitted in a certain way.

That is a small matter, but if we have the employees of the Government, whose business it is under the present law to perform this duty, why attempt to shift that duty to the editor and publisher of the newspaper? The purpose can be but one. It is to enable the little postmasters throughout the country to determine under the provisions of this act whether it has been complied with or not, and if, in the judgment of a postmaster, the provisions of this act have not been legally and technically complied with, to give that postmaster the power to exclude the publication from the mails. That is all there can be in that, and I say to the gentleman from Texas that I know that his intentions are for the best, but that that is a very serious censorship which he disregards.

Take for illustration the ordinary partisan postmaster, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, and let a great contest come on in which the party lines are drawn close and party heat is high, and the newspaper containing an argument, a speech, an editorial, or an article strongly denunciatory of the policy of his party, one intended to affect injuriously the political organization to which he may belong, and right under that provision giving him the power to determine these matters, he can say whether that matter has been properly mailed. In accordance with his judgment, whether it be in accordance with the law or not, he can delay it; he can forward it; he can suppress it; and where is the remedy?

There is no appeal. If there was, it would be unavailing, because the time in which the matter might be operative has passed. I insist that we shall not place upon the press of this country any of those means by which its power and effect may be destroyed. It appears to be but a small matter, and yet it may be used to the great detriment of the public interest.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Do I understand that under the construction you put upon this section there is absolutely no appeal?

Mr. MOON. It provides for no appeal. It gives to the postmaster the power in this, that it requires certain things to be done before the matter gets into the mails. The postmaster, in the enforcement of the law and regulations, must and will examine whether the law in that particular has been complied with.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. The present law requires the same thing.

Mr. MOON. No; I think not in the same language.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. I ask the gentleman to read the present law and to point out the difference. The provisions are the same in hæc verba.

Mr. MOON. The present law, as I understand it, does not require any such thing. It is not before me now and I can not read it. It is wrong, in all events.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Read it and see.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to refer to one action. I have incidentally mentioned it before.

It is stated by gentlemen upon this floor that an amendment will be offered to this bill which clears it of all objections—an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. You will observe that this committee has made no such amendment. It has been stated that that committee would accept the amendment. I believe it is true that a majority of the committee would do so, but there has been and could have been no formal action on the part of this committee on this amendment, because the amendment was suggested after the bill was under debate.

That amendment is that the total circulation of a newspaper, up to 100 per cent, and in no event to exceed 2,000, may be sent out as sample copies. I do not object seriously to the 2,000 limit, but when the 2,000 limit is coupled with the other provision that the sample copies shall be limited to 100 per cent of the circulation of the paper—that is, 100 per cent of the bona fide circulation of the paper—then I do object, because there are hundreds of newspapers in this country that have only a circulation of from five hundred to a thousand, and yet occasions arise of great public interest when these very newspapers will desire to place before the country very much in excess of 100 per cent.

I think an occasion would hardly arise where they would want to put out more than 2,000, and I might favor an amendment limiting them to 2,000 sample copies; but I doubt very seriously that we ought to attempt to interfere in any way with the provisions of the existing law, from the simple fact that the results of so doing would not be especially beneficial. I would not depart from the policy of the Government upon this question for the insignificant benefits that may arise from it.

When this whole question, Mr. Speaker, is summed up; when this whole controversy is brought down to its narrowest limits—and I would not impute any improper motive to anyone—we find arrayed upon one side of this issue, from one end of this Republic to the other, the young, the middle-aged, the old, with the great institutions of learning, scientific organizations, universities, and colleges demanding the policy of culture, refinement, and education and insisting that the Congress of the United States shall not depart from the well-founded principles upon which it has inaugurated this system. They demand that you shall not, as their representatives, on all occasions look to a question of mere revenue. There is more for this people than money. The education of the people and the means of information which they are entitled to is worth more than the few millions that can be saved by destroying it. [Applause.]

You find aligned in opposition to this bill every sentiment of justice and right; you find there all who believe that government is not inaugurated for taxation, but inaugurated for the benefit of mankind. [Renewed applause.] You find, Mr. Speaker, throughout the length and breadth of this land all who believe that we have come upon those times when it is necessary that every man, woman, and child shall know the doings of this Government and the policies it proposes to pursue, demanding the enlargement of the means of information. [Renewed applause.] Even "eternal vigilance" will not preserve liberty without intelligence and education. Would you destroy the beneficent means that will bring about this result?

And what, pray tell me, do we find upon the other side? The transportation companies. And in making this statement I do it without any prejudice or feeling toward the transportation companies of this country. They have the right, as a matter of business, to seek the carriage of mails upon the very best terms they can get it. If we deprive the people of the benefits and give it to them, it is not their fault. It is our dereliction of our solemn duties. [Loud applause.] You will find them demanding this enactment. Why are they demanding it? Because it will give to them a monopoly of the carrying trade of second-class matter. That is the whole issue; that is the beginning and end of the controversy. Sifted to its last analysis, and it is the welfare and interest of the Government and people of this great Republic against the greed of this corporate power. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Alabama is not here. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he has gotten through?

Mr. MOON. Have I any more time, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire). The gentleman has ten minutes more.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire any time?

Mr. TALBERT. I do.

Mr. MOON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina, and will yield the remaining five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the constituency I represent I shall cast my vote against the enactment of this measure, it being, in my judgment, against their interests; and, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be in this House a perfect mania for new legislation, any character of legislation that is new, while we already have more legislation than we have any use for. There is the equal desire and mania, it seems, to change existing laws, when the existing laws possibly are much better than they would be if they were amended as gentlemen seek to have them amended. Why pass this kind of law? Who has asked for it? Nobody has asked for it, but I hold in my hand a number of petitions against it from my people.

Now, I have listened carefully to the discussion of this question since it was first opened the day before yesterday, and I have heard no plausible reason given by the proponents and advocates of this measure why it should pass. The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS] in his eloquent address yesterday stated, in answer to questions from several gentlemen upon this floor, that this bill made no change whatever in existing law. Then, if it makes no change, why is it that they want this law enacted if they do not change any of the laws as they exist to-day?

Why pass a law that is entirely unnecessary? Why pass a law that nobody has asked for, when thousands have protested against it?

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCPHERSON] was asked how he proposed to operate this measure, and he said in both ways. I do not know what he meant by that and perhaps he nor anybody else does. He says it does not affect the county newspaper. It seems to me that that was rather an anomalous condition, an anomalous position, for a man to get up here and stand up and defend the enactment of a measure if it effected no change whatever, and had a kind of double back action, like Mr. OTEY'S dog.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that whenever there is no necessity for new legislation it ought not to be had, and when there exists no necessity for changing the law as it is, we had better resolve it on the side of the doubt. When legislation is doubtful, we had better let it remain as it is. For this reason alone I shall vote against the Loud bill as it is presented here.

Mr. GRIGGS. My friend certainly misunderstood me if he understood me to say that the Loud bill made no change in the law as it stands at present. I said that to the paragraph I read of the old law it made no change.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not want to do the gentleman any injustice, and accept his version as correct. Yet at the same time I can see no sense, no necessity whatever, in passing a bill which the advocates of it admit in a manner works no change, and I admit I could not keep up with the gentleman in his perambulations. [Laughter.]

Now, a great deal has been said about the country press, the country editors—the editors of the county papers. Men have boldly stood up here and almost abused those country editors. Mr. Speaker, I imagine when these gentlemen go back into their districts that they will be upon their knees begging these very country editors to say something nice during the campaign, although they can talk very big about them here on the floor of the House. They are the poorest-paid public servants (for they are public servants) in any calling in life; and if this bill should pass, they will be deprived of a great many privileges they now enjoy. Their patent backs will be a thing of the past.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that they are the most heavily burdened set of men that we have in our country; they are expected to boom everybody and advertise everybody's goods with very little pay, and, Mr. Speaker, if this measure should be enacted into law these country editors will be amongst the largest sufferers of any people upon whom the burdens of this law will fall. Its burdens will inevitably fall upon those who are least able to bear it. It is a measure in the interest of the strong and rich against the poor and the weak. It will work hardships upon the schools and colleges of our country. It is really a measure which ought to be termed, "A bill to aid and encourage the railroads and express companies of our country and to oppress and discourage the great mass of the people." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TALBERT. I thought I had ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman had five minutes.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield the remaining time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, it will be impossible in five minutes to say what I want to say upon this bill. This is the fourth time it has appeared in the House. I have opposed it every time in the interest of every man and woman who wants cheap literature; in the interest of every typesetter, every bookbinder, every poor girl stitcher in New York and other cities of this Union.

Now, I have heard reference here to my friend, Mr. Lupton, of New York, as a lobbyist. He is hauled over the coals here for daring to send to members of this House circulars explaining the situation, so far as it affects his own business and that of other publishers. Mr. Lupton printed an edition of the works of Charles Dickens in twelve volumes which was sold for 48 cents in every town in the Union and Canada, because of this second-class mail postage.

He says himself that if you pass this bill the price of those books will go up over 100 per cent, putting it out of the power of the farmers' boys and girls throughout the country to buy this cheap literature. Lupton sold David Copperfield at 3 cents, delivered at every town in the Union; he sold the works of Thackeray, Bulwer, and others at 4 cents apiece. These are the rates that will be wiped out by passing this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the city of New York pays net every year to the Postal Department $5,000,000. By the passage of this bill you take work from her printers, her stitchers, bookbinders, stereotypers, papermakers, and thousands of others employed in the production of books. You are killing the hen that lays the golden egg. What do you gain? Nothing. It is actually going to be a loss to the United States instead of yielding revenue. The figures show that under this second-class mail privilege the deficit is being lessened each year, and as years go on, taking the average of the last five years, in 1903 the Postal Department will be established upon a paying basis. I have the figures here, and I will print them in my revised speech in the RECORD.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a circular by mail. I presume, according to what I have heard, that the man ought to be horsewhipped for daring to send a circular to a member of Congress. I know that under the orders of the Post-Office Department to-day no letter carrier, no clerk in a post-office, no railway postal clerk is allowed to come to Washington, even during his vacation, and talk to his member of Congress concerning his rate of pay. At one time, as I have been assured, they were forbidden to write to a Representative concerning such a matter. An order issued from the Post-Office Department has forbidden it; and gentlemen on the floor are intimating that men whose interests are endangered have no right to appear in the corridors of the House and have no right to forward circulars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will print the circular in the RECORD. It shows that hogs are carried at 5 cents a pound by railroads, while post-office matter is rated at 15 cents per pound. [Laughter.] The cost of freight for literature is three times as much as that for hogs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I submit for information a proposed amendment which I desire to have read at the Clerk's desk.

"And provided further, That all university, college, and school papers and publications, except those of so-called business and commercial schools and colleges, whether published and circulated or procured to be published and circulated by the authorities of such university, college, or school, or by the students thereof, or by any class, organization, society, or fraternity composed of students of such university, college, or school, shall continue to be received and sent through the mails as second-class matter, in the same manner and with all the privileges heretofore accorded by law as it existed prior to the passage of this act and the same as though this act had not been passed: And also provided, That the circulation of such publications through the mails at said rates shall not exceed 2,000 copies of any one issue."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the proposition contained in this amendment, I desire to say that I have had appeals from all over the country, especially from my own district and adjoining districts, and from the chancellor of the University of the State of New York, asking the adoption of such an amendment. We all know that this bill as it now stands will cut off these papers and publications entirely, and I desire to continue them to the extent of 2,000 copies of each issue and with the same privileges they now have under existing law. We know that our colleges, schools, and universities and the students themselves of these institutions publish from time to time and send out little school or university papers for the information of the people and to the friends of the institution, and these are always an aid to education. It is for that purpose that I propose this amendment now for information and shall offer it at the proper time. I speak of it now that the members may have it in their minds and consider it, and in order that the advocates of the bill may understand what is coming. I trust, Mr. Speaker, there will be no objection to the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the Post-Office Committee. I am, however, a member of the Postal Commission. I did not seek that honor; it came to me without solicitation. I have spent many days and nights of labor upon its work. I have considered the question presented by the bill, as well as other postal questions, and have come to some conclusions in my own mind upon them. I feel that I should be shirking my duty to the House if, upon a measure of this importance, I did not state plainly and simply my convictions and my reasons for them.

The postal service of this country is one of which the people have a right to be proud. The mails are carried expeditiously; they are carried with accuracy and honesty.

The Department in Washington and throughout the country is well organized. The employees are active and faithful. Every resource devised by American ingenuity is successfully employed. The service to the people far exceeds that of any foreign country and is constantly being extended and improved. But there is one stain on the postal service, and that is the great loss which occurs yearly in its administration. I think few members of the House realize how great that loss is. It is worth our while to ascertain it with all the accuracy which circumstances admit.

I have in my hand tables which show the annual deficiencies during the last ten fiscal years. I will merely state the result and not weary members by reading the tables, which I shall place in the RECORD. Here is a statement of the receipts, expenditures, and deficits of the Department for the last ten fiscal years as shown by the records of the Post-Office Department.

Fiscal year.	Receipts.	Expenditures.	Deficit.
1890	$60,882,097.92	$66,259,547.84	$5,377,449.92
1892	70,930,475.98	76,960,846.16	6,030,370.18

The deficit is more than $79,000,000, according to the imperfect methods of bookkeeping which prevails; but this by no means tells the whole story. There are many expenditures really chargeable to the postal service which are incurred by and charged to the Treasury Department. In order to obtain the real loss we must include them.

First, there is to be noted the railway mail payments to the bond-aided Pacific railroads. The Post-Office Department has not been called upon to pay to these railroads the amount earned by them for transporting the mails, because those amounts have been credited by the Treasury Department upon their debt to the Government. Clearly these amounts should be accounted for as an expense of the postal service. I attach a statement showing these payments during the last ten fiscal years. All told they amount to more than $13,000,000.

1892	1,806,154.09
1893	1,697,492.11
1894	1,628,770.09

Total	13,501,007.96

Second, the salaries, contingent expenses, printing, and binding of the Post-Office Department, together with the salaries of the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, which, though a branch of the Treasury Department, is concerned entirely with the postal service, amount, with approximate accuracy, during the last ten fiscal years to sixteen and a half millions of dollars.

I annex a table showing these expenditures in detail.

Appropriations on account of postal service out of the General Treasury, except for Pacific railroads.

Third. The Post-Office Department uses as post-offices throughout the country, in common with other branches of the public service, many and expensive buildings, erected, repaired, heated, lighted, and otherwise maintained by the Treasury Department. Considerable in excess of $100,000,000 have been expended in the construction of these buildings, and annually a large amount is expended for their repair, care, and maintenance.

These buildings are occupied by the Post-Office Department free of rent. It would be impossible to reckon the annual charge which should be made against the postal service on this account. I do not attempt to do so, and for the reason that I am willing to accept the estimate which was made several years ago by Postmaster-General Wanamaker, that by this loan to the Department free of rent buildings throughout the country the Government pays its postage upon the enormous amounts of free Government matter which is transmitted in the mails.

Thus, by adding to the apparent deficit these sums we have a loss in the last ten years of $110,053,493.05. These figures can not be erased, denied, or disputed. It is difficult to realize them. Why, Mr. Speaker, with that amount of money we might have constructed the canal across the isthmus; with that amount of money we might have built a fleet of battleships which, if they had been in existence, would have avoided the war with Spain.

These figures impose upon every individual member of this House a responsibility he can not escape.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Allow me to ask the gentleman whether it is not true that one hundred and seventy-odd thousand dollars annually goes as an extra subsidy for the expedition of certain mails between here and the Southern coast, over and above the ordinary mail pay of railroad lines?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Alas, yes; $177,000. The gentleman well knows how strongly I opposed that measure; and I shall continue to oppose it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do know it. But would it not be as well to save from this aggregation of losses somewhat at least in that direction?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is quite right. But $177,000 a year would not very much diminish in ten years the loss I have stated. The evil which the gentleman has pointed out requires a remedy. The evil which this bill is intended to meet is not the only evil in the postal service. Each of them in turn requires the attention and intelligent action of Congress, because the postal deficit is largely the fault of Congress.

I sincerely hope that this measure may not be the only one concerning the administration of the postal service which will receive our attention, but to-day we are considering the evils which are claimed to exist in that part of the mail which is called second-class matter and the loss which it is claimed the country sustains in that respect. I think I shall prove that the enormous deficit which I have shown by no means represents the loss in the transmission of second-class matter. If the postage upon that matter equaled the cost of its transmission, the alarming deficit would be converted into a splendid surplus, which, in its turn, might be extinguished by improvements in the service and reductions upon other classes of mail in which the whole people and not a small part of them are interested.

Mailable matter of the second class embraces all newspapers and other periodical publications which are issued at stated intervals as frequently as four times a year, provided they conform to certain conditions not necessary for me now to state. This class of mail is transmitted by the Government at a uniform rate of 1 cent a pound. No other country has a corresponding classification; and not many years ago England, having in mind the experience furnished by this country, declined to establish such a classification. The postal monopoly of the Government which extends to first-class matter is extended over neither second, third, nor fourth class matter.

If I desire to send a letter I must send it in the mails or employ a private messenger for the single occasion. The Government can afford to take my letter to Alaska for 2 cents, although the cost of transmission is perhaps as many dollars, because it compels me to use the mails for the transmission of a letter which I send within my own State or city. But if I wish to send matter of the second class I may lawfully do so by mail, by express, by freight, or by any other method of transportation.

The result of this is that the Government gets the long and unprofitable haul of second-class matter while other agencies get the short and profitable haul. We do not begin to carry second-class matter in great quantities until we reach the distance where it can be profitably carried by no other agency. Under these conditions we should expect a loss and we find it to an enormous amount. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] stated generally the other day that it was $45,000,000 a year. Taking the direct and indirect loss, I do not think that he has overstated it. As far as the statistics avail me, I shall try to demonstrate to the House what the loss incurred in the transmission of second-class matter is.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Does the gentleman think it is right to separate the second-class matter from the balance of the business of the Department, and charge to it the whole deficit of $45,000,000?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I shall cover the matter in what I am about to say, and I hope that until I complete the statement I am about to make I shall not be interrupted. When that is concluded I will consent to any interruption.

There have been some recent weighings in the Post-Office Department, which showed clearly enough what the proportion of the various classes of mail matter is. It is shown very clearly that about 56 per cent in weight of the mail now being transmitted through the country is second-class matter.

The postal commission was very much troubled by the absence of accurate statistics with regard to the quantity of mail. There had been a weighing for seven days in the year 1890, and all statistics were based upon the results of that weighing. It seemed to the commission that it was desirable that more accurate statistics should be obtained, and the result was that the mail was weighed at every point of origin for thirty-five days in the months of October and November last.

For the information of the House I will place in the RECORD the results of the recent weighing, the estimate made thereon for the full year, and the percentage of the whole which each class of mail matter shows.

Weight of mail carried in current fiscal year according to recent weighing.

	Pounds.	Per cent.
First class	94,888,341	12.42
Second class	394,417,505	51.62
Second class, free	32,750,550	4.28
Third and fourth class	145,874,518	19.1
Government free	96,132,692	12.58
Total	764,063,606	100

The Government accepts for transportation that enormous amount of second-class mail. It hires certain agencies to transport it throughout the country. During the last fiscal year it paid in cash to the railroads, steamboats, cable and electric cars, and the star-route contractors for transportation of the mails the sum of $43,078,259.81. This is what is actually paid to the agencies which I have enumerated, and does not include mail-messenger service, wagon transportation, or pay of railway mail clerks.

Although we undertake the transmission of second-class matter at a cent a pound, while other matter pays largely in excess of that rate, yet when we come to pay for transportation we pay by the pound and uniformly for all classes of matter. A ton of newspapers or books costs us for transportation as much as a ton of letters. If, therefore, the second-class matter were entirely eliminated from the transportation problem, the amount paid on that account would be correspondingly diminished.

Therefore it clearly follows that 56 per cent of the payments on account of transportation (as 56 per cent may be assumed safely for last as well as this year) are fairly chargeable to the transportation of second-class matter. So the first start we make upon second-class matter is to pay out more than $24,000,000 a year for its transportation, or, to be exact, $24,123,825.51. I am not speaking now about anything else that we do. We pay that out to the railroads, the steamboats, the star routes, and the electric cars; and we receive in postage from that class of matter $3,500,000. To be exact, we received last year $3,527,032.26.

Now, those are facts. There is no escape from them; there is no doubt about them. We lose merely by what we pay for transportation over $20,500,000 every year, based upon last year's experience. As this class of matter increases our loss will increase.

Mr. OTEY. Will the gentleman please tell us what class of citizens or business people in this country the present law as it stands is hurting?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will try to tell that; that is what I am going to do in the next forty-five minutes; but, as the gentleman will see, I can not afford to be diverted from the line of my remarks. I want to be courteous. I wish to make myself clear upon that question. I shall try to show that the transportation of second-class matter upon the terms and conditions of the existing law is injuring the whole public except those who are plundering the Treasury for their own self-interest and have been doing so for the last twenty years.

Mr. OTEY. At the same time will you please tell me this——

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. If the gentleman really asks anything for information, I should be glad to yield.

Mr. OTEY. I am asking for information. Nobody has answered that question or explained it at all, and you are about the last speaker who is going to speak. I have waited to get the information from somebody. Will you please tell, when you tell the other, what business interest in this country will be specially benefited by the passage of this law?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will do the best I can to answer the gentleman's question. In the first place, there is the matter of dollars and cents. We have lost at the very first step over $20,000,000 by our payment for transportation. Gentlemen will say and gentlemen on the floor have said, "You pay too much to the railroads for transportation." When we reach that question we will decide it.

But suppose the railroads were good enough to transport our second-class matter for nothing. Suppose we could persuade them or compel them to take that matter and carry it without a cent of payment. Let us see how the account would then stand upon second-class matter. The total expenditures of the Post-Office Department last year were $101,632,160. These are the figures under the deceptive method of bookkeeping I have described, and are really under the mark. I have accounted for the transportation charges. The balance of the expenses of the Department are $58,553,901.

How much of those expenses are fairly attributable to the second-class matter? Not 56 per cent, I think. Second-class matter does not require an expenditure in quite the proportion of its weight outside of the payments for transportation. You can handle a ton of second-class matter more cheaply than you can handle a ton of letters, because it is divided into a less number of units.

But second-class matter, piece by piece, costs the Government, irrespective of what is paid for transportation, at least as much as first-class matter. It travels farther; it is handled oftener; it is more trouble to the railway mail clerk; it is more trouble to the post-office clerk; in every way it is more expensive. This is the universal testimony of the employees.

Let us see if we can find out how many pieces of second-class matter were transported in the last fiscal year. We have estimates made again and again, based upon actual observation, and they show that the number of pieces of second-class matter is one-third of the total number of pieces that are transmitted in the mails. Then, irrespective of payments for transportation, it costs the Government a third of $58,553,901, or $19,517,967, for the handling of second-class matter, and that sum, added to the loss incurred by transportation, is the loss incurred in the transmission of second-class mail matter, or $40,114,760 annually, based on the experience of last year, without taking into account these expenses which do not appear in the bookkeeping of the Department.

Now, what does that mean? Suppose we could save the whole of that loss. It would mean rural free delivery all over the country. It would mean a reclassification of salaries. It would mean post-offices for the shelter of postal business, constructed and owned by the Government. It would mean in the end 1-cent letter postage. You never can take the first step to any one of these great reforms unless you begin by rooting out this grievous abuse.

Why, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] has pictured with his usual force and eloquence the evils to the Republic which would follow by increasing the price of cheap literature. It is possible that this bill might increase it; it is possible that that set of Dickens might sell for a cent more per volume under the provisions of this bill; but let me say to the gentleman from New York that the very boy who bought that volume would, if he had 1-cent letter postage, save on the single letter that he wrote to get the book all that he lost by the provisions of this law.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. If he had to pick up old iron and copper to buy the book, he would not care much about 1-cent postage.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, if he saved a cent in his letter postage, he would not care very much about the additional cent on the price of his book.

Now, who bears the expense; who bears this loss of upward of $40,000,000 a year? It is borne in the first place by the taxpayer, and I will say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OTEY] that the taxpayer is the first man who is injured. His share of the burden is represented by the appropriations which are made annually for the losses of the Post-Office Department.

It is borne, secondly, by those who employ the mails for other classes of mail. Let us see what a burden that is upon the people. Your second-class matter, good, bad, or indifferent, pays a cent a pound. Your third-class matter pays nominally 8 cents a pound; but in reality, because it is not a bulk rate, something over 14 cents a pound. Your fourth-class matter pays nominally 16 cents a pound; but in reality, because there is no bulk rate, it pays 17 cents a pound. And your first-class matter, the matter in which all the people are interested—not merely a few publishers of bogus newspapers or of cheap books, but the whole people, every one of them who can read or write and who receives or sends a letter—pays, nominally, 32 cents a pound, but really 85 cents and a fraction a pound, because 40 or 50 letters go to make up the pound according to the experience of the Department.

In other words, the sender of third-class mail pays fourteen times as much per pound, the sender of fourth-class mail pays seventeen times as much per pound, and the sender of first-class mail pays eighty-five times as much per pound as the sender of second-class matter. These are the men who are injured the most by this great injustice in the classification. These are the men whose backs bend to the burden. These are the men who prevent the Department from exhibiting a loss which would scandalize the country.

These are the men who are paying the great subsidy for the benefit of the few. These are the men who are paying to the Government the great profit which conceals from the country the actual loss incurred upon second-class matter. If these facts could be exposed and understood from one end of the country to the other as they really exist there would be such a cry raised from every city and village and hamlet in favor of this measure that not a vote could be found against it.

I have tried to make clear the evils which this bill is intended to palliate. It does not propose to abolish the second-class rate. The country long ago deliberately determined to enter upon the policy of transmitting to the people newspapers and periodical publications at a cheap and losing rate. Speaking broadly, they are the history of current transactions and the comment of the time upon them. It was determined, and wisely determined, that in a country where the people ruled it was desirable that they should have the fullest information at the cheapest possible price, and that a free and widely extended press was so much a necessity to a free people that it deserved encouragement at the hands of the Government.

No one proposes to take one step backward in that policy. This bill certainly does no such thing. Preserving the policy intended, it proposes to remedy merely the abuses which have grown up under it. To use the language of the current report of the Postmaster-General, the bill proposes "to bring back the law to its original and just scope." It is not expected under the provisions of the bill that the loss in second-class matter will be extinguished. It will be diminished only. It will be diminished by so much as can be effected by driving from the second-class rate those publications which were never originally intended to come within it.

Now, I noticed even yesterday that gentlemen complained that they did not understand the bill. I do not know that I can aid any gentleman if he does not yet understand it; but I have analyzed it with great care, and I will try to state to the House as well as I can exactly what the bill contains. It is a great deal more simple than it seems to be. Nine-tenths of the bill simply reenacts existing law.

There are six changes of the law proposed in this bill, and six changes only. They include both important and unimportant changes, and I will state them and discuss such part of them as seems to me proper.

First. The withdrawal of unbound books or reprints of books from the privilege of second-class matter.

Second. The curtailment of the sample-copy privilege.

Third. The prohibition of the privilege of return of unsold publications by news agents at second-class rates.

Fourth. The repeal of so much of the act of 1894 as admits to the second class the publications of incorporated institutions of learning and of strictly professional, historical, or scientific societies, including bulletins issued by the State boards of health, unless they conform to the conditions required of newspapers and magazines.

Fifth. The exclusion from the second-class rate of fractional parts of a newspaper.

Sixth. The requirement of sorting contained in section 6.

That is all there is in the bill. Most of those changes are unimportant, and I shall delay the House very little in the consideration of them.

The sorting of second-class matter prescribed in section 6 is very unimportant. The matter is left in the discretion of the Postmaster-General. It ought to be amended so as to apply only to publications having a circulation of over 5,000 copies. It doubtless will be so amended.

In any event the Postmaster-General would never direct the sorting of the mail matter into State, county, city, or town sacks except in the case of very large publications, whose publishers already do what this section requires. For instance, the Youth's Companion has done so for many years.

The prohibition of sending at the pound rate fractional parts of a publication is of little importance, and I shall spend no time upon it.

Upon the partial repeal of the act of 1894 I desire to say a few words, because I think that is the part of the bill which arouses the most opposition, at least upon this side of the Chamber. Under that act the publications of all societies organized under the lodge system, all regularly incorporated institutions of learning, all trades unions, and all professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including the bulletins of State boards of health, were admitted to the mails as second-class matter, even though they had no subscribers and were designed primarily for advertising purposes, although both these conditions applied to all other second-class matter.

The change of law proposed by the bill is to exclude from the special privileges of this act the publications of incorporated institutions of learning and of professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including the bulletins of the State boards of health, leaving them to go in the mails under the restrictions which are imposed upon second-class matter generally.

The distinction between the publications referred to in the act of 1894, whose privileges are continued and those whose privileges are repealed, is clear. The publications of lodges, fraternal societies, and trades unions are sent to persons who, in effect, are subscribers through the payment of annual dues, while no such consideration arises in the case of the publications whose privileges are repealed by the bill. It may be that some modification should be made in favor of institutions of learning.

The bill is not aimed at the genuine college; it is aimed at the fraudulent college; it is aimed at the use of the mails for purely advertising purposes. It is difficult under the law of 1894 to separate the wheat from the chaff, the good from the bad; and I trust there will be some amendment agreed upon to that provision of the bill which will be satisfactory both to the gentleman from California and to those who oppose that provision.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Would the gentleman accept this amendment?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Let me say to the gentleman from Mississippi I have no right to accept any amendment. I am not in charge of the bill.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I understand; but you could favor it.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I am not in charge of the bill, and therefore I can not make any response to the gentleman.

Now, all these matters that I have spoken to are unimportant. The important purposes of the bill are entirely outside of them. There are three important provisions in this bill, which I want to discuss; they are the only important provisions of the bill.

In the first place, that part of the bill which prohibits the return of unsold copies of publications. Well, what is the law about that now? The news agent having unsold publications on his counter can not to-day return them to the publisher unless he pays a cent fer every 4 ounces or fraction thereof.

But somehow or other the great news companies of the country worked into the law an interpretation which gives the news agent the right to return unsold publications to the news agent from whom he receives them. The news agent in my town or your town can not return his unsold publications to the publisher; he can return them to the American News Company, for instance.

The agents of the American News Company realize that it is a valuable privilege and oppose its repeal. But why should it not be repealed? The theory upon which we transmit this second-class matter at a ruinous loss is because it is sent out to be read. But the matter returned to the agent is returned at a ruinous cost simply to be destroyed.

There is no good reason why these returns should not be made by the slower and cheaper method of freight, when all they want of the matter that is returned ordinarily is to sell it as waste paper. I say this provision is a just one, and ought to save the bill. There ought not to be a man on the floor opposed to it.

Now, then, let me come to the sample-copy privilege. Here is where the newspaper press of the land is injured, if it is injured at all. Are they injured here? I say no. I say that the provision is not an injury, but a benefit to the newspapers of the land, whether they are metropolitan or country newspapers. I have had my share of protests coming from the publishers of newspapers. The first time that this bill was before the House, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, I had this stereotyped protest from every newspaper in my district.

But I believed that I was not sent here to shake and shiver like a dry leaf in the November gale whenever a protest came from home, but to exercise my intelligence and to vote for measures according as my best judgment told me that they would benefit or injure my people. [Applause.] I voted for the bill, and by no single publisher to whom I explained my vote and the reasons for it was fault found.

My experience with this bill has always been that the publisher of a country newspaper who at first opposes this bill when it is explained to him does just what that publisher who sent a letter to my friend from Maine the other day did. He not only does not further oppose it, but, on the other hand, becomes its enthusiastic supporter, because he knows that it is in his own true and best interests.

I would risk taking this bill before a jury of country newspaper editors and confidently expect to get a unanimous verdict in its favor from them. Now, what privileges for the newspapers does the bill retain? They can be sent at a cent a pound all over the land; they can be sent to every letter-carrier office for delivery at that same price, except to the letter-carrier office of the place of publication, and even that exception does not exist in the case of weekly papers.

The Government takes and carries the newspaper from the publisher to the reader at a ruinous rate and finds no fault about it, and proposes to continue to do it. It not only does that, but in the county of publication it carries over 32,000,000 pounds a year without charging a cent. It takes over 32,000,000 pounds every year, transports it, handles it, delivers it, and pays the railroad for transporting it, and charges the newspaper man nothing.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Does this bill interfere with the free county circulation?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. This bill does not interfere with the free county circulation. It leaves it exactly as it is. Why, Mr. Speaker, no man is bold enough to take away any of the privileges of the American press. No man desires to do it. Those gentlemen sitting above the Speaker's chair, and those whom they represent, wield more power than we who sit below it. They carry along parties to victory or defeat. They make and unmake statesmen. They mold and create public opinion. Why, to be honest about it, we dare not interfere with their privileges, and nobody who had anything to do with the framing of this bill proposes to do any such thing.

The single proposition that touches the newspaper, and that touches the country newspaper alone, is the provision which cuts down the number of sample copies which it can issue to 500, or 50 per cent of the circulation. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has given notice that he proposes to offer an amendment to raise that to 100 per cent or 2,000 copies of each issue; and I hope it will be adopted. I shall vote for it, because then it will render it absolutely certain that there is not a single line or letter in this bill which by any twisting can be made to count against the country newspaper.

Mr. BROWN. Would it interrupt the gentleman if I were to ask a question about the sample copies?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It would not.

Mr. BROWN. The gentleman will admit that besides what are called the county papers there are a great many valuable town and village papers that play an important part in educational work.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I call them country papers. Those are carried free in the county.

Mr. BROWN. Now, suppose a new paper is started, a village paper, and suppose at the end of the month it has 100 subscribers in a little town of three or four hundred people. Now, suppose for the fifth issue the publisher would like to circulate and send out, say, 500 sample copies; would it not be unjust to restrict him to 100 copies, as would be the case if this amendment were adopted?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will answer that frankly. Whenever a privilege is susceptible of great abuse, it ought to be granted with great caution. Nobody cares whether that paper circulates fifty, five hundred, or a thousand sample copies. But you have got to have a uniform rule.

It seems to me that if they have the right to issue sample copies up to 100 per cent of their circulation, to the amount of 2,000 copies, they are getting all they ought to ask for, and that it is ungracious to ask anything further. Perhaps now and then an instance of hardship may exist, but in those few cases the additional postage would not count for much. It is a small thing compared with the abuses which occur under the unlimited privilege of sample copies. This leads me to the question: Why interfere with the sample privilege at all? Is it because the newspapers themselves abuse it? No. Nobody claims that any newspaper abuses this privilege—not any genuine newspaper. But this great privilege of cheap and free circulation brought into existence another class of publications that masquerade under the name and title and appearance of a newspaper, and it is against these publications that this part of the bill is aimed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And they compete with the legitimate newspaper.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes, and they compete with the legitimate newspaper. Let me illustrate. Let me tell you the experience of our commission at one of the cities we visited. We found a lot of very pleasant and agreeable gentlemen publishing a lot of extremely worthless papers. We found great printing offices, with all the modern improvements; we found a post-office filled to overflowing with publications of these printing offices. We found papers with a circulation sometimes of over a million copies of every issue. We looked them over, and while there was nothing especially vicious about their contents or their advertisements, they were simply and purely worthless. The world would have been no worse off if the moment they were taken from the printing press they had been sunk in the sea——

A MEMBER. And no better off.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. And perhaps no better off. They did not do any particular harm except to cause a great loss to the Government. They did no good except to build up a number of great fortunes for a number of very pleasant gentlemen.

Now, what did we find to be the method pursued by those gentlemen to get this great circulation? None of you ever see any of those papers. The publishers do not care to send them to you or to the like of you. They do not care about a steady subscription list, because the oftener they can change their list of readers the better their advertising columns sell; and, as my friend from California said, some of them sell at $4,000 a page.

Now, where do they get this million or million and a half of so-called subscribers? They have some subscribers who are gotten by clubs, large premiums being paid out to those who get up these clubs—perhaps amounting nearly to the subscription price.

Then they have their long lists of sample copies. Who are the people to whom they send their sample copies? I went into one of those establishments and I saw a girl sitting at a table. Spread out before her were bushels of letters. She was copying the signatures of those letters. They were largely in pencil, and many of them appeared to be letters of illiterate persons.

I said to her, "What are you doing this for?" "Well," said she, reluctantly and after some hesitation, "we are getting lists of persons to send out our sample copies to." "Why don't you go to the directory and get your lists there?" "Well, we do not care for that kind of people." "Where did those letters come from?" "Well, they are answers to advertisements." "How did you get them?" "We bought them of a man down in Providence at so much a thousand—a man who has published an advertisement in the newspapers. They are answers to it." "Let me see the advertisement." She handed it to me. I do not remember the advertisement, but this is a general description: "Anybody who will send 25 cents to lock box so and so, will learn how to make $15 a week without leaving home."

A catch-penny advertisement! Why did the publishers of those papers want to reach the kind of people who would answer that advertisement instead of those whose names they could get from the directory of Congress, for instance? Because they wanted to reach people who had proved themselves to be "gudgeons." Those are the men and women to whom it was advantageous to send that class of paper, filled up with cheap catch-penny advertisements.

We are not aiming in this bill at the country publisher; and we do not hurt him. But we are aiming at publications of the character I have just referred to—the worst enemy of the country printer that exists to-day in the land. I trust the House will not be deceived by any counterfeit public sentiment in regard to that matter.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Allow me to ask the gentleman whether each of those letters was not a letter with a 2-cent stamp upon it?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I can not tell. I think very likely it was.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Every one of them.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I know very well the old argument, that if we send out this second-class matter through the mails at a ruinous loss, we make up the loss on first-class postage. Nobody knows whether that is true or not. Transactions will get themselves done even if Home Comfort and other bogus newspapers go out of existence. The world will move along just the same; people will buy and sell just the same; they will write just the same number of letters, although they may not write them to the same persons.

To sum up, then, the only part of this bill which can possibly affect the newspapers is the curtailment of the sample-copy privilege. To the honest newspaper with a genuine subscription list the sample-copy privilege is a mere incident. Its main purpose is to reach actual subscribers. It exercises the sample-copy privilege only for the purpose of extending its circulation.

The privilege is retained in the bill, or will be when the bill is amended, to the full extent to which it can be fairly exercised. The bogus newspaper has little genuine subscription list. Its main purpose is to send out sample copies, thereby swelling its apparent circulation to the enrichment of its advertising columns. This privilege the bill effectively denies, and, so far as it accomplishes its purpose, will be to the benefit of the real newspaper.

The only other change of importance is that denying to the so-called serial books the privilege of the second-class rate and classifying them where they really belong, with other books, as third-class matter mailable at 8 cents a pound or fraction thereof. The present law specifies "books" as one of the things that are mailable as third-class matter, but by virtue of an opinion of an Attorney-General of the United States many years ago and by an interpretation which goes even beyond that opinion there have crept into the second-class matter publications which do not belong there. This has been done under the pretense that they were not books, but periodical publications.

Gentlemen have declaimed loudly about the good literature in paper covers which goes through the mails as second-class matter. This is not a question of good or bad literature. It is a question of honest classification. Doubtless there is some good literature which is entered as second-class matter, but there is a great deal of bad literature so entered. The Government can make no distinction between the two classes. It can not act as a literary critic or censor. Literature, whether it is good or bad, must be treated alike provided it conforms to the ideas of decency and morality which have found expression in the criminal law.

The publications of Houghton & Mifflin, which have been so extensively circulated and commented upon, are good literature. There is none better. Yet I am willing to test this bill by its application to those publications. The members of this firm are honorable men, publishers of high-grade literature. They enjoy the privilege of second-class rates, and of course they are very much against any change. Let us see if there is any reason why their paper-covered publications ought to enjoy a privilege denied to their competitors in business.

I hold in my hand a circular which they have sent to me in common with other members. Let me take the first three numbers. They are Addison and Steele, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Burke's Speech on Conciliation with the Colonies. They do not suggest the idea of continuity which we usually associate with the word "periodical." They are separate units. There is no continuity between one publication and the others. The underlying theory of the cheap second-class rate is to send out the news and literature of the day and month and the comment thereon and not the history or literature of bygone times.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I have only a few minutes more, but I will yield; certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose these publications are of benefit to the people of the whole country and go out to them through the highways and byways, giving to them cheap and wholesome literature which they could get in no other way.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, I am not willing to benefit one class of the people at the expense of the mass of the people.

The statute law provides that "mail matter of the third class shall embrace books," etc. The publications which I am discussing are "books," and nothing else. They differ in no respect from the books which are transmitted as third-class matter except that they are in paper covers. Publishers have been able to have them entered as second-class matter under the pretense (for it is no better than a pretense) that they are "periodical publications." How transparent the pretense is can best be judged by observing the steps by which it is rendered effective.

Second-class matter must have a "legitimate list of subscribers." Often, if not always, the subscriber is a news agent and the subscription becomes a mere sham. The publications are numbered consecutively, though there is nothing consecutive in their nature and the numbering is a mere technical compliance with the provisions of law. Doubtless they are issued at stated intervals, though the purchaser never cares for that. They call them periodicals when they are not periodicals. They call them serials when they are not serials.

Every step in the transaction by which they are taken out of the classification of books and put into the classification of periodicals is a flimsy pretext. The publisher who employs such methods as these ought not to have an advantage over his more scrupulous competitor. All books, whether bound or unbound, should be in the same classification. The original intent of the law was that they should be so.

Mr. MORRIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MORRIS. Could not the Post-Office authorities under the present law forbid the sending of that kind of matter through the mails at second-class rates?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, I think not, Mr. Speaker. They have acted upon a construction of the present law for more than twenty years, and I think no Postmaster-General would be justified, if Congress declined to change that construction, in adopting any other. I think these things are bound to go on until Congress acts.

Mr. BELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BELL. I notice from one of the Chicago papers this morning that all of these almanacs issued by the newspapers are going through the mails under this rate. Do you think that is lawful?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, I should want to stop and consider.

Mr. BELL. They are published once a year.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. All that I can say to my friend from Colorado is that, so far as I can see, the passage of this bill would make no difference, one way or the other, upon that question.

Mr. BELL. The point I was trying to reach is that it is the failure to execute the present law that makes that difficulty.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Well, that may be so. There may be imperfections in the execution of the present law. The responsibility for that lies with the Post-Office Department and not with the Congress. Let us make the law so plain that no possibility of misconstruction may exist—so that he who runs may read. Let us put all publishers of all books upon an equality, and thus return to the law its original intent, which has long since been lost sight of.

Mr. Speaker, I must draw my remarks to a close. Who are opposing this bill? No one is doing it intelligently except the men who are profiting selfishly by the abuse of the privileges of the law. Their agents have been circulating misrepresentations from one end of the country to the other and are daily infesting the corridors of the Capitol.

Who are supporting this bill? A long list of Postmasters-General—Wanamaker, Wilson, Bissel, Gary, and Smith. The last two Presidents have urged upon Congress its passage. The American Press Association has unanimously indorsed it. Every intelligent newspaper man who has studied its provisions indorses it, and finally every intelligent man who has considered the question solely in the interest of the Government favors it.

The measure should become a law because it is thus supported and because it is thus opposed. It gains as much strength from its opposition as it does from its support. The people who are fattening upon the largess from the public Treasury, which has been scattered to them with a prodigal hand, are loud in their outcry against it. They are the ones who are heard and who are here. The silent, patient people are dumb. It is the special and selfish interests that are knocking at the door of the Capitol.

A vote against this bill is a vote against the long-delayed classification of salaries, a vote against the extension of rural free delivery, and, above all, a vote against taking the first step toward 1-cent postage.

Mr. Speaker, we ought to pass this bill; we ought to pass it in the interest of the people; we ought to pass it for the relief of the Post-Office Department, which has cried for relief these many years; we ought to pass it as a promise of further reform and of an enlarged usefulness of the postal service, the greatest cooperative undertaking of the whole people. [Applause.]

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to present to the House and to ask for a nonconcurrence in the amendments of the Senate and for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, asks unanimous consent that the House consider the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill with a view to a nonconcurrence in the Senate amendments and asking for a conference. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

"A bill (H. R. 7941) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901," with sundry amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the matter?

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. I move that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House nonconcurred in the amendments of the Senate; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HITT, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. DINSMORE.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the House, under the order, will now proceed under the five-minute rule to the further consideration of the bill which has been before the House. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That mailable matter of the second class shall embrace all newspapers and other periodical publications which are issued at stated intervals, and as frequently as four times a year, and are within the conditions named in this act: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to admit to the second-class rate publications purporting to be issued periodically and to subscribers, but which are merely books, or reprints of books, whether they be issued complete or in parts, whether they be bound or unbound, whether they be sold by subscription or otherwise, or whether they purport to be premiums or supplements or parts of regular newspapers or periodicals.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 1 after the word "to," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "exclude from the second-class rate publications of a serial nature purporting to be issued periodically and to subscribers and which are not primarily designed as an advertising medium."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, was I recognized?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS] is recognized on his amendment.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The first section of this bill is directed specifically against publications of a circulating-library character, for which gentlemen who are opposed to the bill have been contending in this debate. The amendment proposes to change the character of this section altogether, and it has a proviso which will protect publications of a literary character from being turned into mere advertising agencies. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman desires to be heard in opposition to the amendment, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the gentleman is sincere in thinking that his amendment may accomplish some results, in the peculiar wording that he has given it; but let me say to the House that none of these books are issued primarily for advertising, or for advertising in any manner whatever, and his amendment would simply leave it as it is to-day, and these books would still continue to go through the mails at pound rates. I hope the House will vote down the amendment, because if it shall be adopted the bill will be totally destroyed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following as a substitute for the bill—for all after the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order until the bill is perfected by sections.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then I will offer it as an amendment at the present time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That in case the Postmaster-General can not in all cases hereafter make contracts with the railroad companies to carry all mail within the United States at an average rate not exceeding 1 cent per pound, he shall immediately take steps to provide one line of Government railroads to connect each and every railroad post-office throughout the United States, said railroads to be secured by condemnation and purchase, under the right of eminent domain, or by constructing new lines: Provided, That in no case of purchase shall the price paid be greater than it would cost to construct the road. That the Postmaster-General shall draw upon the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time for the necessary money to purchase or construct such railroads, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to prepare, issue, and pay out on said drafts of the Postmaster-General a sufficient amount of full legal-tender Treasury notes, said notes to be redeemable only in payment of all claims and taxes due the United States Government: Provided further, That as fast as lines of railroads shall be acquired under this act the same shall be operated by the Postmaster-General in carrying mail, express, freight, and passengers, at such uniform rates to all as will defray the cost of maintaining and operating said roads."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on the point of order a moment?

The SPEAKER. The point has been decided. It is clearly out of order, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That publications of the second class, except as provided in section 25 of the act of March 3, 1879, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, excluding sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be entitled to transmission through the mails at 1 cent a pound or fraction thereof, where the distance between the office of mailing and the office of delivery, by the usual route by which mail is transported, does not exceed 1,000 miles, and at 2 cents a pound or fraction thereof where such distance exceeds 1,000 miles; such postage to be prepaid as now provided by law: Provided, nevertheless, That news agents shall not be allowed to return to news agents or publishers at the pound rate unsold periodical publications, but shall pay postage on the same at the rate of 1 cent for 4 ounces.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "copies," insert "except as hereinafter provided."

In lines 10 to 15, inclusive, strike out the words:

Where the distance between the office of mailing and the office of delivery, by the usual route by which mail is transported, does not exceed 1,000 miles, and at 2 cents a pound or fraction thereof where such distance exceeds 1,000 miles.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, we are now working under the five-minute rule, considering the pending bill by sections. I was unable to get time during the general debate, but I have listened with interest to all that has been said by gentlemen on both sides of the question.

This bill is known throughout the country as the "Loud bill," and is intended to increase the rate of postage on certain printed matter which under existing law is permitted to pass through the mails at 1 cent per pound, but which will, should this bill become a law, have to pay 8 cents per pound. The effect of this bill will be to drive the people to patronize the express and railroad companies with all this business, paying them from seven to eight times more than they are now paying; hence this bill should be entitled "A bill to increase the business and profits of private express and railroad companies."

Last year we had this same matter before us, with more time for investigation than we are taking now. It was then proven that there had been no reduction in the rates paid to railroads for carrying our mail since 1878, notwithstanding the fact that the cost of constructing and operating railroads has been materially reduced. A special committee was appointed by this House to investigate the facts. Evidence furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission established the fact that freight rates since 1878 had declined generally throughout the country 35 per cent. This committee also found that in 1898 the railroads received 50 per cent more of their gross earnings for mail service than they received in 1878.

If our Postmaster-General should contract for railroad mail service at the average reduction of rates since 1878 of 35 per cent, he would save to the Department $12,500,000 annually, and thereby wipe out the present deficiency of a little over $4,000,000 and have a net earning of $8,000,000 left, which would enable him to extend rural free delivery throughout the country; and if it were possible to get the full reduction in charges made for mail service to which the people are justly entitled, instead of increasing the rates on any class of matter, we could reduce letter postage to 1 cent and establish a parcels post, permitting packages of merchandise up to 25 pounds to pass through the mails at a rate not exceeding 1 cent per pound; in fact, 1 cent per pound under proper railroad rates would afford sufficient margin above cost of transportation to fully pay the expense of route agents and local handling. In proof of this I cite the following facts.

Express companies pay to the railroad companies 40 per cent of the rates, retaining 60 per cent to pay their route agents and all local expenses of handling and conducting their business. We know our express companies are competing with the Government and carrying a large portion of this 1-cent per pound mail matter. They are carrying this mail matter from New York to Chicago and all intermediate points and delivering the same at the door of the consignee for 1 cent per pound. We find the combined Adams and Southern Express Company carrying this second-class mail matter to all points between the west line of Pennsylvania and the Pacific coast at 1 cent per pound; we find them making the same rate throughout all the country east of this line and from Eastport, Me., to Charleston, S. C.

These facts clearly prove that we ought to have a uniform rate of mail transportation over all railroads not exceeding one-half cent per pound. The average distance that each package of mail is carried, as estimated by two Postmasters-General, is less than 350 miles. In most cases we put our mail on the car, furnish an agent to handle and care for it while in transit, and take it from the car without any cost to the railroad company. Fifty cents per hundred pounds will cover all of their expenses and leave them a handsome margin. But instead of getting this rate, Mr. Speaker, we find that we are paying an average cost of 8 cents per pound for transportation and handling of our mail. Most of this enormous expense goes in extortionate rates paid to the railroad companies. I am not blaming the Postmaster-General alone for this, but I do blame Congress, for we have the power and it is our duty to meet this problem and see that justice is done the people.

Postmaster-General Vilas, in urging this responsible duty upon Congress, said:

The difficulties of solving this problem do not diminish with the lapse of time. They steadily increase. The peril to the public is not lessening, but augments yearly. There must be legislation adapted to the conditions or this wretched system, with its inequalities, its injustice, unnecessary expenditure, irritating complications, and risk of signal disaster, must remain a reproach to the Department until some serious misfortune awakens decisive action.

On November 26, 1887, Postmaster-General Vilas stated to Congress that the 432 postal cars then in use could be bought or their duplicates manufactured for $1,600,000; yet he stated that the Government was paying for the mere use of these cars a rental each year of $1,881,580, and that the railroad companies were then demanding for the next year $2,000,000 for the use of these cars; that one line of road was receiving $59,037.75 for the use of four cars which could be built in the best modern style for less than $17,500, and that in addition to the rent paid for the use of these four cars the Government paid the full weight for transportation, amounting in this case to $504,573.69 annually. Mr. Vilas then estimated that if the Government would furnish its own postal cars it would realize a net saving of $1,500,000 per year at that time. This amount would be much larger now, as the number of cars have greatly increased.

But, Mr. Speaker, instead of Congressional action to correct these extortionate charges for our railroad mail service our committee brings in this bill, which proposes to increase the rates of postage upon our people and turn over their money to the railroad and express companies. This railroad problem is an evil of such magnitude that the people of the nation will be compelled to deal with it, and, in my judgment, the patience of the public is about exhausted. If Congress will do nothing, the people will by electing new men who will serve the true interests of the people instead of truckling, as this Congress is doing, to the dominating power of these transportation companies and all other trusts and combines.

In speaking of this same matter Senator Gorman stated in the Senate in February, 1897, that—

The great power of these corporations, who control everything, who are powerful to make and unmake public men, is so omnipotent that no executive officer has been found in the last twelve years, except in the single case of Postmaster-General Vilas, who has attempted to reduce the compensation for mail transportation, and within six months after he had left the Department every economy which he introduced had been wiped away, and the railroads received not only what they had before, but their compensation was increased, and never during my long service in this body, except in this one instance, have I known a Postmaster-General who had made a bona fide effort to control this railroad extortion.

Another abuse by these transportation companies to which I call attention is the practice of padding the mails during the weighing season. We find that evidence has been adduced proving that during the quadrennial weighing season of March, 1889, upon the Seaboard Air Line from Portsmouth, Va., to Atlanta, Ga., 300 sacks of documents with Senators' and Representatives' franks upon them were sent to various places in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. The sacks weighed from 100 to 125 pounds each, and the railroad agents had slips of paper with franks of Senators and Representatives which they evidently used without authority, and kept this mail going over the road so as to be weighed repeatedly. It was also proven that great piles of newspapers were bought and kept going from place to place for weeks for the sole purpose of being weighed fraudulently, as the weight at that time would establish the weight for four years, thus repeating this steal forty-eight times.

Hon. William L. Wilson, Postmaster-General, turned this case over to United States Attorney-General Harmon to prosecute these railroad officials. However, they were strong enough to prevent prosecution. About this time the Post-Office Committee of the Senate made some inquiries which developed the fact that the then Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Nelson, immediately before his appointment, held the official capacity of superintendent of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad, and it was also proven that his predecessor, J. Lowery Bell, was traffic manager of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. These facts, Mr. Speaker, show the utter helplessness of the people in dealing with these railroad companies while our railroads are owned by private corporations.

The people are seriously studying this transportation problem, not only in its relation to their mails but in all freight, express, and passenger traffic. There is a rapidly increasing army of people throughout the nation who believe the only remedy possible is that set forth in the platform of the People's Party, "Government ownership and operation of all railroads." I am one who shares in this belief, and in response to this sentiment, with an honest desire to initiate the work of acquiring a system of Government railroads, I offered a few moments ago, as a substitute for section 1 of this bill, the following amendment:

That in case the Postmaster-General can not in all cases hereafter make contracts with the railroad companies to carry all mail within the United States at an average rate not exceeding 1 cent per pound, he shall immediately take steps to provide one line of Government railroads to connect each and every railroad post-office throughout the United States, said railroads to be secured by condemnation and purchase, under the right of eminent domain, or by constructing new lines: Provided, That in no case of purchase shall the price paid be greater than it would cost to construct the road. That the Postmaster-General shall draw upon the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time for the necessary money to purchase or construct such railroad, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to prepare, issue, and pay out on said drafts of the Postmaster-General a sufficient amount of full legal-tender Treasury notes, said notes to be redeemable only in payment of all claims and taxes due the United States Government: Provided further, That as fast as lines of railroads shall be acquired under this act the same shall be operated by the Postmaster-General in carrying mail, express, freight, and passengers at such uniform rates to all as will defray the cost of maintaining and operating said roads.

The Clerk had scarcely finished reading this amendment, which I offered in good faith, when Mr. HILL, of Connecticut, an advocate of the gold standard, raised the point of order against the amendment, claiming it was not germane. The point of order was promptly sustained by the Speaker, and the amendment was ruled out. I was not permitted to discuss the point of order, and will only say here that in my judgment the amendment is germane to this bill; and if not to the bill, it most certainly is germane to the duty of Congress and to our mail service. Its going out on a point of order is but another of many proofs that the rules adopted by the Republican majority here are like their laws, unfair and deliberately intended to defeat justice, while they carefully shield the great corporations engaged in plundering the people upon every hand.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard the statement that officials of some of the transportation companies are urging members of this House to vote for this bill. It is clearly to their interest to keep up the rates of postage, as this not only enables them to maintain their overcharges for carrying the mails, but high postage enables the railroad and express companies to overcharge the people on this mail matter, if sent by freight or express. The moment this bill becomes law these carriers will advance their rates on all matter affected by this bill.

My amendment provides the necessary money for purchase, construction, and operation of one line of road to each post-office now on the line of any railroad in the nation, this money to be issued by the people's Government, a full legal tender and receivable by the Government for all dues and taxes. This would provide the people with money to do all business on a cash basis and free them from borrowing of the banks, while at the same time abolishing the necessity for Government bonds and gold redemptions. The only proper limit to the volume of such money should be the business demands of the people, based on the total quantities of all property in the nation.

But, Mr. Speaker, such a money system would free the people from paying tribute to bankers and coupon clippers, just as Government railroads would free them from paying tribute to all transportation companies; hence the objection of our gold-standard advocates, who are ever against the people.

Mr. Speaker, we will never get through with this fight until the people, by and through their Government, shall own and operate all the railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines. We have tampered with this question of regulating rates long enough; there is but one way, and that is public ownership.

If this Congress will do nothing whatever in this direction, the people will in the near future send a Congress to these halls that will do something in a practical way for their relief. As an indication of what the people are thinking and doing all along these lines, I will offer here a statement of what one of the great States of this Union is doing in the matter of investigating this and other great problems affecting public interests. I find this article as a recent editorial in the North American, one of the great dailies of this nation, published in Philadelphia. I will read it:

IN THE ANTIPODES.

State Senator Bucklin, of Colorado, who has just returned from Australasia, where he has been investigating the colonial tax system by authority of the Colorado legislature, has brought back an interesting budget of information. He finds that New Zealand is steadily moving in the direction of the single tax. Local option in taxation prevails there, and one district after another is putting its taxes on land values. The advanced social legislation in New Zealand on various lines is so popular that the progressive party has remained in power through several elections, and now is almost without opposition. There are no tramps and no visible destitution in the colony. Land speculation has been killed. Employment is more assured than with us, living expenses are less, and life is "less strenuous and exhausting."

In all the Australian colonies, of course, the governments own the railroads and telegraphs. There is equal service for all, and trusts do not have the assistance of transportation systems in crushing out competitors. There is no disposition anywhere to return to private ownership. On the contrary, the few remaining private roads are going into the possession of the public.

When Senator Bucklin landed at Bluff, on the extreme southern point of the South Island of New Zealand, he sent a telegram to Auckland, 1,100 miles, for sixpence. The message had to go for a considerable part of its journey through a rough and thinly populated country, and it had to travel 50 miles or more by cable.

When Mr. Bucklin got to San Francisco he sent a message to his wife in Colorado, about the same distance, and the cost was 75 cents—just six and a half times the New Zealand rate. The dispatch went by land, over a route that was carrying an immense amount of through business, which was lacking in New Zealand, and the cost of transmitting it must have been much less than in the antipodes.

New Zealand and Colorado have a good deal in common. The women vote in both, for one thing. Perhaps when Mr. Bucklin's report is read Colorado may introduce some more New Zealand experiments in this country.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that one of the greatest States of this Union has, by act of its legislature, sent one of its senators to the opposite side of the earth to study these great problems is significant of the trend of the public mind on these great questions. The people are waking up all over the nation; there is a growing determination to use the government as the adequate and proper power to free the toiling masses from this eternal tribute to transportation lords, money lords, landlords, and trust lords of every kind. The men now on this floor who sneer at these warnings and propositions will soon be called to vacate their seats. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to read a telegram which I have just received from the leading agricultural paper of Ohio and one of the leading agricultural papers in the United States:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, March 22, 1900

Hon. T. E. BURTON, House of Representatives:

Our hundred thousand subscribers ask you to support the Loud bill.

THE OHIO FARMER.

I can not comprehend how any member of this House who favors economy in public expenditures or is opposed to special privileges can oppose this bill. According to the best estimates which can be made, the passage of this bill will save $20,000,000 per annum to the Treasury of the United States. This is a kind of special privilege for which there is no possible justification.

It is high time for us to begin to watch special privileges which have grown up under laws, in themselves not objectionable, but which are subject to such abuses that they redound to the interest of the few and against the interest of the many. We hear a great deal said about the classes against the masses. If there is any existing system that favors the classes, it is the system which has grown up and which this bill seeks to destroy. Let no man come in here and say——

Mr. LENTZ. Will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. No, I can not yield; I have only a few minutes. Let no man come in here and say he is opposed to class legislation and favor the defeat of this bill.

In my experience in this House there has been no measure which has been subjected to so much misinformation, and I may say misrepresentation, as this bill under consideration. It has been said that it aims at the country newspaper. Gentlemen on the floor who represent city districts regard with the utmost care the interests of the country newspaper, but it is a plain business proposition that this bill will help the country newspaper. The sample copies are provided for in a number sufficient for them; and it will bring to them thousands of dollars of advertising now possessed by blanket sheets, published in some great center, which go all over the country.

It is said that it discriminates against the reprints of valuable books. What is the fact about that? What is the invariable consequence when you grant a special privilege? That the more unscrupulous will derive the greatest advantage from that privilege. We will have, and we have been having, an ounce of good literature to many pounds of trash. We have heard a great deal about the youth of the country and how they need education. Who placed the responsibility of educating the youth of this country on the publishers of such publications as Beadle's dime novels? How much are the youth of this country going to be benefited by the 2 tons of the publication known as "Sapho" that were mailed in New York City a few days ago? It is said that the news dealer should have the privilege of sending back to the news agents, representing a publisher, that which is sent out to him and which he could not sell.

Now, there may be some justification for a lower postal rate on literature which the people do read, but what earthly justification is there for giving special rates on what they do not read? We all know what the practice is—a hundred copies of a periodical, or a thousand, can be sent to some news agent, and he sells but a few of them; then they are sent to the next news agent, and then to the next city, and then, perhaps, back to the original agent; then he may send them out again. While there may be some little hardship imposed on the news dealer by the adoption of this bill, it is in the line of economy and reform.

There is a general fact of great importance involved in the disposition of this bill. I have always noticed that there is a great degree of inertia in adopting any measure that points toward reform. Especially is that true when it aims at any special privilege enjoyed. Those who get their hands into the public Treasury intrench themselves like an army prepared for battle; they claim to be very sensitive as to the rights of the people and raise the cry that there is some monopoly favoring the bill which they for their own selfish purposes want to defeat. Do not let this issue be befogged by saying it is a measure framed for the benefit of the express companies and railroads. It is nothing of the kind. I would like to see a reduction and readjustment in the compensation paid to railroads for carrying the mails, but the two propositions are distinct. Let us classify the mail matter sent out, and make the rates just in the pay for the different kinds or classes and just to the whole people, and in a separate bill we can take up the other question as to rates to be paid to transportation companies.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] at this time. So far as he has made any points they are fully covered by gentlemen in the general debate. Assuming that these people know best what they want, I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read the resolution from the Pacific Coast Women's Press Association, and see what they think about the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, March 12, 1900.

To the Senate and Representatives in Congress assembled:

The Pacific Coast Women's Press Association, at a regular business meeting, held in San Francisco on March 12, 1900, adopted the following:

"Whereas, having carefully considered House bill 6071, which is 'A bill to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter,' we find said bill opposed to our true interests, unjust to similar organizations throughout the United States, and to the public generally: Therefore,

"Resolved, That we earnestly and respectfully pray the members of both Houses of Congress to use their best efforts to prevent the passage of said House bill 6071."

(MRS.) MARIA FREEMAN GRAY,
Chairman of Committee, P. C. W. P. A.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I presume that the gentleman from Ohio would not take issue with the ladies under the circumstances. [Laughter.] I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and have read a telegram from the editor of the Manufacturers' Record, in Baltimore, Md.

The Clerk read as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., March 22, 1900.

Hon. PETER J. OTEY, Washington:

I trust you can see your way clear to strongly oppose the Loud bill. It seems to me an exceedingly unwise measure and decidedly against the interests of the South, and, in fact, of all country districts. There are many unanswerable objections against it.

RICHARD H. EDMONDS,
Editor Manufacturers' Record.

Mr. MOON. That is a voice from Maryland. Now I desire to pass to the Clerk, to be read also, a letter from Des Moines, Iowa. This letter was written to the Hon. SMITH MCPHERSON, a copy of which has been sent to me, and I desire to have it read to the House. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

HIGHLAND PARK COLLEGE,
Des Moines, Iowa, March 15, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: Please accept thanks for kindness in sending me copy of House bill No. 6071, known as the Loud bill, and the report of the committee thereon.

I am also in receipt of yours of the 3d, relative to said bill, and beg to say that I have received no communication from any Eastern literary bureau on this subject, and have written to yourself and other Iowa members because of newspaper mention of the favorable consideration of the bill by the committee.

You certainly are in error in your suggestion that the bill will not affect the colleges of the country. Prior to the passage of the act of July 16, 1894, the colleges were unable to make their publications second-class matter for two reasons: First, the purposes of the publications were largely to advertise the institutions, their advantages, etc., to awaken an educational desire and spirit in those receiving the same. The advertising character was not consistent with the theory of the old law. Second, from the very nature of the work to be accomplished a list of regular subscribers can not be had because these publications are not sent to subscribers. Indeed, the benefit to the institution is secured and the cause of education advanced most if each issue reaches a new class of prospective students.

The act of 1894 extended the law as to second-class matter to the publications by benevolent or fraternal societies, trades unions, and "regularly incorporated institutions of learning," etc. The wording of the present law is, "under the auspices of benevolent or fraternal societies, trades unions, or orders organized under the lodge system," etc., but leaves out "regularly incorporated institutions of learning." There are other publications included in the act of 1894, but I have quoted sufficient for my present purpose. The contention that college publications would not be excluded by this bill, it seems to me, can not be sustained.

I suppose that it is not necessary for me to show that great harm will result to these institutions if their publications are excluded. That follows as a matter of course. My understanding is that colleges, great and small, avail themselves of these privileges; but if they do not, that is no reason for a repeal of the law. They have the privilege extended, and if not exercised no expense is incurred by the Government on their account. I have personal knowledge of use being made of the privilege by the State universities of Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and by many other institutions of learning in the Mississippi Valley.

I have read with much interest the committee's report and the several Postmaster-Generals' reports embraced therein, and call your attention to the fact that no fact is stated in either of the reports that suggests the propriety or necessity of excluding educational institutions. These reports are all of the same tenor, and the reasons for the present bill are epitomized by Postmaster-General Smith (page 5 of committee's report) as follows: "The first is the paper-covered books put out under pretense of being serial publications." Of this he says, "Their consecutive numbering is a travesty; their issuance at 'stated intervals' a parody; their 'subscription list' a fiction. * * * The second abuse is connected with the advertising 'house organ' and the so-called 'trade journal.' * * * The third abuse grows out of the privilege of sample copies. * * * The simple statement of these great and palpable abuses ought to be sufficient argument for their prompt reform." The Postmaster-General points out that these abuses produce the deficit in second-class matter.

You will observe that college publications are not included in the abuses of the law. Other portions of the postal laws make these things possible. There is no chance for abuse of the mails in the use of college publications. The law is definite and certain as to who may have the privilege. The use, however extensive, is for the public good. The reading of college literature by every young man and woman would greatly increase the attendance at all of the colleges of the country.

Your attention is also called to the fact that the bill retains fraternal societies (under which mutual insurance companies are admitted) and labor unions, but excludes colleges. Can any reason be assigned for this discrimination?

It seems to me that the bill ought to be amended by inserting "a regularly incorporated institution of learning" after the word "by" in the third line of section 4, and the word "such" in the last line of said section.

Yours, very respectfully,

C. C. REARICK.

Hon. SMITH MCPHERSON,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. MOON. I have had that letter read in order that I might be fair to gentlemen on the other side on the subject of this amendment. It is, I think, a very intelligent statement of the case. I send to the Clerk also to be read a telegram received today by Hon. J. K. P. HALL, a member of this House, from the legislative committee of the Pennsylvania State Grange.

HARRISBURG, PA., March 22, 1900.

Hon. J. K. P. HALL, M. C., Washington:

Please present to Congress our protest against the passage of the Loud postal bill. It affects unfavorably weekly agricultural, fraternal, and secular newspapers.

W. F. HILL,
WM. T. CREASY,
LEONARD RHONE,
GEO. G. HUTCHINSON,
Legislative Committee of Pennsylvania State Grange.

Mr. MOON. Hon. B. F. SPALDING, of North Dakota, has sent to me a telegram which I desire to be read to the House. I believe it is from the publishers of the Republican organ of North Dakota.

BISMARCK, N. DAK., March 22, 1900.

Hon. B. F. SPALDING, Washington:

This being campaign year, we need the extra circulation of papers. We believe the Loud bill detrimental in many ways. Hope you can conclude to vote against it.

M. H. JEWELL,
R. N. STEVENS,
Publishers Bismarck Daily Tribune.

Mr. MOON. I have also another telegram, just received, which I ask may be read.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON. Then I ask unanimous consent that this telegram be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The telegram is as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., March 22, 1900.

Hon. FRANK C. WACHTER,
House of Representatives, Washington:

I trust you can see your way clear to strongly oppose the Loud bill. It seems to me to be an exceedingly unwise measure, and decidedly against the interests of the South, and, in fact, of all country districts. There are many unanswerable objections against it.

RICHARD H. EDMONDS,
Editor Manufacturers' Record.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Tennessee has been having read some extracts and communications, I would like to send to the Clerk's desk and have read, first, an extract from the Journal and Messenger, the great organ of the Baptist Association of the United States, and following that an editorial from the Chicago Chronicle and another from the Chicago Times-Herald.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Are those daily or weekly papers?

Mr. BROMWELL. The two Chicago papers are dailies; the other is a weekly.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Journal and Messenger.]

The publishers of advertising sheets and paper-covered books are stooping to every means to defeat the Loud bill. Many circulars come to this office, some of which authors are ashamed to own, and which they sign "Publishers' Committee," or anything that comes handy. Just now they say that the "country publisher" will be the great sufferer. As a matter of fact, all papers are sent free in the county in which they are published. We believe the county papers are entitled to this protection, and the law in this respect will never be changed.

The frantic cry of the New York publishers of objectionable literature, that if they are compelled to pay book postage, Congress will at once take away the privilege of free postage from country papers, will deceive nobody. If the Post-Office Department is once made self-sustaining, there will be even less reason for requiring country papers to pay postage. Another silly argument is that the Government ought to lose on the Post-Office Department for the benefit of the people. Even if this were true, it would be more reasonable to reduce letter postage to 1 cent, which would probably cover its cost, and to make publishers of advertising sheets pay the cost of carriage.

If the Government is to lose in the Post-Office Department, why should it charge letters more than necessary for the sake of giving a bonus to a big publishing house in sending out tons of paper-covered books or to give low postage to some advertising sheet which makes its profits by publishing fraudulent advertisements? These publishers own a number of Congressmen, as was shown in speeches when the Loud bill was up before.

The writer of one of these numerous circulars, which is sent to every newspaper office in the land, is driven to the argument that the Loud post-office bill would model our system after that of monarchical countries. We doubt if a man who takes American people for fools will succeed in the end. The principles which should govern the business of a postal department are the same the world over. Neither republican France nor monarchical Germany allows private publishers to send their paper-covered books through the mails at a nominal price.

[From the Chicago Chronicle.]

The Chronicle is in receipt of a circular letter from a publisher and bookseller of New York, with an accompanying remonstrance against the passage of the Loud bill to prevent the carrying of all sorts of literary merchandise through the mails at newspaper rates.

The Chronicle is not in the business of raking chestnuts out of the fire for the benefit of publishers of questionable literature. Its position on this question of giving special postal rates to pet classes is clearly defined. It is opposed to giving special rates or gratuitous service to any class of people or any line of business.

Publishing by private individuals, firms, or corporations is not a public business. Nor is it a business which has any claims whatever upon charity, public or private. It is a business carried on for gain, and is no more entitled to aid at the public expense than is the grocer's business or the butcher's business. If anybody wants to have his merchandise carried by mail, whether his merchandise consists of books, beets, or newspapers, let him pay for the service what it is worth. It is not the business of the Government to render gratuitous service to favored persons and make the taxpayers foot the bills.

The principle involved is perfectly simple. Any statesman with the sense of a serpent and the pluck of a canary bird can see it and apply it. There is no good reason why a statesman from the rural districts should be afraid of the magnate of the paste pot, or why a statesman from the city should stand in dread of the displeasure of the man who wants to send cheap and vile literature through the mails at next to deadhead rates. The Loud bill is all right as far as it goes. The trouble with it is that it does not go far enough.

[From the Chicago Times-Herald.]

It is interesting to note the character and source of the protests that are being sent to Washington against the passage of the Loud bill, which proposes to correct the abuses of second-class mail rates. These protests, without exception, are from the various interests that have profited by having the Government haul their product at pound rates in violation of the plain intent of the postal laws.

The special interests that have procured a misapplication of second-class mail rates for the benefit of their own commodities are setting up all sorts of ridiculous pleas in behalf of the "dissemination of popular intelligence" in order to keep Congress from removing this costly burden from the mails.

The people of the United States ought to understand that the real cause of the postal deficit is found in the enormous wrongs which have grown up in the perversion and abuse of the privilege accorded to second-class matter. If any Congressman is in doubt as to the real cause of this deficit, let him read the last official report of Postmaster-General Smith. Commenting upon the flagrant abuses of second-class mail rates, he says:

"For this costly abuse, which drags on the Department and weighs down the service, trammels its power and means of effective advancement in every direction. It involves a sheer wanton waste of $20,000,000 or upward a year. The postal deficit for the current year (1899) is $6,610,776. But for this wrongful application of the second-class rate, instead of a deficit there would be a clear surplus of many millions. This misapplication of a legitimate public object to strictly personal ends not only entails a large loss and taxes all the people for the benefit of a few, but it cripples the Department and obstructs needed improvements.

"The wrongs which have proved so injurious were never contemplated by Congress. They are wholly outside the intent of the law. In the reform which is suggested (in the Loud bill) it is not proposed to restrict the privileges of legitimate publications or to modify the design of the law, but only to bring back its application to its original and just scope."

The Postmaster-General estimates the amount of matter wrongfully transmitted at the pound rate last year at 176,351,613 pounds. If this had paid the average third-class rate, as the law intended, there would have been a surplus in the Post-Office Department in 1899 amounting to $17,637,570. And yet the beneficiaries of this costly abuse are endeavoring to persuade Congress that a loss of $20,000,000 revenue through such abuse is not the real cause of a deficit of $6,610,776.

They are suggesting all sorts of remedies for this deficit except the real and rational one. They urge Congress to cut down the pay for the transportation of the mails on the contention that freight rates and passenger rates have declined while the mail rates have remained stationary. As a matter of fact, any comparison between freight rates and mail rates is absurd.

Hauling the United States mails is a vastly different proposition from hauling corn and cattle. The railway company can not fill a car to the roof with mail as it fills it with corn. Each car is a completely equipped traveling post-office, and the demand of the business interests for distribution is such that only about 2 tons of mail can be carried in one car.

But, even though a comparison were allowable, the contention that there has been no reduction in the rates for hauling the mails is fallacious and is based upon ignorance of the law governing such compensation. It was shown by Professor Adams in his testimony before the postal commission that through "the natural working of the law" the pay for transportation of the mails has declined from 26 cents per ton per mile in 1873 to 12.5 cents per ton per mile in 1898, a drop of 50 per cent.

The law of mail pay to railroads changes automatically, arbitrarily, and radically with increase of the number of pieces of mail required to be handled and corresponding increase of weight. The law, in fact, secures to the Government a constantly falling rate as transactions increase.

The testimony of the Postmaster-General as to the real cause of the postal deficits should outweigh the specious pleadings of those who have profited by the enormous abuses of second-class rates. The first step in the direction of wiping out the deficit is the passage of the Loud bill.

Before the reading of the foregoing was concluded,

The SPEAKER said: The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has expired.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask for additional time sufficient to allow the reading of this article to be finished. There is a good deal of meat in it, and I hope gentlemen will give it their attention.

Mr. MOON. We do not know how long the article is.

Mr. BROMWELL. I think it will not take more than about three minutes to finish the reading.

Mr. MOON. All right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the request.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the article from the Chicago Times-Herald, but was interrupted by Mr. CUMMINGS, who said: May I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] a question? What paper is this editorial from?

Mr. BROMWELL. The Chicago Times-Herald.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Is that the paper which some years ago printed an account of an execution and headed it "Jerked to Jesus?"

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not know anything about what may have been published in this paper some years ago——

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think that is the paper. It was the Chicago Times.

Mr. BROMWELL. But I hope the reading of this editorial will be continued without interruption.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BROMWELL. I understand that; but I was going to ask for two minutes to call the attention of the House to newspaper comments favorable to this bill to the number of 85 leading newspapers of the United States, representing very nearly every State, if not every State, of the Union. I ask permission that a list of these papers be published in the RECORD in connection with the extracts just read—only the names of the papers.

There was no objection.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter from the chancellor of the New York University, reading as follows:

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY, UNIVERSITY HEIGHTS,
New York, March 19, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: Please favor the cause of colleges, schools, and general education by opposing the Loud bill (H. R. 6071) or causing it to be amended so that college and school publications may still be sent through the post-office as second-class matter. As a worker for education for a generation, I know that such periodicals are very useful and are seldom or never self-supporting, but are maintained by students as a rule at considerable cost. It is very unwise for the Government to discourage such papers when it is so liberal in its postage rules in various other directions.

Very truly, yours,

HENRY M. MACCRACKEN, Chancellor.

Hon. A. J. CUMMINGS,
House of Representatives.

I have also the following letter from R. W. Massey, president of the Massey Business Colleges, of Columbus, Ga.:

COLUMBUS, GA., March 9, 1900.

DEAR SIR: I would respectfully call your attention to the inclosed circular letter, which refers to the Loud bill. Should this bill pass in its present form, it would strike a severe blow at the cause of education. We believe that our worthy educational institutions are certainly entitled to the same privileges granted to trades unions and lodges.

Please consider the excellent reasons stated in the circular letter.

Very truly, yours,

R. W. MASSEY,
President Massey Colleges.

Hon. A. J. CUMMINGS,
Washington, D. C.

An appeal to friends of education—The Loud bill (H. R. 6071) strikes a blow at the cause of education.

To Members of Congress.

GENTLEMEN: Permit me to call your attention to a matter of great concern to the educational interests of the United States. On the 20th instant the Loud bill (H. R. 6071) comes before your honorable body. Section 7 of this bill repeals the Manderson-Hainer act absolutely, while section 4 protects benevolent and fraternal societies, trade unions and lodges, to the exclusion of the school and other beneficiaries of the act of July, 1894.

This is a great injustice to educational institutions, and one I am sure should be prevented. The bill should be amended so as to give educational institutions the same privileges that are granted benevolent or fraternal societies, trade unions, and lodges.

I call your earnest attention to the following facts:

1. Pound-rate postage exists to facilitate the spread of intelligence among the people. It gives the public cheaper newspapers, and if it is accorded to the schools it will tend to popularize and cheapen education.

2. Every good school, public or private, is distinctly beneficial to the general public. The school paper furthers the interests of the school, and, therefore, of the general public. It is a potent influence in persuading our young people to become educated. It is not a self-supporting private enterprise, as is the ordinary newspaper; it is an adjunct of the school and a part of the school's work. It, therefore, does not appeal to support through personal subscriptions, and could not, as a rule, be thus supported. It asks for the cheap mailing privilege in behalf of its educational mission, and the fact that it is issued to the public gratis all the more entitles it to this privilege.

3. Mr. LOUD urges that all periodicals, school papers along with the rest, should be required to have regular paid subscribers; but he departs from this rule in the case of trades unions and lodges. Upon what theory of policy or justice does he grant the cheap mailing privilege to these organizations and not to the schools? Is not a school with its hundreds of students quite as much a public enterprise as is a lodge or an association of carpenters or tailors? Under Mr. LOUD'S proposed measure, an organization of bartenders, or distillers, or cigar makers can distribute their literature through the mails at pound rates, while a college or academy would have to pay the Government twenty times as much for the privilege of sending the school literature to its students and patrons. Is not such discrimination a direct blow at the educational cause?

4. Nearly all school periodicals have local circulation only, being distributed in the immediate vicinity of the school. The cost of distribution is therefore a mere bagatelle as compared with the cost of mailing papers which go to all parts of the country. In nearly all cases the charge of 1 cent per pound actually pays the Government the full cost of transmission. In the case of the country weekly newspaper, the Government effects this local transmission through the mail free. Under these circumstances, to charge the schools 1 cent per copy, or more than 20 cents per pound, is to burden the school with a tax as unjust as it is impolitic. If the Government transmits the country newspaper free, should it not at least carry the school paper at actual cost? It transmits the Police Gazette and all other classes of immoral and sensational publications at pound rates under circumstances that cause a direct loss to the postal revenues of millions of dollars annually, yet Mr. LOUD'S proposed bill refuses to carry educational literature at cost, and proposes to tax our worthy institutions of education, while it pays a bonus to thousands of sensational and advertising sheets that, so far from benefiting the public, are positively harmful in their influence.

5. The schools that issue periodicals in the interests of their educational work are, for the most part, the schools of the common people, situated in small cities and villages, and devoted to supplementing the work of the public schools with more advanced courses of general or special education. They are attended by students who can not afford to attend distant colleges or universities. They consist mainly of academies, normal schools, industrial and business schools, etc. Their rates of tuition are low, and they are not backed by large endowments or public funds. They afford to the farmer or mechanic an opportunity of giving his children technical or preparatory training near at home and at a moderate cost. Surely it is not unreasonable to ask that the Government foster these worthy popular schools to the extent of transmitting their periodicals through the mails at cost.

6. But it is urged that if the pound-rate privilege be allowed to the schools, this privilege will be abused by certain schools that will take advantage of it to circulate advertising matter in no way related to education. In reply to this it may be said that the objection is equally pertinent in the case of periodicals issued by lodges, etc., and of the general newspaper itself. It would be an easy matter to insert a clause in the law restricting the advertising functions of the school paper and other periodicals; but this objection has never been raised in the case of the country newspaper, which often consists almost wholly of advertisements, but which, as before stated, is transmitted through the mails entirely free of charge. Why, then, should this advertising bugaboo be raised up in the case of the school paper?

7. In all the reports of Postmasters-General, and in all the literature sent out by the advocates of the Loud bill, it has not once been charged that the schools have anywhere been guilty of abusing the pound-rate privilege accorded to them through the wise and beneficent act of 1894. We therefore urge that the present attempt to debar them from this privilege is unwarranted, unwise, and entirely unsupported by public sentiment, which is everywhere favorable to the largest and most liberal encouragement of educational interests.

Yours, truly,

RICHARD W. MASSEY.

Now, in reply to what some gentleman has said about the fact that a ton of an edition of Sapho had recently been sent through the mails from the city of New York, I want to say that you of Congress have fastened upon New York City Anthony Comstock, a well-known and respected official, whose duty it is, if this book is pernicious and meretricious in its tendency, to see that its sale is stopped. It is not necessary to pass the Loud bill to do this. You can do it now under the law. I see the performance of Sapho by Olga Nethersole is stopped, and if this is right, the same power invoked might stop the sale of the book. If you favor the Loud bill, why do you not pass a bill preventing all theatrical exhibitions whatever, because a police justice says Olga Nethersole has overstepped the bounds? [Laughter.] I protest against punishing honest men, who are giving us cheap literature under the law as it now stands, because some publisher of pernicious literature violates the law and takes advantage of this second-class rate. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take up the time of the House, but intended simply to content myself with voting for this measure, but after it has been so vigorously and viciously attacked I feel I owe it to myself as a member of the committee to go unequivocally on record in regard to the measure.

I want to say that I favor this measure, for one reason, because every man in an official position, Democrat or Republican, who has ever had occasion to give proper consideration to the law, has recommended it to Congress. And I submit, gentlemen, that five Postmasters-General, of all parties, who have given careful study to the extent of from two to four years, are entitled to at least as much consideration as the gentlemen who have rushed into opposition because they have received a protest from some paper or commercial school.

I favor the bill further, Mr. Speaker, because three members of this House, appointed upon a postal commission, men whose superiors in industry, in ability, and in integrity do not sit upon this floor, after two years' study of this question, are each and all, Democrat and Republicans, in favor of the bill. And I submit, again, they are entitled to as much credit and weight and authority as the men who have jumped into opposition to the measure without knowing what it contains, as is proven by the speeches that have been made here against it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the real opposition to the bill was stated by a distinguished gentleman of this House the other day in these words. He said:

> I have been now about a month explaining my vote on the Puerto Rican bill, and I am not going to cast another vote which I have got to explain, and therefore I will vote against this measure.

Mr. CUMMINGS. He is sound.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, he is unsound. And we do not propose that the men who vote for this measure shall have a monopoly of explanations. When gentlemen go back to the man who is following the plow or pushing the plane and tell him that the loss on carrying and handling the fake advertising sheets and fraudulent serials is more than twenty-five millions a year, which sum must be gathered from the taxpayer for the benefit of these favored publishers, and that they voted for the continuation of such a policy, they will find opportunity for a little explaining themselves.

When gentlemen say the Post-Office Department ought to be on the same level as the War Department and the Navy Department, which means, if it means anything, to take out of the general revenues of the Government a hundred million dollars a year to carry and handle the mails, and wipe out all charges for postage, there will be another opportunity for explanation. The taxpayer will remember the Government tax is on our consumption and the poor man pays as much as the rich; and when you say to him that he ought to pay as much, and in making up the deficit he does pay as much, as the great business house in Chicago that mails 5,000 letters a day, I want to say that the man who votes against this bill has got to do some explaining himself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just one other question. My time is so limited I can not attempt a connected argument. The great cry on this floor has been that this bill would stop the sending of the serial to the poor boy in the country, and they say that that will stop a raft of excellent literature; and it would, if it stopped it. It will also stop a raft that is not so good.

But how does the serial get to the poor boy in the country today? It gets there by printing a fraud on the back of the publication and filing a false affidavit with the Postmaster-General. That is according to the Postmaster-General's own statement.

Now, they say that this is for the benefit of the poor boy, and the discrimination is made in favor of unbound books because they are purchased by the poor. I assert that by taking advantage of this abuse of the mails the publishers are enabled to sell their ephemeral works at enormous prices. You have no right to discriminate against a well-bound book to make a market for the paper back. Here is a novel, The Fastest Boy in New York, published in a serial containing The Ubiquitous Yank and The Greatest Detective of the Italian Quarter, and so forth. That sells for 25 cents. How can it sell at that? Because by putting a falsehood on the back and filing another at the Department it can go at the pound rate.

There is a work of Alexandre Dumas, printed on much better paper, with better type, and in permanent form, with a permanent binding; that sells for 15 cents, and it can not go through the mails at the pound rate because it is put up in decent shape. Now, gentlemen, do you want to stand for that kind of legislation?

Here is one of the Beadle series, The Velvet Hand; or, the Iron Grip of Injun Dick. [Laughter.] That can go through the mails because the publisher swore he had a list of subscribers, which the Postmaster-General says in most cases is a false statement, and because the publisher stuck on top of it a serial number. That sells to the poor boy for 10 cents, and finds a market because it is favored in the mails.

There is Rob Roy in permanent form; that sells for 15 cents, and it can not go through the mails because the publisher would not print one falsehood on it and swear to another, and because it has got a good back on it. [Applause.] Do gentlemen on this side of the House want to stand for that kind of legislation? I say the man who votes against this bill has got all the explaining to do.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COWHERD. I have only five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. I will ask the House to give me five minutes more.

Mr. STEELE. Make it ten minutes.

Mr. COWHERD. I only care for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks that he have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIDGELY. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COWHERD. For a question; yes.

Mr. RIDGELY. The question is, Does not the law as it now stands rule out this very literature?

Mr. COWHERD. The law rules out this literature as it now stands, and the law rules out that literature as it now stands until you put a falsehood on the back of it and file another in the Department.

The law intended to admit what? It intended to admit newspapers, it intended to admit periodicals, such as magazines, and the framers of it evidently thought they were describing magazines when they gave the pound rate to periodicals published at certain stated intervals, numbered consecutively, issued from a known office of publication, formed of printed sheets of paper without board, cloth, leather, or substantial binding, and having a legitimate list of subscribers. Now, this book is not a periodical, it is not published at stated intervals, and, as a matter of fact, it has not a list of subscribers.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the worst thing about the prohibition law, except the fact that you can not enforce it, is that it breeds lawbreakers and liars, and one of the worst things about this postal law is that it makes men sign falsehoods and print them in order to get the advantage of the mails.

Now, there is another book that I found this morning in a bookstall here in Washington. I bought it for 5 cents. It is The Woman in White, written by Wilkie Collins, bound in good shape. That book is shut out from the mails; but the man who wants to help the poor boy, the man who is voting $25,000,000 or more a year out of the pockets of the people of the United States into the pockets of the favored publishers who are sending the protests to your home that are remailed to you; those men, if they publish that novel, publish it and put a paper back on it so that it can not last the poor boy through one reading, and then it can go through the mails, if it has a serial number at the top of it and an affidavit as to its subscription list on file in the post-office.

Mr. CUMMINGS. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. You bought that at a secondhand bookstore, did you not?

Mr. COWHERD. I did not. I bought it at what is called the Boston House, Woodward & Lothrop, down here at Eleventh and F streets, one of the biggest retail houses in town. They do not carry any secondhand stuff.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is auction stock, though.

Mr. COWHERD. No; it is not auction stock, either.

Mr. KLUTTZ. It is a bargain-counter book.

Mr. COWHERD. Whether it is a bargain-counter book or not, you can not find the day when you can not go into these bookstores and buy this kind of literature, many of the best novels, in good binding, for from 15 to 25 cents, and you shut these books out for the benefit of the poor boy and let the paper-back in, if the publisher is sufficiently depraved to perpetrate a fraud.

Mr. SNODGRASS. And you do it even if you pass this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Do you say that book can be bought for 5 cents?

Mr. COWHERD. That is what I paid for it.

Mr. SNODGRASS. You could take off the binding and reduce the weight, and then get it admitted to the mails at second-class rates.

Mr. COWHERD. Now let me answer that. If you are going to let cheap, ephemeral publications of that kind [indicating] go through the mails, if you are going to continue to tax the people for the benefit of the publisher, then by all means extend the law and let the permanent well-bound books go through the mails also. But when you do it, remember the chairman of the committee has said you increase the cost of the service, and instead of losing forty-five millions on the hauling and handling of second-class matter you will lose $100,000,000.

Mr. NEVILLE. Would you change and repeal the laws which grant liberties and privileges to the American people because some criminals violate the laws of the land?

Mr. COWHERD. Liberties and privileges of the American people! Is that a liberty or a privilege to send such publications through the mails [indicating], when every man that sends them out, with the probable exception of one firm, violates the law to get the privilege? Is the perpetration of a fraud a privilege? Under the construction it now bears, the spirit of the law is always violated; and I claim that no man can stand before the American people and sustain it.

Now, gentlemen have risen again and again and have said, Why, it does not make any difference if there is a deficit in the postal revenues. I contend that it does. I do not agree with the gentlemen that take the other side. I say the postal service is a service rendered for a fee, and as near as is practicable a man pays in proportion to the use he makes of the mails. But a deficit must be paid out of general revenues raised by taxation from all the people. It is taking money out of the pockets of the people for the benefit of the publisher of the fake advertising organ and the fraudulent serial.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEELE. I would like the gentleman to have five minutes more, so as to answer his colleagues, who seemed to be a little pressed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the time of the gentleman from Missouri be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COWHERD. I shall not use it, Mr. Speaker, as other gentlemen desire to be heard.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not object; but I think it is a little unfair to me that I should be limited to five minutes while the gentlemen on that side have as much time as they desire.

Mr. COWHERD. I do not ask it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, after having five minutes yielded to him, declines to use it.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the subject-matter of this bill is not of recent date. It has received the earnest consideration and careful scrutiny of the members of a number of Congresses. For some reason it has always failed to be enacted into law. Under these circumstances it will bear the close examination of every member of this body. My attention has been called to the bill by a large number of letters, remonstrances numerously signed, and by newspaper articles, all from the constituency I have the honor to represent.

With a very few exceptions they ask me to vote against the measure, and thus allow the present law to remain in force. Not only do these protests come from Berks and Lehigh counties, but many more come from over the United States. This has caused me to give more than a casual examination to the proposed legislation, and I will admit much has been said in favor of the bill that seemed plausible, and it was only after diligent search and a careful analysis of the arguments for and against that I reached the decision that at the present time this legislation was not needed, and the passage of this proposed curative measure might be exceedingly unwise and perhaps quite injurious to the interests of not only the people I speak for but of the general public.

Two facts have been relied upon by those who advocate its passage. First, the Postmasters-General of the United States for years have recommended a decided modification of the present laws regulating second-class mail matter, and especially the particular changes sought to be made by this proposed legislation. Second, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads are almost unanimous in their favorable recommendation—only two out of seventeen being opposed.

I have made a careful examination of the reports, with the statistics, criticisms, and recommendations of the Postmasters-General from that of Hon. William L. Wilson for the fiscal year beginning June 30, 1895, and ending June 30, 1896, and of every Postmaster-General from that time down to that of the year ending June 30, 1899, including those of Postmasters-General Gary and Smith. The report made by Postmaster-General Wilson mentions the fact that his predecessors, Bissell and Wanamaker, also took similar action and made similar recommendations.

These officials start with the premise that the mail service should be not only self-supporting but made to pay a handsome revenue. This is certainly a fair business proposition, and, if this Government would be run with an eye single to make money, would be unanswerable. It is pardonable that these ambitious gentlemen should, as they say, make a struggle to establish the mail service on a paying basis.

They seem in their reports to have forgotten two propositions, that while it might be desirable that the service should be made to pay, such a result should not be brought about at the expense of the general public, either by giving them indifferent service or by withholding from them advantages, educational and other, which are of many hundred times more value to the people than the small contribution from the general fund raised by taxation required to pay the annual deficit, as it is called.

Second. These officials seem to forget that there is another way to wipe out this annual deficit and reach the paying basis and that is by economizing in the money they pay railroads and other transportation companies, by lowering the exorbitant rates which they charge for carrying our mail matter.

Large salaries might be reduced and many other departmental expenses. For it is no secret to the people of this country that the Government employs one-third more hands and pays higher salaries than the individual for similar service.

Here let me call your attention to a noticeable fact, and that is, notwithstanding all these extravagances, the volume of mail matter carried has so greatly increased during the last five years that by June 30, 1902, the deficit will be wiped out without changing the law or without changing a single ruling of the Department, through which rulings I firmly believe most of the abuses complained of arise.

Let us examine this much-talked-of and much-lamented deficit. In 1896-97 it was $12,987,585.90; 1897-98, $9,020,905.06; 1898-99, $6,610,776.75; 1899-1900 (estimated), $4,265,888.05, and in 1900-1901 (estimated), $3,000,000.

This latter estimate is high, and on the same ratio of decrease as that in former years would not be more than $2,000,000, and in 1902 there would be a surplus.

So, if there ever was a time when the present law was a crying evil and its change a great necessity that time might have been in 1896-97, and not at this late day, when it is rapidly becoming a paying business under the present most liberal postal laws.

After a careful examination of the arguments, I am inclined to believe that the radical changes proposed by this measure, instead of shortening the time at which this service will become paying, will very considerably postpone that time, and in the meantime may cause many interests, especially those of the publishers of good, cheap literature and those whose labor is employed on it, much suffering and loss.

In changing long-established laws and customs it is generally well to go slow and make the changes gradual, so that the readjustment is but little noticeable.

You ask me on what I base this opinion, and in answer I say that it is agreed by all who know anything about the statistics of the postal service that the great paying service is that of first-class matter—letters paying 2 cents and upward.

This kind of mail is carried at a large profit. One Postmaster-General says that the average cost to carry first-class matter is 18 cents a pound. The average revenue received is 93 cents a pound, or an average profit of 75 cents a pound. Third-class matter, he states, pays its way, and there is a slight profit on fourth-class matter. If we consider for a moment and take our practical experience only, is it not true that a large number of letters are written and sent by reason of the wide distribution of second-class matter?

Remember that second-class matter is made up of newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, periodicals, all containing advertisements—and how many letters are written by reason of the information received from these advertisements? We can safely say at least one-third. Withdraw these feeders to the first-class mail matter and its profit vanishes, or much of it, and with it much of the business of the country, too.

Wants grow with knowledge. With ignorance and rigid economy comforts become few and luxuries pass entirely away.

With knowledge, education, and refinement the wants of mankind increase in direct proportion to the progress he has made. Instead of one coat, which he can shift with and wear patched, he wants two, and he wants them in the prevailing style and of the prevailing fineness of texture. He wants better and a greater variety of food, instead of bread and water. He wants carpets and curtains, handsome furniture, pictures, flowers, musical instruments and jewelry, books, papers, and magazines. He wants machinery to lighten his labors and the thousand and one improvements which mark the life of our plain people in the last two decades and make it pleasant and happy.

A great hue and cry has been raised by these Postmasters-General that second-rate mail matter costs more than it directly pays. That is true and always was true, and that has always been the policy of the law, too, for some kinds of second-class matter now and always has gone through the mail free without paying a penny of postage and freight. Many people, perhaps, do not know that most newspapers go through the mails free.

That is the main reason why they are brought to the doors of the people living outside of the great cities and towns so cheap and for no more than they cost to the people living in the place they are printed. The law is:

Newspapers, one copy to each subscriber in the county where the same are printed in whole or part and published, are carried free.

By a ruling of the Department, exchanges with other papers, are carried free, as they are ranked as subscriptions paid in kind.

The Postmaster-General, in his report of the fiscal year ending 1898, fixes the absolutely free delivery of newspapers mailed free in the counties of publication at 59,316,412 pounds alone; in 1897 it was 52,348,348 pounds; in 1899 it was 62,241,700 pounds.

Again, the right was given to newspapers to send their issue beyond the limits of the county in which published at the nominal rate of 1 cent a pound.

These privileges or concessions, as they are called, are further enlarged by departmental ruling to allow to be shipped by mail sample copies at the 1 cent a pound rate. Great advantage is taken of this ruling and quantities are sent out to nonsubscribers in the hope of interesting them. So, also, when an advertiser or person is interested in distributing an article appearing in the paper, the cent a pound rate is invoked and distribution made through Uncle Sam's mail service. Now, do any of these Postmasters-General complain of the loss of money entailed by the Government by this free distribution of newspapers or this distribution of them at a nominal rate?

Not at all; they seem to fear their political power and excuse or approve of the law, the rulings, and the customs. They admit this is done at a great loss to the United States, as they claim it costs on the average of 8 cents a pound to distribute this matter, while it pays nothing, or at most 1 cent a pound, entailing a loss of 8 cents a pound on nearly 62,000,000 pounds, or $5,000,000, and of 7 cents on over 20,000,000 pounds more, or about $1,500,000; in all, about $6,500,000.

What do they say to this loss? I take the following from the reports quoted above. Postmaster-General Wilson says:

> This grant of free transmission is of long standing and rests on the ground of public policy, which I have no disposition to question.
> So likewise the granting of nominal and losing rates for transmission through the mails of legitimate newspapers and periodicals may be assumed to be a deliberate policy of Congress, in view of the legislation of 1874, 1879, and 1885, though it is doubtful if Congress anticipated the immense loss involved in the grant of the 1 cent a pound rate in 1885.

Postmaster-General Gary, on this subject, says in his report:

> The earliest concession—one to which little or no objection on the ground of public policy has ever been raised—was made to publishers of country newspapers and permitted them to send one copy of their paper free to each subscriber living within the county of publication. This was followed up by granting to publishers of newspapers the right to send out their issues beyond the limits of their county at 1 cent a pound. To this no serious objection was made.

The present Postmaster-General says little on the subject; but that little, and the failure to complain about it and call it an abuse, shows that he too at least is satisfied that this concession continue.

Now, all the objections I have ever heard to the present broad and liberal postal laws comes from these Postmasters-General and those connected with that Department. I have never in a single instance heard the general public complain and ask a change in the law. Nay; when such a change is proposed they invariably protest so strongly that the individual member in Congress listens, hesitates, and votes against changing the law.

For my part, I believe the policy adopted by Congress in framing laws granting these concessions and liberal terms to country newspapers, to newspapers of wider circulation, to magazines, and periodicals of all kinds is wise. They have paid back to this country by spreading education with its attendant civilization and enlightenment in actual dollars and cents an amount infinitely more than it has cost the country.

Uncle Sam has never made a better investment than that represented by the postal deficiency; and if the terms of the investment would be changed and the policy narrowed instead of broadened, I feel sure the change would not pay either the Government nor the people whose immediate interests should be first regarded.

Some men have argued that the general public are not benefited by this governmental liberality. Let us stop a moment and see if they are not only indirectly but very directly benefited.

Suppose the postal laws obliged a 1-cent stamp to be placed on every newspaper or magazine distributed by the mails. Would not the publisher have to raise the price to his subscribers just that much? That would mean $3 a year for each daily newspaper sent by mail to a subscriber. Competition, which is very sharp, controls the price, which is based on the cost.

The cheap rates of the daily and weekly newspapers, magazines, and reading matter of all kinds is due to advertisements and cheap postal delivery. Subscribers alone never by their subscriptions pay for the large majority of publications, and the people get the benefit of every saving, get it directly, and the country and the Government get it also by having better-educated, better-behaved, and broader-minded citizens.

I for one would never by my vote in any way curtail these great and proper privileges for the mere sake of saving a few dollars being paid out of the General Treasury at the expense of these great objects and popular benefits.

But it is argued by the advocates of this legislation that we know the law as it exists to-day creates a favored class. But we think that that favored class has grown too large, and we draw the line at extending the present privileges "to periodicals which are merely books or reprints of books, whether they be issued complete or in parts, bound or unbound, sold by subscription or otherwise, or whether they are premiums or supplements of regular newspapers or periodicals."

Now let us examine this proposition and see whether any good ground exists in drawing this line of distinction, in separating the newspaper sheep from the book goats.

Does the ground of public policy begin and stop at newspapers and magazines, both of which are largely made up of advertising matter? We claim it does not. Cheap books I believe to be every bit as valuable in furnishing educational facilities to the masses as newspapers or magazines.

In fact, if one may be said to be better in spreading education than another, the good book has the advantage. A bad book is neither better nor worse than a bad newspaper. It is easy to guard against the shipping by mail of bad books; we have plenty of laws, with heavy penalties attached, for sending through the mails immoral, obscene, or otherwise injurious literature of any kind.

The carloads of Sapho shipped from New York over the country, to which allusion has been made, should have been refused by the postmaster; they were shipped contrary to law, and the postal authorities are to blame.

So, also, any other book or pamphlet which has not specially been passed upon as second-class matter, and it is no excuse to say the postmasters are imposed upon by false notices printed on the outside covers. Postmasters are paid sufficiently large salaries and given an ample corps of well-paid assistants to be able, without the most culpable negligence, to remedy this abuse. Legislation would not cure the defect, for they would simply close their eyes to new laws, as they do now.

What hirsute appendages are there on reprints which should cause them to be classed among the goats? Reprints are made of the very best books only. There is no sale for an indifferent book which justifies or makes profitable its being reprinted. Reprints are only made of the old masters of literature, the very books which it is most desirable to have extensively circulated and read. Among them are the gems of the English tongue. Most of them are published without a single advertisement appended to them, and must make their way through the world by intrinsic merit alone.

I have carefully gone over the lists published by the great publishing houses of the United States, one of which I have at hand, that of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of New York. They publish the much appreciated and widely read Riverside Series. This series, without a single exception, is made up of the best works of the best authors—Anderson, Browning, Bryant, Bunyan, Cooper, Dana, Dickens, Franklin, Goldsmith, Hawthorne, Ruskin, Scott, Shakespeare, Stowe, Swift, Irving, Lincoln, Homer, Holmes, Longfellow, Tennyson, Whittier, and many others.

Is there more improving reading published? I would that a copy of each of these publications could be placed in the hands of every boy and girl, man and woman in this broad land. The United States could well afford to send them free. The works of the other publishers are equally choice, and usually from standard writers. The large percentage are English classics, highly interesting, instructive, and improving.

It is urged as an argument that the publishers of these books and reprints make a profit on them at the expense of the United States. This seems to be the principal argument of the friends of this bill. Surely they can not be so blinded to all sense of propriety and logic as to consider this a fair argument. For it could with like force be urged against the concessions made to newspapers, magazines, and periodicals. The publishers of all of them derive a profit.

Yet they—the friends of the bill—admit the benefit is shared by the public. The sheep and the goats stand on the same footing—are subject to the same argument of public policy, and to a member of Congress who wants to be consistent there is no halfway; either all should pay the actual cost of their transmission through the mails or all be granted equal concessions. And it will not do to say that it is all right to give these privileges to the newspaper publishers and deny them to the book publishers. I say give them to both.

The friends of this bill are equally inconsistent in their second proposition, limiting sample copies to 500 or even a larger number. This privilege was never granted by the postal laws; and if it is an abuse, the postal authorities, through whose edicts and rulings it originated, can correct it. How senseless to say that the ruling has been long ago submitted to and approved by an Attorney-General. If that be so, what is there to prevent another Attorney-General and another Postmaster-General modifying or absolutely cutting off the privilege? I call it—they say abuse.

It looks as if they wish to place the responsibility on Congress for abuses of acts which lie at their own door. They are a good deal like the brewers, who were unable to agree among themselves not to sell eighths and sixths of beer, and came to Congress with a bill doing away with beer stamps for eighths and sixths.

But I take the broader ground; if it is public policy to disseminate public information by conceding the free transportation of newspapers to subscribers, is it not equally public policy to increase the number of subscribers by sending specimen copies?

Let the ruling stand, and cease these useless complaints of the present postal laws.

The next particular, or, as they say, reform, aimed at is the taking away from lodges, fraternal and benevolent societies, trade unions, colleges, educational institutions the privilege of sending their papers and publications as second-class matter. They complain of men who for the mere purpose of making money in advertisements are issuing and circulating such papers.

If that be true, the remedy is easy—do not grant them the privilege. Each paper must make application first for the privilege and have it specially granted. How easy it would be to refuse such privilege when it is improperly asked.

Surely this laxity on the part of the postal authorities is no good ground for taking away this valuable privilege from our labor unions, our lodges, educational institutions, and benevolent societies. I have before me a telegram just received from the society of Modern Woodmen located at Allentown. They say the passage of the bill "means a heavy tax on us."

This, no doubt, is the universal verdict of all these organizations, and amendments have been offered which require these society papers to be confined in the matter contained in them to subjects relating to the particular organization alone.

What objection should there be to have printed in them useful and interesting matter which may not be at all connected with the special objects of the society? I see none. Make them all as bright, entertaining, interesting, and instructive as possible, and you will have done a good work, not one upon which a penalty should be inflicted.

All of us no doubt appreciate the value of teaching and preaching and practicing the doctrine of humanity and instilling into the hearts of every citizen a love for his fellow-man. The great growth in recent years of social and beneficial organizations in every State in the Union shows the upward and onward tendency. They teach charity, fraternity, equality, patriotism, and all the Christian virtues. Why place an obstacle in the way of their growth and expansion, all to save a few dollars to the Government?

The policy is a bad one. Nay, rather give them greater facilities and encourage them in other good Christian, humane work by the most generous legislation. Do not strain at a gnat and swallow camels, as you are constantly doing in the voting of appropriations for governmental expenditures. We all know that if there was a surplus ever earned by the postal service it would be frittered away at some place or on some object of much less advantage to the general public.

Such has always been the rule. The Government uses in one way or another all it gets its hands on, and if it is not river and harbor bills, steamship subsidies, and the like, it is such unnecessary and wasteful expenditures as maintaining a war in the Philippine Islands.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I ask for a few minutes more.

Mr. LOUD. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks for a few minutes more. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. There is not a single branch of the Government whose running expenses are not entirely paid by the taxes of the people. There is not a single large department in which reforms can not be made which will lower the running expenses to an amount in excess of the amount it is claimed this bill will save the Government. Suppose we begin there, for in that waste the people derive no benefits or privileges.

There is not a college in the land in which the students pay the running expenses. If they were obliged to, few would be able to receive a higher education. Millions have been donated by wise and liberal rich men for buildings, dormitories, instruction halls, and libraries; millions more to pay professors who teach the students, until you find that but a small per cent of the annual expenses of the great institutions of learning are paid by those who receive the direct benefit.

This is so with our hospitals and our many great charitable institutions, and not only do private persons but the State and local governments where they are located also largely contribute. This is for the good of the public, or, to quote the Postmaster-General, "on the ground of public policy."

I see no objection in obliging news dealers to ship back unsold newspapers, periodicals, and books by freight and thus relieving the mails of the matter, expensive to the Government and of no particular use to the public. For such a change I would cheerfully vote, as I believe it an abuse. Yet I am not so sure that this can not be changed by departmental ruling under the law. As I read the postal laws I find no warrant for the practice.

So, also, the requiring of the assortment of mail matter under fair rules and regulations. This should not apply to the shipments of county newspapers sent to post-offices which can, with the present corps of assistants, readily handle all mail matter, but should be limited in its operation to the great distributing centers of miscellaneous second-class mail matter. I am sure the publishers would cheerfully comply with these restrictions.

Amend this bill as you will, you will simply lay snares for the unwary and in no way accomplish any good results to that vast multitude who contribute so largely to the running expenses of this at present extravagantly run Government and receive so little tangible return. Let a halt be called on this legislation by your vote. You may feel assured that no one of your constituents will question the wisdom of your action, and should there be one it is quite easy to show them it was based on a real regard for their interest and a sound public policy.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that business will be suspended until the House is in order. There are plenty of conveniences for conversation outside. This is the workshop, and the House must be in order before business will be resumed.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments to the second section.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the third section.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the proviso to the second section.

The SPEAKER. We had passed the second section and the Clerk was ordered to read the third section.

Mr. BROSIUS. But the reading had not commenced.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman's amendment apply to the second section?

Mr. BROSIUS. It does.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the second section strike out the following proviso:

"Provided, nevertheless, That news agents shall not be allowed to return to news agents or publishers at the pound rate unsold periodical publications, but shall pay postage on the same at the rate of 1 cent for 4 ounces."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 305. An act making an additional appropriation for a public building at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington;

S. 226. An act for the relief of the heirs of Philip C. Rowe;

S. 1008. An act for the relief of William C. Dodge;

S. 2630. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Merrick, Merrick & Cope;

S. 2035. An act providing for the use by the United States of devices invented by its naval officers while engaged in its service and covered by the letters patent;

S. 373. An act for the relief of Avery D. Babcock and wife, of Oregon;

S. 2384. An act to reimburse certain persons who expended moneys and furnished services and supplies in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities within the Territorial limits of the present State of Nevada;

S. 1231. An act for the relief of Virginia I. Mullan, of Annapolis, Md.;

S. 1759. An act for the relief of William A. Richards, late surveyor-general of Wyoming;

S. 2519. An act for the relief of Mrs. A. C. Wagner;

S. 744. An act for the relief of James Emerson, late a private of Company I, Nineteenth Maine Infantry;

S. 2085. An act for the correction of the military record of Francis A. E. Briot;

S. 2112. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the salaries of the deputy collectors of customs at the subports of Tacoma and Seattle, in the State of Washington, and repealing all laws inconsistent therewith;

S. 2083. An act for the relief of the children of Matthew J. J. Cagle;

S. 2352. An act to authorize the judges of the district courts of the United States to appoint stenographic reporters, fix the duties and compensation thereof, and for other purposes; and

S. R. 100. Joint resolution for the printing of additional copies of the Report of the Governor of Alaska for 1899.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill H. R. 4008, "An act to establish light and fog stations to mark the main southern entrance of the new breakwater at Buffalo, N. Y."

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9279) making appropriations to supply additional urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for prior years, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate concurrent resolution 24:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of a document entitled "The use of the Roentgen ray by the Medical Department of the United States Army in the war with Spain (1898)," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the War Department.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that three things suffice for a speech—a fact, an illustration, and a sentiment. In the five minutes I have I can only give one of each. The fact I offer is that under the present law millions of copies of standard literature, the best thoughts of the finest writers that the world has known, find their way to millions of thirsty minds at a cost not beyond the means of the poorest. It is not possible to exaggerate the importance of this fact in a country whose welfare, growth, and greatness must ever depend upon the dissemination of intelligence and virtue among the masses of the people.

The illustration is this: John Swinton was addressing a meeting of Boston transcendentalists. He was interrupted by the question: "What do you think was the greatest thing of the age?" Mr. Swinton replied, "I think the greatest thing of the age was the introduction of Calaban to Cadmus." The Yankee transcendentalists were puzzled. For once they had encountered something they could not penetrate. This elusive parable was too much for them, and Mr. Swinton had to explain that Calaban in the Tempest was an undeveloped, deformed creature, the type of the mentally undeveloped, deformed masses of humanity, and Cadmus was the old Phœnician inventor of letters who, when he taught Calaban to read, led him to think, and that the result was, as a matter of course, the intellectual development of the human race. [Applause.]

Now I add what may pass for a sentiment. Any system of disseminating intelligence that makes knowledge an open letter instead of a sealed book, that makes the best reading accessible to the poorest people, that puts a good book at trifling cost in the hands of an indigent child, that plants the seeds of knowledge at every fireside and adorns with the trophies of learning every home in all the land is the introduction of Calaban to Cadmus

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes, to complete a sentence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROSIUS. Every sale of the cheap reprints of the standard productions in literature and art, every carload, shipload, or wagonload of the best thoughts of the greatest thinkers in all the ages distributed at the smallest cost to those who can ill afford to purchase costlier editions is the introduction of Caliban to Cadmus, and it must be in the nature of things that immeasurable benefits come to the human family from such inexpensive means of feeding the intellectual hunger of the land. I am not willing, by making it expensive, to lessen this stream of beneficence or seal up this fountain of blessing to my country; and therefore I am constrained to vote against this measure. [Applause.] I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STEELE. In response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] I desire only to make this suggestion: That if Calaban and Cadmus are sent through the mails, there is no excuse for returning any portion of them as second-class matter.

In this connection I desire to publish in the RECORD a letter from as good a man as ever lived, which bears directly on the question of returning unsold newspapers and periodicals:

PERU, IND., March 19, 1900.

MY DEAR MAJOR: Regarding my recent letter to you asking your aid in defeating the Loud bill, will confess that I had only read the passages sent out by the companies and publishers, and, after reading through the report on same, which you kindly sent me, I am "emphatically" of the same opinion as Mr. Wash. Hesing, page 21, and were I in your position should not hesitate to vote for it. Thanking you again for your kind attention in this matter,

I am, very respectfully, ever,

PLINY M. CRUME.

GEORGE W. STEELE, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 2, line 17, page 2, after the word "shall," strike out "not," and in line 18, page 2, strike out all of section 2 after the word "publications."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, it was rejected, there being on a division (called for by Mr. HENRY of Mississippi)—ayes 54, noes 75.

Mr. LOUD. I now move to close debate on this section.

The motion was agreed to.

The next section of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. That after the formal admission to the mails as second-class matter of any newspaper or periodical under the conditions prescribed by section 5 of this act, sample copies of any issue thereof, not differing in any respect from the copies sent to regular subscribers, may be mailed at a postage charge of half a cent for every 2 ounces or fraction thereof dispatched to one address, payable by stamps, to be attached.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "mailed," in line 25, insert the following:

"At the second-class rate a number not in excess of 50 per cent of the bona fide subscription list of said newspaper, magazine, or other periodical: Provided, That in no case shall the number of sample copies so mailed exceed 500 copies of any one issue: And provided further, That all sample copies of any second-class publication mailed in excess of the number allowed herein at second-class rates shall be paid for."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have two amendments which I desire to offer to the amendment of the committee:

In line 1, page 3, strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so that it will read: "not in excess of 100 per cent of the bona fide circulation."

On page 3, line 4, strike out the words "five hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so that it will read: "sample copies so mailed exceed 2,000 copies of any one issue."

Mr. LOUD. The committee has agreed to accept these amendments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the Clerk's desk to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "fifty," in line 1, page 3, and insert the words "one hundred."

In line 4, page 3, strike out the words "five hundred" and insert the words "two thousand."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, these amendments mean this: That instead of publishers of newspapers and periodicals having the right to publish sample copies of each and every issue up to "50 per cent" of their regular subscription list, as the original bill provides, and to send them through the mail at the one-cent-a-pound rate, if my amendment is adopted they will have the right to so issue and send through the mails at the 1-cent rate to points outside their counties a number equal to "100 per cent" of their regular subscription list. The other half of my amendment raises the maximum number of sample copies of any one issue from "five hundred," as provided by the bill, to "two thousand." Inside the county of publication as provided by the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] there is no limit whatever on sample copies.

The committee has agreed with me to accept these amendments. These amendments, together with others to be offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HEATWOLE], who is a country editor himself, and by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY], and by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], take good care of every legitimate paper or publication in the United States, whether daily, weekly, twice a week, monthly, or quarterly, whether published in the city or in the country.

The Loud bill, so called, now before the House is a considerable improvement on the Loud bill of the last Congress. With my amendments and others it is a vast improvement and as good as we are likely to get, if we are ever to pass a law excluding from the 1-cent-pound-rate privilege the fake periodicals which have produced a huge deficit in the postal revenues and which have brought the whole business into disrepute. I helped kill the Loud bill in the last Congress, and will help kill the present bill unless the House adopts my amendments and others which, in my judgment and the judgment of country editors on this floor, fully protect the privileges now enjoyed by legitimate publishers.

In the last Congress I delivered a speech in defense and praise of the country editor, which was the most widely circulated speech that I ever delivered here—circulated by the public press, not by me. I reaffirm here and now every word I said then, and if it were not too great a stretching of the privilege to extend remarks in the Record I would make that speech part of this speech. Then I gave the country editor his meed of praise; to-day I am endeavoring to confer upon him, and through him upon his readers, some practical and substantial benefit, for country editors must be ranked by all rational beings among the most indefatigable and successful of public educators. I once had the honor to be a country editor myself, and my interest in and friendship for members of that fraternity will perish only with life itself.

In my opinion, if the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads [Mr. LOUD], whose capacity, courage, and integrity are admitted on all hands, had been as conciliatory on the matter of amendment in the last Congress as he is in this, he would have gotten through his bill cutting off the fake periodicals and curing the deficit, and at the same time legitimate publishers would have been left in the full enjoyment of all their legitimate privileges.

Tuesday morning, before this bill was taken up, I went to the chairman [Mr. LOUD] and to the committee, and proposed to them that if they would accept my amendments and others in my judgment necessary to protect legitimate publishers, particularly country editors, and if these amendments were adopted by the House, I would support the bill. Otherwise I would fight it to the death. I intend to keep my word. The chairman [Mr. LOUD] and the committee agreed to accept my amendments and certain others, and if the House accepts them I will vote for the bill.

A MEMBER. Was that a trade?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes, it was a trade—an honest, legitimate trade. You must understand that concession is the only method of accomplishing things here. I get what I think is right for legitimate publishers and the committee cures part of the deficit. I would concede or compromise nothing—not an iota—on a question of principle, but on matters of detail concession or compromise is the secret of securing legislation. The committee concedes to me the principle for which I contend and the details also.

This agreement as to the acceptance of my amendments and others deemed necessary to protect the legitimate press, especially the country press, was brought about largely through the kind offices of my friend from Georgia, Judge GRIGGS, who is not only an able member of the House, but who at all times and under all circumstances has demonstrated that he is the unwavering friend of the country press and of all legitimate publications.

The situation is this: Owing to the large deficit in the postal revenues, either to-day or some other time, a bill like the present one will pass Congress without amendment and cut off the sample-copy privilege of cheap postage rates entirely. For that reason I and others have thought it better to secure by amendment what legitimate publishers need, what they want, and what they must have in order to enable most of them to survive, rather than run the risk of losing all by simply making a stubborn fight against the entire bill, good and bad features alike.

That the deficit in the postal receipts ought to be cured, if it can be done without injury to any legitimate enterprise or pursuit, is admitted by a vast majority of all men of all parties. The deficit is $6,000,000 per annum now.

This bill as amended proposes to do it by shutting out from the 1-cent-a-pound rate fake periodicals and publications. It is suggested that the entire evil could be corrected by scaling down the pay of the railroads for carrying the mails. That may be true. If the rates are too high they ought to be scaled down. I will cheerfully vote for a bill to scale them down if it is shown that they are higher than they ought to be; but there are so many conflicting statements, not only as to whether they are too high but even as to what they are per ton per mile, that nothing short of a patient, careful, thorough examination will throw much light upon that vexed subject. Such an investigation is now being made by the postal commission. Until it makes its report I suppose that question is up in the air. At any rate, it is not before the House now.

The proposition to cut down the railroad mail rates in no way is mixed up with or antagonistic to the pending proposition. The disposition appears to be to play off one against the other. When the fake publications are attacked and an effort is made to cut off their rich perquisites, which no Congress ever intended to confer, in order to cure the deficit, they put on a virtuous air and say:

The deficit is caused by the railroad mail rates. Cut them down.

I suppose when an effort shall be made here to scale down the railroad mail rates the railroads will take the innocent and virtuous tack and say:

Yes, the deficit ought to be cured; but the fake publications produce it. Shut them out and all will be lovely.

If the fake publishers can succeed now, and the railroads then, the deficit never will be cured; and the people, who in the end foot all the bills, will continue to pay the piper.

The Postmaster-General, who ought to know what he is about, and who is the editor of a newspaper himself, estimates that this bill will save $20,000,000 annually to tax-payers. Why not pass it, make that enormous saving, and then proceed to consider the railroad-mail pay when we get the information which the postal commission is accumulating?

Whatever we can save by cutting down the pay of the railroads for carrying the mails we will add to the $20,000,000 to be saved by this bill if it is passed.

But it may be asked:

What will we do with the surplus?

Never bother about that. It is dead easy. Penny postage for letters, rural free mail delivery, more daily rural mail routes, are all demanded by the people; and the answer by the Department to these demands is:

These requests ought to be granted; but there is a large deficiency in the postal revenues now, and we can do nothing.

I am in favor of every proposition to make our mail service more efficient—a thing that can not be done so long as this deficit stares us in the face.

What we are confronted with now is a large deficit in the postal receipts—a part of which deficit is produced by fake periodicals being carried through the mails at the low rate of 1 cent per pound; and it is proposed to cure the deficit, partially, as everybody admits—wholly, as five Postmasters-General have declared—by shutting these fake periodicals and advertising sheets out from the privilege of 1-cent postage.

In addition to the two amendments just read at the Clerk's desk, I have two others, which the committee agrees to accept. One of them substitutes the words "bona fide" for the word "legitimate," as applied to "circulation," in line 10, page 4, and by striking out, in lines 10 and 11, page 4, the words "who voluntarily order and pay, or agree to pay, for the same," thereby clearing up an obscurity as to what constitutes circulation and as to who are subscribers.

Some of our friends appear to think that the 1 cent a pound postage rate under which paper-covered books have been sent through the land as "periodicals" is the sole cause of cheap books. This is a mistake, however. It may be that the 1 cent a pound postage rate has contributed to it; but the prices of all books, no matter how bound and no matter whether sent through the mails or sold over the counter, has come down—not only come down, but come down wonderfully—in these latter days. The real cause of the fall is the multiplication of labor-saving devices and cheaper freight rates.

One of the books which I have owned the longest—bought when I was a mere youth—is Buckle's History of Civilization in England—one of the greatest books ever written—in two large volumes, bound in muslin. I paid $8 for it—nearly one-fourth of my then monthly pay as a country school-teacher. That book, printed in the same sort of type, on the same quality of paper, and in the same kind of binding, can be purchased in any bookstore in Washington for $1 or a dollar and a half. Yet it must always rank among the high-priced books; for, though a marvelous work, it never was and never will be a popular book or have such a tremendous circulation as Macaulay, Dickens, or Scott. The 1-cent postage rate had nothing, absolutely nothing, to do with that fall of price, for no book bound in boards, cloth, muslin, leather, or morocco ever went through the mails at that rate.

Another example: In my library at home I have a nice edition of Thackeray, in 10 volumes, bound in muslin, for which, in 1882, I paid $15—the wholesale price. Just as handsome a set of Thackeray can now be purchased for $3 or $4, perhaps less.

At home I have all the standard poets. They cost me, on an average, about $4 each. During the holidays I ran across a bookstore down on the avenue where I could buy them at 25 cents each, in reasonably good type, on fairly good paper, bound in muslin or cloth, and brand new. I bought a set at that price so as to have them handy and so as not to bother Brother Spofford so much.

These books were not sent by mail at the 1-cent rate or any other rate. The rate of postage had nothing to do with the price.

I am sure that I would not vote to put a tax on knowledge. I sympathize with the poor boy in his aspirations and struggle for information, for I was as poor a boy as ever grew to lusty manhood in the hill country of Kentucky. I am poor yet. My children are poor. I am a lover of books. I can not remember a day when I was not. I am glad paper-covered books are cheap; also muslin-bound books, cloth-bound books, leather-bound books, morocco-bound books, books in every binding. But, to save me, I do not see any reason why paper-bound books—books, mark you—should go through the mails at 1 cent per pound and the same books, printed by the same men, on the same types and presses, should go at 8 cents per pound if they happen to be bound in boards, muslin, leather, etc. It seems to me that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander; that if one sort of books is sent through the mails at 1 cent a pound all sorts should be sent at the same rate. We should go the whole hog or none.

Some of my friends seem to think that publishers would quit printing and sending out paper-covered books if this bill is passed, or would put up the price enormously. Without being a prophet, or the son of a prophet, I predict that nothing of the sort will happen. There will be just as many books published, just as many books sold, and the price will not go up one cent by reason of the passage of this bill. These publishers publish these books, not as a matter of philanthropy and in the cause of education, but to make money for themselves, just as farmers raise corn, wheat, hogs, cattle, and horses to make money. Because we pass this bill, they will not go off in a huff and quit making money. They will simply send the bulk of their books to their agents by freight instead of loading down the mails with them. If they put up the price, other energetic printers will start publishing houses and print these books as cheaply as now.

In my judgment, this bill, with my amendments and the others, instead of hurting the rural press, will help it; because, if the fake periodicals and the mere advertising sheets are shut out of the mails, they are done for; but the advertisers will advertise somewhere—never doubt that—and they will then, of necessity, advertise in the rural press.

Some of these fake concerns, made up essentially of advertisements, but masquerading as magazines, have enormous circulations—that is, the publishers have the names of millions of persons to whom they send "sample copies," carried through the mails at the expense of the taxpayers, who have to make up the annual deficit in the postal revenues.

One of them, I understand, gets $4,000 a page for advertisements.

Shut them up and the country editor will come into his own again in the advertising business in his own bailiwick—a business which has been taken away from him to a large extent, of late years, by these fake magazines.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment to the amendment now pending. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri. If no one opposes that amendment, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I desire to oppose the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I oppose the amendment because with or without the amendment I should still be opposed to the passage of this bill.

It has been said here that this or that paper-covered book is admitted to the mails, and this or that book bound in cloth or linen is not to be admitted to the mails. What of it? Comparison of the relative merits of different books may be instructive as a literary exercise, but have speeches dealing with such matters anything to do with the merits of the bill now under consideration? If the arguments that have been made in this vein are of any value, it is in that they show that an unreasonable discrimination is now made between books bound in paper and books bound in cloth and I think the speech of my colleague [Mr. COWHERD] conclusively shows that instead of further restriction we should have greater liberality in the use of the mails, for the purpose of circulating printed literature of all kinds.

How does it happen, Mr. Speaker, that at no time has the proposed retrenchment taken the shape of a proposed reduction of the rates paid for carrying second-class matter? When was the present rate fixed for carrying the mails in this country? A good many years ago. Was it profitable to the carriers then? Gentlemen who favor this bill say that the amount of second-class matter has quadrupled over and over again. If it was profitable, before this large increase took place, to carry it at the rate now paid, would not a lower rate be justified by the larger volume of mail now carried? Why is the same rate paid on the vastly larger volume of traffic?

Rates for carrying all other classes of freight have been lowered. Why should the rates paid by the Government remain unchanged? It has been stated on high authority, and I assume the statement is correct, that there are special trains running on the railroads into the great cities of this country which carry only the milk consumed by the metropolitan populations. Some of them run 100 miles, making the return trip laden with empty milk cans. These special trains are run at a high rate of speed, and the rate paid for carrying the milk is a great deal less than the rate paid by the Government for second-class mail matter.

Gentlemen say that because a linen-covered book is excluded from the mails, therefore we should exclude the paper-covered books. When asked why we might not admit books bound in durable form instead of excluding those bound in paper, we are told that the increase in the weight of the mails would be prodigious. If so, would not so large a traffic warrant a large reduction in the rate paid for carriage?

Mr. Chairman, this discussion has proven that what we want is a revision of the postal regulations as well as a reduction in the rates paid to common carriers; reclassification of the mails and abandonment of the absurd and insane practice of paying the same rates for carrying all classes of what is now termed second-class mail matter. The transmission of letters and daily newspapers calls for lightning express trains, but a large part of the mail now classified as second class could be shipped on freight trains without loss or inconvenience to anybody.

Mr. Chairman, it is assumed generally that the increase in the weight of second-class matter is attributable largely to abuses of the postal laws. The history of the printer's art for twenty-five years furnishes the true explanation of what the friends of this bill regard as a public evil. Twenty-five years ago you could count on your fingers the newspapers that published sixteen-page Sunday editions. At a later period an eight-page country weekly paper was regarded as something extraordinary.

Twenty-five years ago there were only a few literary monthlies of prominence, and they were sold at from three to six dollars a year. What do you find now? Hundreds of monthly magazines, each a beautiful work of art. Modern typography, improved presses, and processes which subsidize photography's miracles to the use of the art preservative now enable publishers to place in the hands of millions of readers magazines at 10 cents apiece excelling in typographical excellence and in some respects in their contents the best periodical literature of the world twenty-five years ago.

The weight of the New York daily papers now probably exceeds the weight of the entire second-class mail of that city thirty years ago. In every county in the United States that has a population of 10,000 people we now find an eight-page weekly, and in every city of 10,000 people we find an eight-page daily, and in every city of 25,000 people Sunday editions of sixteen to thirty-six pages—such as were known only to metropolitan journalism twenty years ago—appear regularly. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes.

Mr. McPHERSON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. LOUD. I move to close debate on this amendment.

The SPEAKER. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Who made the objection?

Mr. McPHERSON. I made the objection, so that we can get along with this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I just wanted to look at you; that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes; you can look at me.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Chair will state that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was an amendment to an amendment. There has been a speech in favor of it and a speech against it, and, without limiting debate, the question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I desire to know if it is in order to offer a substitute for the committee amendment and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment to the committee amendment should be voted upon before the substitute is offered.

The amendment to the amendment, offered by Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, was agreed to.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Now, I desire to offer a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to offer a substitute for the committee amendment. Let it be reported.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a question for information. That amendment which I offered contained two amendments, in one sense. I want to ask the Speaker if they were both agreed to?

The SPEAKER. The amendments were both put and agreed to by the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 3, after the word "rate" in line 1, page 3.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that this amendment will not be in order until the committee amendment is adopted.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I desire to be recognized to offer it after that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will secure the gentleman his rights. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I desire to offer the amendment which I offered a moment ago.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 3, after the word "rate," in line 1, page 3.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I can not see, Mr. Speaker, any good reason for this strike at the country press, and I think the law should be left to stand as it is, or as it would be should the substitute be adopted. The amendment secured by the gentleman from Missouri protects them to some extent, but it does not go far enough. It provides that the number of their sample copies shall not exceed their subscription list. Now, under that amendment, if a newspaper is published in a county and has the circulation of only three, four, or five hundred and it should be desirable at any time that a thousand copies should be printed, it would be impossible to do so under that amendment. If there was a paper published in a county and it had a circulation of 1,000 copies, such a paper could publish a thousand extra copies and circulate them.

Now, then, if there are two papers in a county, as is usually the case, one having a circulation of a thousand and the other having a circulation of 500, a discrimination is made in favor of the one having the largest circulation, and there can be no good reason for this. Everyone who is familiar with the conduct of country newspapers knows that they very rarely avail themselves of the privilege of circulating extra copies, and it is only on occasions or matters of importance to them and the people that they do so avail themselves, and the Government is not hurt. The mails probably of the county only are burdened and only burdened for a short time.

I must say that I can see no good reason here why their circulation, if they should desire to occasionally enlarge it, should be limited to the amount of their usual circulation. I think we ought to encourage these institutions; and it is due them that we let the law stand as it is, giving them the privilege they now have, so that if they can increase their circulation we have not put any hindrance upon them. I say I am in favor of the gentleman's amendment if I can not get any other; but his amendment does not go far enough.

There ought not to be any limit put upon this matter at all. No good purpose is subserved by it, and every country newspaper ought to oppose every man in this Congress who offers himself for reelection who shall vote against them having this privilege, which they rarely exercise, and, when they do, is usually for their advantage or to subserve some good purpose; and I say that those papers ought to castigate every man who would not permit them to have this privilege. I hope this substitute will be adopted. There is no danger in adopting it. I think it is an outrage for gentlemen to stand up here and contend that they shall be circumscribed in the privilege which they have had for so long a time. I now ask for a vote on my substitute.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, the object the gentleman is seeking to attain is all retained by the section in its present form. I assume that is what the gentleman intends.

Mr. SNODGRASS. No. I want to preserve this law which secures to them the privilege of unlimited circulation. If my amendment is adopted, they can circulate an unlimited number of sample copies. I do not know whether the provisions of the law secure them that, but my substitute will do it.

Mr. LOUD. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the present law does not, I think, even if it were liberally construed. The gentleman seeks here now, by his amendment, to permit any publication, if it should have but one subscriber, to circulate broadcast over this land 100,000,000 copies. I do not believe the House wants to do it. I do not think this question is worthy of discussion, Mr. Speaker, and call for a vote.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 93.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LOUD. That will cut off opportunity for amendments.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-two gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. LOUD. I move to close debate on the section, Mr. Speaker.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all periodical publications regularly issued from a known place of publication at stated intervals as frequently as four times a year by or under the auspices of benevolent or fraternal societies, trade unions, or orders organized under the lodge system, and having a bona fide membership of not less than 1,000 persons, shall be entitled to the privilege of second-class mail matter: Provided, That such matter shall be originated and published to further the objects and purposes of such society or order.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

"And provided further, That all university, college, and school papers and publications, except those of so-called business and commercial schools and colleges, whether published and circulated by the authorities of such university, college, or school, or by the students thereof, or by any class, organization, society, or fraternity composed of students of such university, college, or school, shall continue to be received and sent through the mails as second-class matter in the same manner and with all the privileges accorded by law as it existed prior to the passage of this act, and the same as though this act had not been passed: And also provided, That the circulation of such publications through the mails at said rates shall not exceed 2,000 copies of any one issue except to regular subscribers."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer these amendments in the interest of the schools, universities, and colleges of this country, and it seems to me there can be no objection to it whatever. It is so carefully limited and guarded that it cares for the interests of the Government, while at the same time it takes care of the educational interests of this great country. I have introduced it at the solicitation and suggestion of some of the best educators in the country. Among others, I have a letter in my hand, a duplicate of which has been read by my colleague from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]. I have introduced it to meet the objection to this bill suggested by that letter. It seems to me that it is broad enough and comprehensive enough in its terms to care for the interests of these educational institutions.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Have the amendment read again.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, if I have time enough, I will have the amendment read again.

The SPEAKER. Let the amendment be again read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in the third line the following words: "except those of so-called business and commercial schools and colleges."

Also strike out the following: "And also provided, That the circulation of such publications through the mails at said rates shall not exceed 2,000 copies of one issue except to regular subscribers."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say simply a word or two. The commercial colleges in the part of the country I am familiar with are doing an excellent work. If the amendment of the gentleman from New York prevails, they are deprived of the privileges of the mail they now enjoy. I think they are educating a class of young people less able to bear the expense of an education than those attending other and higher institutions of learning.

As to the next part of my amendment, striking out the restriction limiting colleges to 2,000 copies, the idea of sending out this literature at all is to reach the large number of the young people of the country where they would naturally draw students from; and if you limit it to 2,000, you defeat the very object of allowing them to send them out, or at least you limit the good that comes to them much below what would be desirable. I hope the two amendments will be adopted. With the changes made by the amendments I offer, I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. LOUD. I do. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from New York; but when it comes to extending this privilege to business colleges and flooding this country, as they are now, with five millions at a time, thirty-five or forty to the pound, personally I never can give my consent to that; and I ask for a division of the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, as it involves two propositions, and then I move to close debate on this section. We have but fifteen minutes left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands a division on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MORRIS. I want to know whether a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has really offered two amendments to the amendment, and the first thing will be to dispose of these amendments.

Mr. MORRIS. When will a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Minnesota wants to offer a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY]?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. That will be in order after the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is disposed of. The Clerk will read the first division of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, or the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 3, the following words: "except those of so-called business commercial schools and colleges."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LOUD) there were 109 in the affirmative and 53 in the negative.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the proposed amendment the following: "And also provided, That the circulation of such publications through the mails at said rates shall not exceed 2,000 copies of one issue, except to regular subscribers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LOUD) there were—104 in the affirmative and 59 in the negative.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the amendment as amended.

Mr. MORRIS rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] desire to offer a substitute?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir.

The amendment sent to the desk by Mr. MORRIS was read, as follows:

Insert in line 13, page 3, after the word "year," the following: "by all regularly incorporated institutions of learning and all strictly professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including the bulletins issued by the State boards of health and State experimental and scientific stations, or."

In line 19, page 3, after the word "such," insert the word "institution."

In line 19, page 3, after the word "order," insert "And provided further, That such publications or any particular issue of any such publication shall not be designed primarily for advertising purposes;" so that the section will read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all periodical publications regularly issued from a known place of publication at stated intervals as frequently as four times a year by all regularly incorporated institutions of learning and all strictly professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including the bulletins issued by the State boards of health and State experimental and scientific stations, or by or under the auspices of benevolent or fraternal societies, trade unions, or orders organized under the lodge system, and having a bona fide membership of not less than 1,000 persons, shall be entitled to the privilege of second-class mail matter: Provided, That such matter shall be originated and published to further the objects and purposes of such institution, society, or order: And provided further, That such publications or any particular issue of any such publication shall not be designed primarily for advertising purposes."

The SPEAKER. The Chair must hold that this is an independent amendment, and the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] must first be disposed of. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRIS. I now move my amendment; and I wish to say only a few words.

Mr. COX. Before the gentleman proceeds I want to ask him one question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. As I caught the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota, it applies only to incorporated institutions. Now, why should we not confer upon an individual the same authority or privilege that we propose to confer upon a corporation?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] has the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask unanimous consent to have two amendments considered as pending when the bill is voted upon. The chairman of the committee agrees to this.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield for this request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MORRIS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri will state his request.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to have these two amendments considered as pending when the bill is voted on.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the two amendments which the gentleman from Missouri desires to offer and have pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, on page 4, strike out the word "legitimate," and insert in lieu thereof "bona fide."

On page 4, in lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "who voluntarily order and pay, or agree to pay, for the same."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, these amendments will be considered as pending.

Mr. GROSVENOR objected, but subsequently said: Mr. Speaker, I thought it best when I objected before that these amendments should be acted on one by one. I now, at the request of the gentleman from Missouri, withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none; and the two amendments offered by the gentleman from Missouri will be considered as pending.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. MORRIS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I wish to offer an amendment to be considered as pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 5, after the word "act," insert "having a subscription list exceeding 5,000 copies."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HEATWOLE] will be considered as pending. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. OLMSTED. I ask unanimous consent that an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk may be considered as pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 15, page 4, the following:

"Except publications by or under the auspices of benevolent or fraternal societies, trade unions, or orders organized under the lodge system."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this amendment being considered as pending? The Chair hears none. Now, the Chair would like to know what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] desires to do. Does he hold the floor or yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I ask a vote on my amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. MORRIS.

The SPEAKER. The ayes appear to have it; the ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COONEY. Division.

Mr. RAY of New York. I call for a division. In the first place, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understood the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS], it appeared to be a substitute for the entire section.

The SPEAKER. It was not. It was an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask to have it reported.

Mr. COONEY. I called for a division.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand a division?

Mr. COONEY. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. I make the point of order that it is too late.

Mr. COONEY. I called for it some time ago, but was not heard.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman says he demanded a division before the Chair announced the result, the Chair will allow the division to be had.

Mr. COONEY. I rose for that purpose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COONEY] demands a division.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that the hour of 4 o'clock has arrived, and I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 4 o'clock has arrived——

Mr. PAYNE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state the situation.

Mr. PAYNE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Not until the Chair states the situation, at 4 o'clock, under the order. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the previous question is ordered upon the bill and all pending amendments. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAYNE. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] offered his amendment, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] offered an amendment to that, which was adopted, then the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] offered a substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and then the Speaker held that that was not a substitute, but an additional amendment, to come in after the amendment of the gentleman from New York. He so stated. I ask if that is not the parliamentary situation, and if the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is not an additional paragraph added after the amendment of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COONEY. I called for a division. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota as a substitute was held not to be a substitute, but an amendment to the section. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] was agreed to after it was amended on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], after which the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MORRIS] was agreed to as an independent amendment to the section.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. MAHON, Mr. BROSIUS, and others. Regular order.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. The Speaker, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], announced that the hour had arrived when the previous question was considered as ordered. But before that was done——

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not make the announcement on the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman from Ohio merely made the point of order that the hour of 4 o'clock had arrived.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Well, the Chair, on his own motion, made the announcement. The parliamentary inquiry is this: The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

COONEY] to demand a division and the House was dividing. Now, I submit, sir, is it in order for any business to be transacted, or even for the Chair to announce the hour for the previous question to be considered as ordered, while the House is dividing?

The SPEAKER. The moment that the hour of 4 o'clock arrives the previous question cuts off all debate. There was no division being made. The gentleman stated that he had asked for a division. The Chair did not hear it. All are aware of the confusion which existed, each gentleman having some proposition he desired to get in. The Chair thinks it is too late to take a division on that matter.

Mr. OLMSTED. I ask that the time be extended one hour.

Mr. COX. I call for the regular order under the rule.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey now rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I desire to ask the Speaker, the right to a division having been recognized by the Chair, upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, is not that an amendment which is still pending, so that a vote will be taken upon it under the rule, now that we have got it into the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not shut off by the previous question at all.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry, or a request for unanimous consent, if it is proper.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAY of New York. There was so much confusion when the amendment or proposed amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota was read that I did not hear it, and I know members around me did not hear it, and we do not know what it was. In the first place, I desire to know whether it was considered as agreed to.

The SPEAKER. It was agreed to by the House.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, then, if that is true, I now ask unanimous consent that that section be read for information as it stands, with the amendments agreed to.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Will it not be read when we take a vote upon it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. RAY of New York. I should like to know what it is.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the fourth section——

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Nobody will be recognized until the Chair states the parliamentary situation. The fourth section as amended will now be read, if there is no objection.

Mr. MOON and Mr. MAHON demanded the regular order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is it proper at this time for the House, by unanimous consent, to extend the time for one hour before the previous question shall operate, to permit the completion of the reading of the bill?

Mr. BROSIUS and others demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which shuts off the unanimous consent.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. I wish to know if it is competent at this stage of the proceedings to ask unanimous consent of the House that the bill as it now is in the hands of the Clerk be read, in order that we may vote intelligently and know exactly what we are doing?

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, because the regular order is demanded.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Clerk will report the first pending amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. Whether it will be in order, at the third reading of the bill, to have the bill read through from the beginning, with the amendments?

The SPEAKER. The third reading of the bill can be demanded. The Clerk will report the first pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 10, strike out the word "legitimate" and insert in lieu thereof "bona fide." Page 4, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "who voluntarily order and pay or agree to pay for the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, at the end of line 15, page 4, the following:
"Except publications by or under the auspices of benevolent or fraternal societies, trades unions, or orders organized under the lodge system."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LOUD. What amendment is that, Mr. Speaker? I do not think that was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. That was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. LOUD. Unanimous consent was not given as to that.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was given that it be pending.

Mr. LOUD. I hope the House will hear me for a moment. This amendment is not germane to this paragraph.

Mr. OLMSTED. The amendment simply makes the fourth and fifth sections correspond.

Mr. MOON. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 97.

Mr. OLMSTED. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Four gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number; the yeas and nays are refused, the noes have it, and the amendment is lost. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 2, after the word "act," insert the following: "having subscription list exceeding 5,000 copies."

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LOUD. The committee accepts that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California accepts the amendment, but it is not within his power to make that the action of the House.

Mr. LOUD. It is just a statement, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota demand a division?

Mr. HEATWOLE. I do.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 116, noes 21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. That concludes the amendments; and the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. COONEY. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to ask unanimous consent that the fourth section of the bill be read?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the fourth section of the bill be read.

Mr. MOON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. MOON. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOON. Is it in order now to move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

The SPEAKER. Not at this stage. After the third reading of the bill it will be. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask that the bill be read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read the third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the gentleman demand the reading of the engrossed copy, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. No. The gentleman asked for the reading of the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Will it be read as amended?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I call for order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen are again appealed to to preserve order on the floor.

Mr. CUMMINGS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen will be seated. A point of order is pending, and it was well taken.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would like to know what became of the amendment in regard to colleges which was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. It is a part of section 4. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The bill was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads without instructions; and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put, there is an amendment to section 6 which was not read by the Clerk—the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct about that.

The Clerk read section 6 as amended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to recommit the bill.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that section 4 has certainly been misread by the Clerk. My amendment was to amend by inserting so and so, "so that the section shall read as follows"——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman forgets the fact that the House has already adopted an additional amendment to that section, so that the part of the amendment would not apply. That has been ruled upon.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MOON. Division.

Mr. COX and others. The yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 96, answered "present" 16, not voting 90; as follows:

YEAS—148.

Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. DAYTON.

Mr. FARIS with Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. KERR.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa with Mr. CANNON.

For this day:

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts.

Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.

Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. BRADLEY.

Mr. SULLOWAY with Mr. CATCHINGS.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. DALY of New Jersey.

Mr. MAHON with Mr. BREAZEALE.

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. MCLAIN.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. DENNY.

Until further notice:

Mr. GAMBLE with Mr. NOONAN.

Mr. BISHOP with Mr. LESTER.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. RANSDELL.

Mr. PUGH with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. WEYMOUTH with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. CARMACK.

Mr. CRUMP with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. ADAMS with Mr. MCALEER.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. STALLINGS.

Mr. BULL with Mr. BAILEY of Texas, until Friday.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. ATWATER, until March 24.

Mr. POWERS with Mr. BERRY, until March 24.

Until March 26:

Mr. HOWELL with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

Mr. THROPP with Mr. QUARLES.

Mr. CRUMPACKER with Mr. MIERS of Indiana, until March 27.

Mr. GROUT with Mr. LIVINGSTON, until March 28.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. RUCKER, until April 5.

For the session:

Mr. REEVES with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania with Mr. POLK.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. CRUMPACKER, on all political questions. I have no means of knowing how he would vote on this question, and I desire to make the parliamentary inquiry whether it is proper that I should vote?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry; the gentleman must settle it for himself.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I find that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. LOVERING. I voted "no." I wish to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

Mr. FITZGERALD's name was called, and he answered "present."

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have a general pair with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. ROBINSON. On the day before yesterday I telegraphed to him, asking him how he stood on this question. He telegraphed me that he was opposed to the bill and desired to be paired with some one who was in favor of it. Therefore I have felt at liberty to vote against the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. DAYTON, he opposing the bill and I favoring it. Therefore I have refrained from voting.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I wish to know whether my name is recorded.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. RAY of New York. During the first roll call I was in the committee room. During the second roll call I was on the floor of the House and listening, but did not hear my name. I heard names which I knew were later than mine, and I tried to vote, but could not.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening for his name?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes, sir; but some gentlemen were talking to me, so that I did not catch it in time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order the gentleman's name to be called.

The name of Mr. RAY of New York was called, and he voted "no."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague, Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska, is absent on account of business. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I withdraw my affirmative vote and ask to be marked "present."

Mr. KITCHIN. My colleagues from North Carolina, Mr. ATWATER and Mr. THOMAS, are both necessarily absent. If they were present and unpaired, they would vote in the affirmative on this particular question.

The SPEAKER. These announcements by gentlemen in connection with a roll call, as to how their colleagues or others would vote if present, is all out of order. If gentlemen have voted, they have a right to change their votes; but announcements of members that, if not paired, they would vote "aye" or "no" are entirely outside the rule and are an unnecessary consumption of time. The practice has been permitted heretofore; but with the growing work of the session another line will hereafter be pursued.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. In view of the ruling just made by the Chair, I will not announce how my absent colleague [Mr. TERRY] would vote; but I ask that he be excused on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. That request is not in order at this time.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. MOON. On behalf of gentlemen on both sides of the House who desired to speak on this bill and have not had the opportunity, I ask leave that members be allowed to print remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. That leave has already been granted for five days.

Mr. MOON. My proposition was not quite understood. Leave to extend remarks was granted yesterday; but that did not apply to gentlemen who had not spoken at all. What I desire is that leave to print may be granted in all cases.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that yesterday, when the present occupant of the Chair was not presiding, leave was given to gentlemen who had spoken to extend their remarks.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. POLK, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Senate concurrent resolution 24:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies of a document entitled "The use of the Roentgen ray by the Medical Department of the Unite dStates Army in the war with Spain (1898)," of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the War Department—to the Committee on Printing.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. FLYNN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of David H. Mitchell, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the secretary of the Light-House Board submitting an estimate of increase of cost for light and fog signal station at Toledo, Ohio—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the case of brigantine Olive Branch, John Edwards, jr., master, against the United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Trueman E. Cole, administrator of John W. Cole, deceased, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3055) to ratify an agreement between the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and the Seminole tribe of Indians, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 744); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS FROM SHOSHONE COUNTY, IDAHO.

Mr. ALLEN. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask be read at length and lie on the table subject to call. I shall endeavor to call it up on Monday.

The joint resolution (S. R. 110) requesting the President of the United States to withdraw the Federal troops from Shoshone County, Idaho, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 110) requesting the President of the United States to withdraw the Federal troops from Shoshone County, Idaho.

Whereas on the 29th day of April, 1899, an armed mob destroyed the concentrating plant of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mines at Wardner, in Shoshone County, State of Idaho, and killed one person and wounded two others, and thereafter dispersed from the scene of riot; and

Whereas on the 3d day of May, 1899, the governor of the State of Idaho declared said county to be in a state of insurrection and rebellion; and

Whereas the President of the United States, upon the request of said governor, sent to the said county of Shoshone Federal troops, under the command of Brigadier-General Merriam, to aid the governor in maintaining law and order therein; and

Whereas the said county was placed under martial law, and has ever since that date been and now is under martial law, and the Federal troops of the United States have at all times since said 3d day of May been, and now are, within said county by virtue of the request of said governor and the order of the President of the United States; and has been in a state of peace and not of war, nor invasion, nor insurrection, nor rebellion; and

Whereas the courts have in said county been at all times since said date in the free and unobstructed administration of the law, save only when interfered with by the military authorities administering martial law in said county, and the process of said courts could at all times since the said 3d day of May, and now can, be legally served and executed; and

Whereas the officers of the United States in charge of said military forces have duly reported to the War Department of the United States that the said county of Shoshone is, and at all times since the 3d day of May, 1899, has been, in a state of peace, and that no opposition has been met by said troops while in the county of Shoshone in exercising any jurisdiction therein; and

Whereas it is not within the power or authority of the governor of Idaho or the President of the United States in a time of peace to continue martial law on account of any fictitious necessity; and

Whereas at all times since said 3d day of May, and now, in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, citizens have been arrested without due process of law and held for indefinite periods at the will of the authorities claiming to exercise martial law in said county, without any judicial process or legal warrant; and

Whereas the governor of said State has suspended the writ of habeas corpus in said county of Shoshone, and the same is now within said county suspended as against said martial authorities; and

Whereas the representative of said governor, one Bartlett Sinclair, claiming to be in charge of the Federal troops in said county, after an examination and approval by Brig. Gen. H. T. Merriam, has promulgated an order, edict, and proclamation, preventing persons from working or being employed within the county of Shoshone without first receiving a permit to do so; and

Whereas about 1,000 citizens have been deprived, by reason of said proclamation and order and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, from seeking employment in said county and from working therein ever since said 3d day of May, 1899, and have been denied the right to work therein, although their labor was in demand, and have been arbitrarily arrested without warrant and held in imprisonment without bail, and the right of the writ of habeas corpus denied; and

Whereas the right to work is a property right, and the abridgment thereof is a deprivation of the liberty of the citizens, and a taking of property and the liberty thereof without due process of law; and

Whereas such rules, proclamations, and regulations exceed the power exercisable by the State or Federal Government under any conditions of affairs, and is the inauguration of a blacklisting system against labor in violation of the statutes of Idaho and the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence; and

Whereas innocent citizens have, without any trial, warrant, or legal hearing, during and under martial law, been arrested and imprisoned because they were working within said county of Shoshone from time to time, without permits, a copy of the form of such commitments being as follows:

A copy of the form of commitment follows:

"TO ANGUS SUTHERLAND.

"SIR: You are hereby requested to take and to hold in your custody one ——— who has been arrested for violating the proclamation of the governor of Idaho, declaring martial law, and the rules and regulations of the military district established thereunder, said ——— to be held by you as such military prisoner until further orders.

'HUGH FRANCE,
"State Representative.

"WARDNER, IDAHO."

Whereas under such authority, without being informed of the nature and character of the charge against them, without being given a hearing before any committing magistrate, and being denied the right to give bail, the said Hugh France, who is not an officer exercising any civil power under the constitution of the said State of Idaho, is causing men to be imprisoned and detained at his will and pleasure, and other unauthorized persons are exercising the right of arbitrary arrest and imprisonment of citizens without any lawful warrant or authority; and

Whereas such form of commitment and warrant of arrest is a revival of the infamous system of lettres de cachet, by which innocent citizens were arbitrarily arrested and held during the reign of Louis the Fourteenth of France and his despotic ministry, resulting in the revolution of the people against such despotic tyranny, and the same is but a repetition of the unlawful arrests made under the warrant of the early kings of England, abolished by the Bill of Rights and the Magna Charta, and such warrants are illegal, unconstitutional, and unprecedented in the United States, and abhorrent to all classes of citizens; and

Whereas a punishment for working without a permit is the establishment of an industrial crime unknown to the law, and abrogates the right of contract, and creates, by virtue of its provisions, a master and a slave; and

Whereas the right of trial by jury is denied to persons held by such military authorities, and new crimes, known as "violations of the governor's proclamation," of vague and undefined character, are deemed to justify the arrest of innocent citizens at the will of such authorities exercising martial law: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the further use of the troops of the United States in aiding or assisting in the maintenance of martial law within the said county of Shoshone is improper, unnecessary, and unlawful, and that the President of the United States be requested forthwith to withdraw said troops now in Shoshone County, unless the said permit system be forthwith immediately revoked, the writ of habeas corpus restored to the citizens of said county, and martial law declared to be at an end.

SEC. 2. That the sense and purpose of this resolution is in no wise to influence the President of the United States in maintaining and keeping said troops within the limits of the said county of Shoshone to aid the proper officers in the execution of the civil law therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks that the joint resolution lie on the table. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. Subject to call. I shall endeavor to call it up on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Subject to call. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for grading and paving S and Decatur streets from Twenty-third street to Phelps place, and Twenty-second street from Decatur street to S street, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7941) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. TELLER were appointed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 22d instant approved and signed the act (S. 35) granting a pension to Louise Donath.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 2279) declaring Cuivre River to be not a navigable stream.

SCHEDULES OF CERTAIN POSTMASTERS' SALARIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 21st instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to return to the Senate certain schedules of salaries of postmasters in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Kansas, and Kentucky computed under the act of March 3, 1883, which schedules were before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, but which were temporarily recalled by the Postmaster-General on the 30th day of September, 1890.

Mr. ALLISON. That resolution was offered by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is not now in the Chamber. I do not wish to take action in his absence, but I think the resolution itself should be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then make the motion and let it be pending.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care to make the motion now, but I will make it when the Senator from Alabama comes in.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the resolution lie on the table for the present.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask the Senator to let the resolution go over without prejudice until the Senator from Alabama can return.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly; that is what I proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the resolution may lie on the table without prejudice.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXPENSES OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution coming over from a former day.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PETTIGREW was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate an itemized statement of the expenses of the Philippine Commission, together with a statement of the amount paid to each commissioner for his services and individual expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHARLES RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 2882) to authorize the Cambridge Bridge Commission to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate in full for its information.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator, before the bill is read, to yield to me merely for a request.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to request that, after the bill which the Senator from Massachusetts has asked unanimous consent to have considered shall be disposed of, thirty minutes be devoted to the consideration of unobjected pension cases on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will withhold that request until after we shall have completed the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will do so, Mr. President, and if I have an opportunity during the day I will renew the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill called up by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend by adding a proviso, which I send to the desk.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment of the Committee on Commerce be acted on. There is an amendment by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend by adding the proviso, and then the amendment agreed to by the committee can be acted on. The amendment I propose is agreed on by the committee and by all parties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a committee amendment to be acted upon.

Mr. HOAR. It makes no difference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it makes no difference.

Mr. HOAR. It is in order to move to amend the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the State of Massachusetts, within a reasonable time after the completion of the said bridge, by legislative enactment, shall provide for adequate compensation to the owner or owners of wharf property now used as such on said river above said bridge for damages, if any, sustained by said property by reason of interference with access by water to said property now and hitherto enjoyed because of the construction of said bridge without a draw.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Commerce report to amend the bill, in line 11, page 1, by adding, after the word "channel," the words:

And the piers and other obstructions to the flow of the tide to be constructed in such form and in such places as the Secretary of War shall approve;

So as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Cambridge Bridge Commission be, and hereby is, authorized to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts, between the cities of Boston and Cambridge, as provided for by chapter 467 of the acts of 1898, and chapter 180 of the acts of 1899, of the legislature of the State of Massachusetts; said bridge to be at least 26 feet above mean high water over the main ship channel, and the piers and other obstructions to the flow of the tide to be constructed in such form and in such places as the Secretary of War shall approve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUERTO RICAN REVENUES.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Committee on Appropriations there was no difference of opinion in that committee as to the propriety and necessity of making the amendments which were afterwards adopted by the Senate, and I took pleasure in helping to report the bill back here by my vote and afterwards in voting for it in the Senate.

I am sorry that the Senate conferees have seen proper to surrender to the House, and even have gone further than that, because they have returned the bill to us with an objectionable feature, to me the most objectionable one there is in the whole provision, and that is that they enlarge the purpose for which this money is to be used by including the words "for the aid and relief of the people thereof."

In the brief speech I made on this question the day the bill was passed through this body I called attention to the danger that would arise in that island by inaugurating a scheme of so-called charity there which would necessarily bring about a repetition of the abuses of the Freedman's Bureau, and I pointed out the inevitable demoralization of labor and the inevitable consequence to the industries of that island by having the Government undertake to feed the people.

Now, there are two motives behind this bill as it is presented here, or as the majority in the Senate have seen proper to present it. One is that the necessity for immediate relief of the starving people requires that the United States Government shall take this extraordinary method of supplying their wants and preventing hunger and starvation; the other is, and that is the one which is not paraded here, that our Republican friends are uneasy about the effect on the political situation in the country and the result in the coming election if this outrage of levying a tariff tax and erecting a tariff wall between one portion of the United States and another is not glossed over or explained away in some way.

Before I present the last phase of this question I will discuss the first. I beg the attention of Senators to a statement of facts taken from General Davis's report. On page 544 of the compilation known as the annual report of the War Department, embracing the reports of Generals Brooke, Otis, and Davis, I find these words. I ask the attention of the Senator from Iowa, if I may have it, to the language used by this distinguished officer, who is the representative of our Government in Puerto Rico and whose words have appeared to have great weight with his party. I am sorry that so few Senators appear to have examined this report and know so little about it. General Davis says:

The greatest difficulty is encountered in discriminating between those who are really needy and those who pretend to be so. While it is possible that every ration has not fed a really needy person, it is also certain that very little food has failed to reach those who were much pinched by hunger. Those who deserved assistance and have failed to receive it are very few, indeed.

Now listen here, Senators:

It has been found to be practicable to cut down the aggregate of food issued from about 1,000 tons per week to less than 500 tons.

This was last October—five months ago.

Constant and progressive reductions are being made in the issues as the people reach better conditions and reproduction of native fruits is accomplished.

I called attention the other day to the fact that, owing to that country being in the Tropics, if any person would go out and plant the vegetables which furnish the main supply of the food in those islands, long ere this the pinch of starvation would be over; that those people now are practically in a normal condition so far as their immediate food supply is concerned; that their present trouble and the condition of paralysis and the destruction of business arise from the fact that they have no market; that they are hedged about by a tariff on imports and a tariff on exports, and that therefore wages have fallen; that everything is in a condition of uncertainty; that the business of that country is paralyzed by reason of the fact that the farmers can not obtain money with which to start the process of rehabilitating their coffee plantations or raising cane and other products that they export—I spell the word "cane" c-a-n-e, and not C-a-i-n, as I see my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] laughing—and that the difficulty there is not that the people are starving, but that they are in a condition of business paralysis, owing to our adverse legislative action or our failure to legislate at all.

Now, I will go further in proving this by reading from the report of Surg. John Van R. Hoff, president of the board of charities, appointed by General Davis last August, in connection with several other officers, to take charge of the distribution of the food that had been contributed and of such relief in money for the purchase of seed as would soonest bring the island back to a normal condition. Surgeon Hoff says:

The responsibility of determining who is indigent is placed upon the local boards of charities, organized in accordance with the letter of August 9, above quoted.

WEAK POINT IN THE ORGANIZATION.

Herein lies the weak point of the organization, and an explanation of its cause would involve a discussion of the sociological conditions obtaining here, which are not pertinent to this report. Suffice it to say that these people are not accustomed to organize for any purpose, particularly charity; that a gift from the charitable people of our country to preserve the natives here from starvation is not regarded as a sacred charge to be honestly administered, but as a public contribution in which all are entitled to share; and, finally, a large proportion of the people are chronically indigent and always on the verge of starvation, so that it is no easy matter to discriminate between degrees of indigency.

The same gentleman further on reports:

The greatest difficulty is found in making the able-bodied men work for food, if they can, as they usually do, get it without work. It requires rather too fine reasoning for these people, and indeed much higher orders of intellect, to appreciate the fact that they are not working for food, but life; that the food is given them to prevent their starving to death, and that if there is no danger of such a result the charity of our people is misapplied.

Further on he states:

Some planting is being done, but not so much as desirable, and it is not likely in any event that the issue of food can be wholly stopped before the end of this year.

Here you have the man placed in charge of the distribution of food and the relief of the distressed telling you that the relief necessary to prevent starvation would have been ended by December.

Now, then, here it is March; and it is evident to any man who will deal honestly with this question that the effort to sustain the action of the Senate and of the House in passing this bill in its present shape is not due to the necessity for relieving starvation, when your officers, who are there in charge and who have all the knowledge of the case that is necessary, tell you it is not so.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator has probably overlooked the fact that within a very few days—within ten days, certainly—General Davis has made a request, which has been granted, that 500 tons of food and necessary supplies be sent to those people, and in that letter he states that such aid will be required for some time to come.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not overlooked anything of the kind, because I saw a statement of it in the paper a few days ago. I saw also what purported to be a press dispatch from San Juan, proclaiming that some sixty or one hundred ragamuffins, who were on the verge of starvation, had marched to General Davis's headquarters in procession, urging and begging for something to keep them from starving, whereas here we have it stated that you can not discriminate as between those who are chronically on the verge of starvation and those who have been reduced to that condition by the hurricane.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator certainly has faith in the statement of General Davis, who made this positive statement to the Secretary of War, and the War Department has acted and is acting upon his statement. He certainly would not make this request if it was not necessary.

Mr. TILLMAN. Can the Senator certify to the fact that that is an official communication from General Davis, or does he merely get it out of the newspapers?

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, wait, please. I will give the Senator my reasons for asking that. However, he may answer first whether he knows that this letter was a bona fide requisition, an official communication from the general in command there or not?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know it from having seen the communication, but I know it was stated to me in the War Department that such a communication had been made. I do not see how it could be otherwise than official.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, Mr. President, then we go back to the other prong of the proposition, or rather to the argument presented by me, that as long as you feed these people you may continue to feed them, because it is inherent in their blood, as we had it demonstrated in the South for two years, as long as the Freedman's Bureau ran, that if you will feed colored people free they will not work.

Now, there it is. The question is whether you propose to have this Government set itself up as an eleemosynary establishment to relieve that sort of distress perpetually to the demoralization of all the labor of the island, to the preventing of the planters from obtaining the necessary labor to restore their coffee plantations, and to the demoralization of our legislation here, because I do not think any man here will deny that while in an emergency such as the Mississippi floods and other devastations of nature that have occurred in this country Congress has stepped forward and felt willing to lend a helping hand temporarily toward preventing suffering and restoring in some degree, by the furnishing of seed and other assistance, a normal condition of affairs, I do not feel that it is possible for this appropriation to be sustained on any such ground; and if our friends would be honest with themselves and with us they would not contend for any such action here.

We all know that while these reports as to the condition of starvation or suffering there were before this body in December, and the President was in full knowledge of the facts, he advised that you give those islanders relief not by appropriating money that you had unlawfully collected from them—I use the word "unlawfully" as my word, not as the committee may, or as you—I say not by giving them out of the Treasury the money that you had unlawfully collected, but by giving them a chance to help themselves by removing the tariff barriers erected between them and us and allowing their products to get into the United States on such terms as would allow profit enough to restore the island to a degree of prosperity. The President declared that; the Secretary of War declared it. The chairman of the committee having this matter in charge brought in his bill for free trade, and the chairman of the committee at the other end of the Capitol brought in his bill for free trade; and there has been no contention that this——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me get through with my sentence.

There has been no contention that this action was necessary as a matter of charity to relieve the suffering until you Senators found yourselves face to face with a dilemma, and you sought to crawl out of that hole.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator now allow me a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has referred to a bill for free trade introduced in the House of Representatives by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Has the Senator read that bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. No, I have not; but our friend from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], in whom we all have absolute confidence, yesterday morning explained the matter fully to the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. But I am asking the Senator from South Carolina if he has read the bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. I say I have not.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the Senator can not say whether he approves that bill or not.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want free trade with Puerto Rico as a general proposition—as a concrete proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Senator read the provision in the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] on that subject?

Mr. TILLMAN. No, I have not; but that was a free-trade provision.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator in favor of that free-trade provision?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know what it is; but I am in favor of free trade with Puerto Rico. I do not believe in one part of the United States taxing another part. There is already on foot in this Capitol an effort to discriminate against the industries in one portion of the United States in favor of the industries in other portions of the United States by incorporating into the Constitution of the United States an amendment allowing Congress to regulate the hours of labor. I do not believe in protecting a part of the Americans against the other Americans. Let everybody have the same rights under the flag. That is the proposition I am advancing here.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit a question for information, will he explain how there is any injustice done his people if uniform labor hours are given to the laborers in this country? I do not know that Congress has the power to enact such legislation; but admitting it to be a fact——

Mr. TILLMAN. We know that Congress has not such power, and so you have got to have a constitutional amendment in order to give it to Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely. We will admit that as a starting point. How would that militate against the interests of the people of South Carolina; and what reason has the Senator for saying that there is such a purpose in the minds of those who are advocating uniform hours of labor for the workingmen?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will answer that question with pleasure, but I do not intend to be drawn off from the subject under discussion. Having incidentally mentioned it, however, I have no objection to answering the question of the Senator from New Hampshire. It is because the climate of the United States is not uniform.

In a section of country like mine, where there are only three months in the year when you are compelled to shut the doors because of the cold, and during half of those three months you can leave the doors and windows open with comfort, you can not regulate the hours of labor in the same way that you can where similar conditions do not exist and where you are required to close your doors for six months in the year and live in a hot and foul atmosphere. Therefore, we have the advantage that God gave us of sunshine, and you can not get around it.

Besides that question of labor, in this connection, as I stated, I am opposed to any discriminating features in our legislation under the Constitution, or otherwise, which interfere with local conditions, and I am opposed to having one part of the United States rob another part.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. PERKINS. He has stated without reservation that he is in favor of free trade with Puerto Rico, our newly acquired colony, where labor is worth from 15 to 20 cents a day. Is he willing that that labor should come into competition with the high-priced labor of California and South Carolina? I also ask him if he is in favor of free trade with the Philippine Islands?

Mr. TILLMAN. If we continue to hold the Philippine Islands, I shall be in favor of letting the trade follow the flag and, likewise, of having no barrier between them and us.

Mr. PERKINS. The question of holding those islands is not under consideration. We have acquired them by a treaty to which the Senate was a party, and my friend from South Carolina, if he did not vote for the ratification of that treaty, was present and had an opportunity to give expression to his views. Those islands belong to the United States as much as Alaska or California or any State in the Union; but whether we are to give them away is a question for future legislation. They belong to us now. Is it right for that cheap labor, that peon, contract labor, to come into competition with American labor?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, there is an old legal maxim, I believe, that a man can not take advantage of his own wrong; and those who voted to bring into this country and under its jurisdiction and its flag and its citizenship this cheap contract labor, this peon labor, this Malay labor, and other forms of colored labor, were told what the results would be that would follow the ratification of that treaty; and it was very hard to get the votes necessary to make that treaty a law, and I have heard you had to buy some men to vote for it. The question as to whether a wrong is to be done to the American people, as to whether a wrong is to be done to our citizenship, as to whether a wrong is to be done to those suffering people, who have themselves protested by giving up their lives against being subjugated by the American Army—that question is before the American people to-day; and it is almost the only question before them. They will determine in November whether the flag shall mean one thing in the United States and another thing in Puerto Rico and still another thing in the Philippine Islands.

I, of course, must bow to their behests, and if the majority in the election of next November say that they want to have "subjects" and citizens under our flag; that they want "dependencies;" that they want colonies, and have Congress turned loose untrammeled to legislate as it pleases, to rob those people by sending them a new army of carpetbaggers, to be protected by the bayonet, I can not help it; but, so help me God, so long as I have got a voice I shall protest against it.

But, Mr. President, as we have got off on to the Philippines—I intended to get there anyway—as I said the other day, the Philippine fever is in the blood of the country. The question here at stake is not whether we shall have free trade with Puerto Rico, but whether by giving Puerto Rico free trade we shall establish a precedent which will require us to give free trade to the Philippines. That is the issue; that is the ghost that stares you Republicans in the face and warns you to beware of the ides of November. You would willingly give Puerto Rico the same meed of government, the same opportunities, that you gave Hawaii, I presume; but you are afraid of the consequences of that, and therefore you are compelled to raise the cry that you must protect American labor against the pauper labor of the Philippines—the 20-cents-a-day man. You would not let that pauper labor alone. The same obligation to extend your civilization, if you choose, will apply to any other place you may reach out and steal or grab.

Here is Haiti or San Domingo at our doors. Why not go down there if we are under obligations to civilize and educate and rob through our Government every dependency or every other island lying around loose? If we choose to go to Haiti, nobody in Europe will object or dare to say "no;" and when we get ready to go from the Philippines on to the Asiatic mainland, and take a slice of China in furtherance of our commerce, our benefit as a people, and in a money-making way, England and the rest of Europe will be glad to see the so-called free Republic of the United States turn its face backward, carried away from the ideals of this country, reverse its action for one hundred and twenty-five years, and fall in behind the despotisms of Europe in the further enslavement of mankind.

It has been charged that it was the speech of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] which brought on the rebellion of the Filipinos. It is said that speech was cabled over there under the ocean at a cost of $4,000, and that on that speech being read to the Filipinos they rose in rebellion and began to shoot our soldiers to death. That was one of the dodges of the Republican press, the imperialist press, that wanted to try to fix the fault somewhere and throw the blame on some one.

We have had a new story within a week. I am sorry that our young friend from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] is not in the Chamber. The latest news is that his great speech in the Senate, in which he outlined the policy to be followed by this Government—the kind of tyranny or despotism we were to set up—has been translated into Spanish and has been spread broadcast among the Filipinos. That, no doubt, accounts for the recent renewal of hostilities and the liveliness which the extinct rebellion is now exhibiting again. Instead of the long-promised peace coming, the outlook is that the war will last indefinitely, because those people have found, at last, that all our professions of humanitarianism and of philanthropy and of our intention to raise them up in the scale of citizenship and give them the blessings of American liberty are lies; that we propose to go there in order to exploit them, to get them so as to furnish a new field for a new set of thieves to go and rob and rob and rob under the American flag.

Then comes along another thorn in the side of our unhappy friends on the other side of the Chamber. President Schurman, one of the Filipino Commissioners, who went out to the Philippines and did not succeed in obtaining any conditions of peace or amity with the rebels, warns you that if you are going to treat Puerto Rico in this way with a discriminating tariff, and your refusal to grant them any rights under the flag, that will only increase the determination of the Filipinos to resist to the death. So you are a very unhappy family, and I sympathize with you from the bottom of my heart. I only hope you will come to repentance some day after November, when the American people will have taught you that trade and the flag and liberty and the Constitution all go together.

What is the cause of this sudden change of front, this transformation of the purposes of the President and of Congress, as shown by the withdrawal of the free-trade bill and the introduction of the tariff provisions at the other end of the Capitol and also in this end? What caused all this change? I do not know. I have my suspicions, as I said, it was because you ran up against the proposition that if you treat Puerto Rico in a certain way, you would have to treat the Philippines in the same way; because we hold them under the same deed, and there can not be any differentiation in the treatment of the two, unless you propose to display such brassy and unadulterated and damnable selfishness and greed that you are afraid to trust your cause to the American voters.

I have here an editorial from a leading Republican newspaper, possibly the most influential paper in the West, one that is edited by a bosom friend of the President, one that has had more influence in the party councils than almost any other; and I will let the editor of that paper give his interpretation and explanation of the change of front on the part of the Republican party. If there is any Senator here who chooses to deny the soft impeachment, I will leave the brethren to settle it among themselves. This gentleman says that his paper—has been besieged by requests "for fuller and definite information concerning the origin of the present folly which has been foisted upon the party by its 'leaders' in the House of Representatives," to use the words of "a lifelong Republican," who writes from Earlville, this State. "If the President has solid base for his change," writes the pastor of a Methodist church in Lake Linden, Mich., "he is in duty bound to make it known to the country." From various sources come queries of the same tenor, all expressing wonder, amazement, regret, and indignation that the Republican party should have been placed in an utterly untenable position by its leaders in Washington, and all with one voice repudiating the action of those leaders.

That this man knows whereof he speaks is shown by the Associated Press dispatch this morning from Iowa, in which we have news of the action of the Iowa legislature yesterday denouncing this proposition to erect a tariff wall between Puerto Rico and the United States, and warning the Republicans from that State that if this course is not changed there will be a day of reckoning. "It never rains but it pours," but it seems that the avalanche of trouble, which up to a month ago no one even suspected to be in existence, has broken loose and it is now tumbling upon the heads of our friends on the other side, and they are each and every one looking for cover and trying to find some place to hide.

Our friend the editor goes on to say that he—frankly confesses that the reversal of the policy of the leaders of the Republican party in Congress is as inexplicable to-day as it was when the Committee on Ways and Means reported the 25 per cent tariff measure. In both the House and Senate the Puerto Rico bills went in free-trade lambs and came out tariff wolves.

That is Democratic doctrine, is it not?

There is nothing in the testimony before the Senate Committee on Puerto Rico reported February 5 that can in any way explain or justify the departure of that committee from its original bill, which gave free trade to Puerto Rico. True, Henry T. Oxnard, of Oxnard, Cal., the representative of the beet-sugar industry, and Herbert Myrick, of Springfield, Mass., chairman of the "League of Domestic Producers," and claiming to represent the beet-sugar, cane-sugar, tobacco, wool, cotton, fruit, vegetable, rice, and nut producers, appeared before the committee. The latter demanded the defeat "of pending treaties of reciprocity with the British West Indies, whereby sugar and other products are to be admitted into the United States at a reduction in tariff rates, and of the admission to this market of Puerto Rican products duty free."

Mind you, now, two men only appeared here.

This Mr. Myrick fairly threatened the committee with the loss of 500,000 votes to the Republican party if it fulfilled the pledge of the President to give free trade to Puerto Rico. Some idea of what transpired in the committee may be learned from the following question asked by Senator PERKINS (Republican), of California:

"You speak of 500,000 of your subscribers through your publications every week. The question is troubling me."

It seems to be troubling others besides the Senator from California.

"This committee has before it a bill for the government of Puerto Rico. It belongs to the United States to-day—is as much a part of the United States as territory as the Hawaiian Islands or Alaska. How can we, in justice to this people and to the honor of our country, have a different law for the people of Puerto Rico than for those of Hawaii? I see the force of your argument, and I shall be very glad if you can show us a way out."

There is the Senator from California, with his honesty and his patriotism and his sense of fairness, asking that question just like he would in any other business proposition. Now, let us see what the answer was:

Mr. Myrick ducked, confessing that he was not posted "in the matters of social economy," his forte being "doctrines of agriculture."

The Senator from California did not get any answer. Then—

Senator DEPEW tried his hand on Mr. Myrick with this question:

Could any government sustain itself in having one kind of policy in the relations of Alaska to the United States and Hawaii to the United States, and another kind in the relations of Puerto Rico to the United States, those all being purchase places!

Another honest and natural question.

Again Mr. Myrick appreciated "the magnitude and the delicacy of the questions," but excused himself from illuminating the problem. The examination was turned to the "expediency and justice and fair play" of treating Puerto Rico differently from Hawaii and Alaska, and the following colloquy occurred between Senator NELSON and the witness.

Our honest old Norwegian went in to see if he could get any light out of this Mr. Myrick.

Senator NELSON. Are you opposed to free trade in any form with Puerto Rico?
Mr. MYRICK. Yes, sir.
Senator NELSON. Then you are in favor of Puerto Rico placing a tariff on our wheat and flour and meats exported from this country?
Mr. MYRICK. Yes, sir; as they always have.
Senator NELSON. You want them to put a tariff on it?
Mr. MYRICK. Yes, sir.
Senator NELSON. And that is the way you represent the Northwestern farmers?

The chairman of the committee, Senator FORAKER, asked Mr. Myrick this pointed question, which went to the very root of the matter.

As the Senator from Ohio always gets to the root of the matter whenever he tries.

"Leaving out constitutional questions, would you treat it [Puerto Rico] as a foreign country or as belonging to the United States?" What Mr. Myrick would do is enveloped in that dumbness which comes to every man who is cornered between "I dare not and I would."

In these questions and replies the reader has got as near as he is likely to get to the mysterious influence that has pushed the Republican party to the verge of a precipice, over which lie dishonor, injustice, and disaster. The hollow threat made by Mr. Myrick of what he could and would do with his 500,000 subscribers and his associated producers, coupled with the wild talk of cigar makers, stampeded the committees of both Houses of Congress.

I want to finish all of this, although some of it is Republican at the tail; but we have had mighty good Democratic and patriotic doctrine announced here by this leading Republican editor.

We ask the careful perusal of the questions put by Senators PERKINS, DEPEW, NELSON, and FORAKER as demonstrating that up to January 20 no Republican leader in the Senate dreamed that it was either constitutionally or morally possible or expedient to treat Puerto Rico differently from any other territory belonging to the United States.

The truth is that the consistency and honor of the Republican party were sacrificed for cheap and cowardly political reasons, and the moral sense of the party was outraged at the bidding of the smallest fly that ever buzzed around the hub of progress.

Mr. President, I call attention to two or three points in this editorial for purposes of elucidation, if any Senator on that side who is authorized to speak, or who cares to assume the responsibility, will endeavor to explain. The first question asked here by a good old Methodist Republican up in the State of Michigan is: Has the President changed his mind or not? Is the President for free trade with Puerto Rico to-day or is he not? Is he leading his party, or has he surrendered to the dictates of the special interests that are mentioned here; and is he following the triumphal car like a prisoner of war, so to speak, and doing the bidding of those who seek to have certain American interests protected here against this little island in the Caribbean Sea? Will some gentleman please tell me whether the President is for free trade with Puerto Rico or is he not? [A pause.] Again that "dumbness" falls upon us all which fell upon the committee. [Laughter.] You either do not know or you are afraid to say.

The next question is—and I am not at all personal and have not the slightest intention of casting any reflection in any direction—why the Senator in charge of the Puerto Rican bill, the mouthpiece of his party on Puerto Rican legislation, who brought in a free-trade bill, has changed front, or, if he has not, where does he stand? Is he for free trade or is he not? The Senator will no doubt answer when he gets ready, or he can answer now.

Mr. FORAKER. What was the inquiry the Senator addressed to me? I did not hear it, as I was for the moment occupied otherwise.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am sorry that the Senator was so preoccupied; but if he desires me to repeat the question I will take pleasure in doing so.

Mr. FORAKER. I know I ought not to be failing at every moment to give my entire attention to the Senator from South Carolina when he is addressing the Senate, but I was not doing so at the moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know how impossible it is to always give attention; and when a dull, a prosy man gets up, I sometimes read or write letters, like other Senators; but if the Senator was not paying attention I thought I would wake him up.

Mr. FORAKER. I can give the Senator from South Carolina a certificate of character as against the character he is now applying to himself of being dull and prosy. The Senator is never that, and I always listen to him with very great interest.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. But as to the inquiry which has been addressed to me, I did not hear it, because I was trying to find some information which had been requested by a Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was asking, if the Senator was willing to do so, whether he would explain his present attitude, as he was for free trade when he introduced the original bill, as I understand. Now he is either for free trade or he is not; nobody seems to know, and, if he is willing to tell us, I should like to know what is his position.

Mr. FORAKER. I explained that formally in the report made on behalf of the committee to the Senate; and if the Senator will take the trouble to read Senate Report No. 249, he will find that there the whole question is discussed. It is stated on behalf of the committee in that report that we found when we came to make an investigation as to the conditions existing in Puerto Rico, that it was impossible by direct taxation on the property there to raise revenue sufficient to meet the necessary expenditures of the government we were seeking to create, and to relieve the people from that burden, as an act of mercy toward them, we cast about to find some indirect way of raising revenue, and came to the conclusion that the best way would be by tariff duties and by internal-revenue taxation provided by our bill to be levied and collected, and, in addition thereto, that, according to the estimate, amounting to $1,000,000 less than was needed, we provided that there should be a very slight, and not at all burdensome, tax levied on commerce between Puerto Rico and the United States; that being, in the judgment of the committee, within the constitutional power of Congress to do, and a good thing to do in behalf of the people of Puerto Rico.

That is the reason given in the report, and it has been given time and again on the floor of the Senate, certainly as often as I have had occasion to speak upon the subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am obliged to the Senator, for he has brought my attention to the fact that I have not had time to read that report; and when we consider that there are a thousand or more subjects coming here every day of every conceivable kind, reports by the score and bills by the hundred, and I have some other duties here besides trying to follow the vagaries of a committee which changes about face every week, it is not surprising that I could not find time to read the report. I wanted to wait until the last thing got in, so as to see if the committee would stand by that for a week or two at least. [Laughter.] I expected the matter would be brought out in the debate, anyhow, and that I would have an opportunity to make it very clear that that is not your position. I do not believe it is, and I have a right to my belief. I do not believe the Senator has tried to deceive anybody.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is at liberty, of course, to disbelieve any statement I may make.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; but I do not believe that that is the purpose of this legislation; not that the Senator has made any misstatement of fact. I would not charge the Senator with such a thing, of course. I know he is incapable of anything of that kind. If there is a bold and brave fighter here, the Senator from Ohio is that man.

Mr. FORAKER. That squares the account. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. The only thing that astonishes me is the fact that so brave and fair-minded a gentleman should lend himself to this subterfuge in trying to get his party out of the ditch into which it has fallen; and if it were not that he is more of a Republican than he is an American he would not do it.

But I did not intend to get off on that line just here. I wanted to call attention to the fact that I had, in my dull and blundering way, come to some conclusions on that subject myself and that I had interpreted the change of front on the part of the Senator from Ohio, and explained it as arising from an entirely different purpose, or rather from an entirely different power.

The editorial which I have read here happens to be from the Chicago Times-Herald, and everybody knows the brotherly Damon and Pythias like relations which exist between my friend from Ohio and Mr. Kohlsaat, and I felt constrained to believe, knowing the great love that these gentlemen have for each other, and knowing that they are both loyal to Mr. McKinley and the Republican party, that the Senator from Ohio simply got out of the free-trade boat because Mr. Kohlsaat got into it; that he could not live in an atmosphere contaminated by the presence of that person.

Mr. FORAKER. In answer to the Senator's remark, I will frankly confess, in the presence of the Senate, that I have felt since learning of Mr. Kohlsaat's attitude a great deal more confidence in my present position. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have been right along that road myself. I have in my career come across editorials in papers that had fought and lied on me for years in which my action was commended, and immediately I set about to investigate in order to find out whether I had not been wrong when I got the approval of such papers, and I can understand why the Senator from Ohio should desert his own principles and his own calmly selected position because Kohlsaat took a position alongside of him. But at the same time it does not explain why the President, who was a warm friend and to whom Mr. Kohlsaat is a trusted adviser, has changed front, if he did change front.

Nobody can tell us whether he did or not. I want some gentleman here to explain to me the present attitude of the President. I have been trying to stand by him. I bore testimony the other day to what I said was his patriotism and nobility of character.

I do not hesitate any time to say that I think William McKinley is one of the most lovable men we have had in public life in America, but the trouble is Mr. McKinley will not stand up and have backbone sometimes. Republicans would have been in a heap better fix politically if he had stood by his free-trade proposition and let you gentlemen go on and fight it out among yourselves and pass a free-trade measure or not. "But whom the gods would destroy they first make mad," and confusion of counsel is the beginning of madness. That is my interpretation of the present situation.

We had testimony the other day that God Almighty had given us the Philippines; that the honored President pro tempore of the Senate and his colaborers on the Paris commission had very little or nothing to do with it; that it had come directly from the Almighty; that He had held us in the hollow of His hand; that the glory of our future history was to come from the fact that we were to reach out and grab up that island and this island; that we were to treat the colored races of those islands, not like we treat the colored people in the South, or not like you gentlemen once tried to treat them, but as we of the South have felt constrained to treat them; that you gentlemen have changed front on that subject, and that we were to have a glorious future, with so much money and emoluments and wealth flowing into our coffers in consequence of this new policy that we could not descend so low as to give the credit to the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Maine and their brethren on the commission, who had gone over to Paris and demanded the cession of these islands in the Pacific and had enforced that demand to the point that we got them, or got what title Spain had.

Nobody will tell us, as I said a moment ago, whether the President is for free trade or not. I wish I knew. I wanted to have the pleasure of supporting some measure that he had sent here, and that I could indorse honestly as an American without regard to being a South Carolinian or a Democrat, and now I am robbed of that pleasure. You gentlemen are cruel to us. Why do you not let us do something some time as Americans and not force us always back to the narrow rut of Democracy; and why do you not do something some time as Americans and not be such narrow, bitter partisans here?

Mr. PERKINS. My friend the Senator from South Carolina having mentioned my name in connection with the interview, perhaps it is proper that I should reply.

Mr. TILLMAN. Not the interview, but the examination before your committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Of course I am not authorized to speak for the President; but I am inclined to think that his views—I may have imitated them in that respect—were influenced by what was referred to by my friend the Senator from South Carolina, that great trusts were being formed in Puerto Rico for the purpose of controlling the sugar traffic. The Republican party is opposed to trusts and combinations, and knows that the only solution of that problem is the establishment of local beet-sugar factories, such as there are in Nebraska and in Utah and in Iowa and in Michigan and in California—which has some ten or twelve independent beet-sugar factories. They buy the raw product from the farmer, refine it in their own factories, and send it to the mechanics' table. That is the antidote for trusts.

Mr. TILLMAN. You mean the sugar trust?

Mr. PERKINS. For the sugar trust. These beet-sugar factories are buying from South Carolina the cotton cloth that is manufactured from the cotton grown in their fields. We are buying those sacks in which to put the sugar that we may send it out to our mechanics and our workingmen. We are paying from $1.50 to $2 a day for labor in those factories, and each farmer who is cultivating the soil and raising sugar beets is an independent sovereign in this fair land of ours. We are paying $100,000,000 annually for sugar in this country. We want to manufacture it at home, from our beet sugar, raised by American farmers. We do not want the cheap peon contract labor, receiving 10, 15 or 20 cents a day, to come into competition with the labor of South Carolina and California. I think, perhaps, that is one of the reasons which influenced our good President, because his whole life has been devoted to protection to American industries and the elevation and dignity of labor. But this is a longer statement than I was going to make, and I see I am wearying the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, no; I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the Senator from California.

Mr. PERKINS. I beg pardon.

Mr. TILLMAN. Because he has given us such a far-fetched explanation that it does not explain worth a cent. I have read somewhere that in the Koran there is a description of Mohammed's bridge over hell by which those entering heaven must pass, and I think he describes it as being so attenuated that it is about the breadth of a single hair on a woman's head. That is about the size of the bridge my friend the Senator from California has given the President to crawl out of the hole in which he was put when he sent the free-trade message here and then backed water and changed front on it.

Mr. PERKINS. How about the tobacco industry of South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. Speaking about the allusion which my friend has made, I will say to him, as to the purchase by the sugar producers of the cotton bags in which to put the sugar of the few factories in the United States, that we are very glad to furnish the cotton cloth, if it comes from my State, but the manufacturing industry of South Carolina—the manufacture of cotton principally—which we will say in 1890 showed that there were only 400,000 spindles, has doubled and trebled since, until they have now eighteen hundred thousand spindles and a proportionate number of looms. Since the 1st of January we have organized new mills or given charters to new enterprises to build mills to the amount of $4,000,000, and we are reaching out hand over fist to overtake Massachusetts. We are already the second State in the manufacture of cotton.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me get through. We do not find a bit of protection from the Dingley tariff, because we export all of that cloth to China; and we have to compete with England; and we do it, and we whip them, and make 20 to 40 per cent dividends on our cotton factories.

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask my friend the Senator from South Carolina whether it was the wise Democratic policy administered under President Cleveland, or the progressive policy under McKinley, which brought about this great revolution in his State, as well as in almost every other State of the Union?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not think either McKinley or Cleveland had a thing in the world to do with it. It was because we had the cotton at our doors, we had the mills, we had the labor, we had the money, or went somewhere and got it; we built mills, and we can spin or weave cloth, and we can beat all creation making the coarser fabrics.

Mr. PERKINS. The Republican Administration gave confidence to the people of this country, Democrats, Populists, and Republicans alike, and it was that confidence which has enabled my good friend and his associates to build these factories, to build up and foster these great industries. I join hands with him and rejoice with him in the prosperity that has come to us under the McKinley Administration. You may call it what you please, but it means sunlight and happiness and joy to every home and family in this land, while before, under my good Democratic friend's Administration, there was a shadow, the sun was always behind a cloud, there was a want of confidence, and we expected that it might rain any time then. Now it is a reign of prosperity and happiness to all our people. May it long continue. It will continue so long as McKinley is President.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator imagines that he is before a Republican meeting somewhere in a schoolhouse in California talking to the faithful about the same old religion. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. It is good religion.

Mr. TILLMAN. When as a matter of fact the impetus to our industries in the way of cotton manufacturing did not begin with McKinley's Administration, but it began ten years ago, and the hard times of 1893 and the panic that followed did not cause any cessation, but only a slight retardation of that development. It was because we have found that we can make more money spinning cotton than we can by raising it and selling it to you to spin. When the Senator tells us that confidence brought all this back, I would tell him that we are still in sackcloth and ashes in South Carolina, because we are still free-silver people to the backbone, and we are still moaning in the outer darkness because of the recent iniquities you have perpetrated upon us in the way of the financial measure and the single gold standard, and all that kind of thing.

But we have decided that we are in the United States and must remain there, and if there is any good to come to us by working we will work and get it, and we do not want any help from outside; but we do not like to see you gentlemen, who proclaim the doctrine of equality of man and that trade follows the flag and that liberty and humanity and all that were the predominating influences in governing your conduct in the Spanish war and in the acquisition of the Philippines and Puerto Rico—we do not like to see you belie your professions. You have grown to be the most arrant hypocrites alive about it, and I am ashamed of you. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been unavoidably absent from the Senate during the past five days, and very likely I do not know exactly the status of this discussion. One week ago to-day I yielded the floor, without addressing the Senate as I was intending to do, for the purpose of having a vote on this particular bill, as I remember it, after a very lengthy speech had been delivered by the Senator from South Carolina. I enter the Chamber this morning to find that he is repeating that speech, and I wonder how it happens that this beneficent measure has not before now been sent to the President for his signature.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit just a slight interruption, I suppose it is one of those fortuitous conditions which will enable the Senator to wind up his eloquence and set it going, and I shall listen to him with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina. He has always been courteous to me, and I am always courteous to him. I do not propose to indulge in any eloquence, but I desire to state two or three plain propositions in reference to the matter that is now under consideration.

Under the leadership of the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico, I sat in the committee room for three long weeks listening to testimony given by Americans, residents of Puerto Rico, by native Puerto Ricans, and by citizens of the Kingdom of Spain in reference to the condition of the people of that little island. In that committee there was only one thought, and that was to do what was best for Puerto Rico. The quality of our mercy was not strained, and no thought, I feel sure, entered the mind of any member of that committee to recommend anything or to do anything that would not be for the best interests of that people, destitute and suffering as they were then and are to-day.

Mr. President, I have been one of the Senators who has voted for all kinds of appropriations during my membership in this body. I have voted for appropriations to build levees on the banks of the Mississippi River, spending millions upon millions of dollars for that purpose—appropriations the constitutionality of which I think might well be called in question—and then I have voted for appropriations to relieve the sufferings of the people of the Mississippi Valley, when those embankments that were constructed largely at public expense did not prove sufficient to protect the people from the overflows of that mighty river. I have never, Mr. President, indulged in technicalities or speechmaking on those occasions, but have come to the rescue of those people with my vote gladly and cordially, feeling that it was a beneficent thing for the Congress of the United States to do.

So, Mr. President, when we propose to make an appropriation from the public Treasury to relieve the sufferings of the people of Puerto Rico, I confess that I regret more than I can express that other considerations are brought into this controversy, and that we are treated to disquisitions on political subjects and the relative position of political parties on public questions. I think we ought to pass this bill promptly and without a moment's delay, and for that reason I yielded the floor one week ago to have the bill immediately acted upon.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] in his speech on Friday last said that Puerto Rico was not being governed any better by the United States than it had been by the Kingdom of Spain. Mr. President, it hardly seems necessary for me to say that that is not so. Spain collected taxes on all the products of Puerto Rico, including coffee. The exports of Puerto Rico are four-fifths coffee, and yet Spain exacted tariff duties upon their coffee when it entered a Spanish port. We admit coffee into our country free of duty to-day, as we did while Puerto Rico was in possession of the Spanish Kingdom. We are treating Puerto Rico better than we are treating any of the Territories of the United States.

We collect internal-revenue taxes in New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma, and those internal-revenue taxes go into the Treasury of the United States; but in dealing with Puerto Rico we propose that the internal-revenue taxes collected there, as well as the import duties collected against the products of that island, shall go back to Puerto Rico for the purpose of helping those people to rise from the degradation and suffering that are upon them at the present time.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Can you collect taxes without some expense attaching?

Mr. GALLINGER. Presumably not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well, then. If you leave with the people the taxes you collect and not put them to the expense of paying them into the Treasury of the United States, so that you may have the benefit of any philanthropy which you may claim for paying the money back to them, would they not be better off? If you leave them alone, would they not be better off than if you take the money out of their pockets and put it into your pockets, and then transfer it with the other hand and give it back to them after you have paid a whole swarm of officers to collect it?

Mr. GALLINGER. That does not answer the suggestion I was making at all. I simply say that we are treating those people better than we are treating the Territories of the United States over which the Constitution of the United States has been extended by direct legislation of Congress; and the few dollars which may be expended in collecting those taxes are certainly not worth considering in this connection.

Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina last Friday, and I think again to-day, has argued that after all there can not be very much destitution in Puerto Rico. To-day he read an opinion from somebody——

Mr. TILLMAN. I read it from the statement of the surgeon of the United States Army who by General Davis was placed in charge of the board of charities to distribute this food. He is not "somebody" or—well, he is somebody, sure enough.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator read an opinion, then, from the surgeon in charge whose duty it was to distribute the alms of the United States among those poor people, given several months ago. I do not know exactly when——

Mr. TILLMAN. October.

Mr. GALLINGER. In October last, saying that in all human probability we would not need to continue helping those people beyond the 1st day of January of the present year. General Davis, who has been governor of that island for a considerable length of time, gave testimony before our committee on the 17th day of January of the present year, and he seems to differ very materially with the gentleman quoted by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. He simply differs with himself. I quoted from General Davis first, and then from the surgeon afterwards.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from South Carolina, of course, will admit that General Davis may have expressed an opinion last July or August or September as to which events at the present time show that he was laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. TILLMAN. I agree to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Indiana (Mr. FAIRBANKS) suggests to me that in General Davis's second report he expressly makes the statement that he had been laboring under a misapprehension. It will take a few minutes to read it, but I want to put into the RECORD what General Davis said about the island as he found it a very short time ago. He said, in his testimony before our committee:

> This crop of sugar at this year's prices—about 80 pesos per ton—should therefore bring an income to the island of 3,600,000 pesos, or $2,160,000, as a maximum.
> In my report of September 5 I stated this at 5,000,000 pesos, and in report of September 30 at 60,000 tons; but revised and better studied figures give but $2,160,000 as the value of the sugar for export.
> In September I also estimated this year's coffee crop at 53 per cent of a normal one, or, say, 18,000,000 pounds, or about one-third of a normal output; but it appears that this estimate is not borne out by experience. What the tornado spared has now been harvested, and very careful and close inquiry reveals the fact that the yield varies from 0 to 33 per cent of an ordinary crop. I can find no well-informed person who believes that the total yield for export will exceed 10 per cent of a normal crop, the average having been for last five years of Spanish dominion 23,732,078 kilos, official figures.
> Of the crop harvested last winter and exported this year, the custom-house officers report 29,478,329 kilos, which is somewhat above the normal export. It is conservative to estimate the total of this year's growth available for sale abroad at not more than 3,500,000 kilos.
> The average prices obtained for coffee during the five years referred to was 51.9 centavos per kilo, or 23.6 centavos per pound, which is equal to 14¼ cents gold. The loss of markets, and especially the Cuban, reduced the value of coffee to the producer to about 9 cents gold; but the restoration of the Cuban market, by recent Executive order, has practically restored the price, so that what remains on hand of the former crop and what may be sold from the one of this year will bring an average of about 12 cents, gold, per pound.
> Taking the salvage from the hurricane at 2,273,000 kilos, or 5,000,000 pounds, it is readily seen that for this year the insular income from coffee will be only $600,000 instead of the normal figures of about $7,000,000.
> My original opinion that the crop would fall off but two-thirds was based on the opinion that certain somewhat sheltered regions would give a half or two-thirds crop, and that other localities would make a showing of from a quarter to one-half, for enough berries were left on the bushes to justify this opinion; but the hope has proved illusory. The berries that survived were largely blighted, and as the necessary shade was gone, the direct rays of the tropical sun scorched and shriveled the green fruit. Much of what remained was worthless, and the harvest is most disappointing.
> There are hundreds of coffee groves, indeed thousands, where no more remains than will suffice for home consumption, or none at all; and in the least exposed groves the quality is poor and the quantity is disappointing.
> I shall be agreeably disappointed if the harvest surpasses 10 per cent of a normal crop. A few sanguine persons have expressed the belief that the percentage may reach 15.
> The only other crop of magnitude that, exported, yields a revenue to the producer is tobacco. During the last five years under Spain the exports averaged 3,998,052 kilos, selling for 750,809 pesos, or 19.4 centavos the kilo, which is equal to 5.3 cents, gold, per pound. The poorer grades went direct to Europe, netting the producer 4 to 6 centavos per pound, and the better to Cuba, realizing from 25 to 35 centavos; but this market is now closed by a prohibitive import duty of $5 per pound. Exported to the United States, the better grades pay a duty of $1.85 and the poorer 35 cents per pound. Duties on tobacco are high in European countries, and as a consequence of these high taxes in all markets there is little commercial movement for this important Puerto Rican product.
> In my cable of August 28 to the Assistant Secretary of War I estimated the tobacco then in the island at 4,000,000 pounds, which is about a normal crop. Since then some of this has been sold in Europe, a little in the United States, in leaf or manufactured, and a little has been exported to Cuba. The American Tobacco Company has lately bought the largest manufactory here, and the new management is understood to be arranging for a larger trade with the United States, the product of manufacture to be in the form of cigarettes.
> The ever-recurring hope on the part of the inhabitants that there will soon be free trade with the United States, combined with the fact that some American capital has been invested in this industry, has stimulated the tobacco interests somewhat, and the planting of the new crop now going on will, contrary to my formerly expressed opinion, be of somewhat more magnitude than that of last year, probably yielding at least a normal crop of 4,000,000 pounds; and, at present prices, this would net to the producers about 750,000 pesos.

The custom-house returns show exportation since Spanish evacuation to September 30 of three and a quarter million pounds of tobacco, which includes some old stock of 1898, and this has brought returns to the farmers of about $200,000; while the unsold residue now in the island may raise the total income for the sold and to be sold—i. e., the whole crop of 1899, with residue from 1898—to perhaps $400,000.

* * * * * * *

The foregoing as respects the reasonably certain output for this year of the three great staples, and giving also the average export under Spain for five years ending 1897, we have the following:

Staple.	Estimated value for export, 1899-1900.	Actual average export, 1893-1897.	Reduction.
Coffee	$600,000	$6,080,409	$5,480,409
Sugar and molasses	2,100,000	2,403,963	303,963
Tobacco	450,485	450,485
Total	3,150,485	8,934,857	5,784,372

Here, then, is a presentation of the facts, as I interpret them, regarding trade conditions. The principal falling off is in coffee, which, as a commodity for considerable export, will not exist. This year's output of the three great products, compared with exports of the last five years of Spanish control, shows a falling off of very nearly 65 per cent of the insular wealth available for current needs.

The island has a few minor resources, but the aggregate of all exports other than the three staples amount to but a few hundred thousand dollars, and some of them are showing greatly diminished quantities and values.

The most important of these are live stock, but the exportation of beef brings another evil, an enhancement in the local value of fresh beef, so that it is quite too costly a food save for the well-to-do classes.

But the appalling diminution in exportable goods is not the worst feature of the existing situation. Credit is absolutely gone for all, save the sugar and tobacco producers, who have visible security. While the present price of sugar yields a margin of profit, there is little confidence that the ruling price will be permanent, unless the trade conditions are changed for the better. The best grades of centrifugal sugar sell for about $50 per ton net to the producer, but not more than half the cane products are of this grade. The muscavado sugar commands but about $40 per ton, or a little less, and at this price there is little or no margin of profit. It is only the large, central establishments that are now prospering.

Suffice it to say that General Davis estimates that the value of the coffee for export the present year is $600,000, against an average export of $6,080,409, and that the sugar exports will be $2,100,000, against $2,400,000, that the tobacco export will be $450,000, against the same amount in former years, making an aggregate for the present year of $3,150,485, as against $8,934,857 in a normal year.

The sugar output—

touched its maximum in 1879, 170,000 tons, while last year it fell to less than 45,000, or but a little more than one-fourth of the maximum. Very large expenditures in new plants and in restoring cultivation must be incurred before the sugar output can be increased, and this can not be made for the present.

The coffee fields, now smothered in weeds, uprooted trees, and débris of the storm, can not be cleansd and rehabilitated without capital, and this can not be secured. This year's sales of home productions in these commodities will bring returns of but about $3,000,000, whereas the island is accustomed to receive almost $10,000,000 for these same products, and there is nothing to replace them.

The condition of more than half the inhabitants has always been one of abject poverty. It is not difficult to foretell the consequence of the obliteration of two-thirds of former means of subsistence. It is doubtful if any land or district populated by nearly a million souls has, in modern times, been so devastated and overwhelmed as was Puerto Rico in one day of August last.

Heretofore coffee represented 70 per cent of the island's trade, but the next crop will probably not exceed 6 per cent of that value—the average of which, for the last five years, having been over sixteen and a half million pesos, representing the value of exports of the three principal commodities.

Mr. President, I have no disposition to enter into a discussion of the political situation. I will, as one member of that committee and as a Senator of the United States, say that the political exigencies to which the Senator from South Carolina alludes have had no influence whatever upon me. I have acted with the purpose of helping those people in the best possible way that could be devised, and I have no other object or purpose in mind.

The Senator from South Carolina pictures the disaster that is to come to the Republican party in November next because of the action that we have taken in the matter of Puerto Rican tariff duties. That is familiar talk to me. In my State the Democratic party carries the election every year in March, but it never carries it in November, and the Senator from South Carolina will very likely have his mind disabused on that point when the people of the country vote next November, after they have come to understand that we are endeavoring to legislate for the best interests of the people of Puerto Rico; and notwithstanding this clamor which has arisen in the country, the second sober thought will lead them to comprehend the fact that we have no other purpose than to legislate for their benefit and advantage.

Mr. President, we have given Puerto Rico a beneficent rule. The President selected as governor of that island General Davis—in my opinion, the ablest executive officer we have in the Army of the United States—an intelligent, broad-minded, conservative, generous man. Under his administration half a million dollars from the Treasury of the United States has been expended to relieve the sufferings of those poor people, and now we propose in addition to that to vote more than $2,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States to further relieve their sufferings and their distress.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is a difference of opinion between the Senator from New Hampshire and me in regard to the source from which that money comes, and I confess I am not so certain that I will be disposed to dispute his statement; but if I did not misunderstand General Davis's figures and the sources of the income which he has expended, I think the Puerto Ricans have contributed to their government through such sources of taxation as import duties and local taxes the amount from which that relief fund came. If the Senator is positive, of course I will not dispute it; but I think he is mistaken.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I think I am not mistaken. I think we have expended the amount I named.

Mr. TILLMAN. The amount has been expended; there is no doubt about that, and General Davis expended it; at least it was expended under the board of charities which I have mentioned; but what I speak of is that the Senator is mistaken in supposing that it was contributed from the United States Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the record will bear out the statement I have made.

Mr. President, a great hue and cry has been raised, and the Senator from South Carolina has added his eloquent voice in that direction, that we are in some way under the dictation of the trusts in this country in the legislation which is proposed for Puerto Rico. In other words, that the representatives of great aggregations of capital have come to Washington and taken this committee by the throat, taken the Republican Senators by the throat, and said to us that we must impose a tariff duty upon the products of Puerto Rico. It is familiar to every man who will recall the fact that when we imported sugar free from Hawaii the same cry was raised that the sugar trust had taken us by the throat; and now that we propose to impose a duty upon Puerto Rican sugar, the same old cry is revived and sent out to the country, that the trusts are dictating the policy of the Republican party.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator recall the fact that his colleague from California [Mr. PERKINS] himself mentioned that what had brought his mind to see that a change in this matter was necessary was the fact that the beet-sugar producers of the United States would be injured by the influx into the United States of additional free sugar, and that he wished to guard against that from the Philippine Islands, and therefore he had altered his opinion. I am not the author of the accusation about trusts at all, but it comes from others. It is true, Mr. Oxnard is in the beet-sugar trust, if there be one, and it is also true that Mr. Claus Spreckels is in the cane-sugar trust in the Hawaiian Islands, where you have given the sugar free access here. And yet you turn around and levy a tariff duty on sugar from Puerto Rico and you have not explained why you do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, the Senator says that Mr. Oxnard is in the beet-sugar trust, "if there be one." I am glad that the Senator qualified his statement, because I think I am safe in saying that there is no such trust; that if a trust exists in sugar it is entirely separate from the beet-sugar industry of the United States.

I only know, Mr. President, that in Nebraska, Iowa, and some other States of our country the people are investing their capital and are trying to raise beet sugar at a profit. I think it is safe to say that they have not made much profit out of the venture as yet. I have been glad to come to the rescue of those people and am willing to take the responsibility that may attach to my action by giving them a chance to invest American capital in the production of beet sugar and giving them a fair profit out of the investment of their capital and of their labor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator contend that the 40,000 tons of sugar now produced in Puerto Rico, with the 170,000 tons which were produced when the industry was at its maximum growth, would affect the beet-sugar industry in the United States one-quarter of a mill?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will do me the honor to read the minority report from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico, which I was very happy to have my friend from California sign with me, he will find that I went a little beyond Puerto Rico in my discussion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, the Philippines are the trouble here. That is the whole thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I undertook to give a good reason for the dissenting opinion that I wrote.

But, Mr. President, this talk about the trusts in this matter is simply for the purpose of influencing public opinion and nothing else, and I say there is nothing in it whatever. We have had only one trust that has been urging legislation through this committee and upon the American Congress, and that trust is to-day suffering at the Arlington Hotel with a British vice-consul at his head. That trust is composed of the men who bought last year's Puerto Rico sugar output, and who, I am informed, have an option upon the output of sugar in Puerto Rico for the coming year. They are the gentlemen who are raising this commotion to a very considerable extent, and they are the gentlemen whom we are oppressing, if we are oppressing anybody.

The British vice-consul, Mr. Finlay, appeared before our committee, and when I asked him the question as to whether he was engaged in business in Puerto Rico or not, he said, "Yes." "What is your business?" "I am a sugar planter." "Have you a very large sugar plantation, Mr. Finlay?" "Oh, fifteen hundred acres, and 5,000 acres in addition to that which are not very productive." Mr. Finlay and the gentlemen who are operating with him, who, as I say, are suffering to-day at the Arlington Hotel, bought the sugar upon the full Dingley rates, and if we pass the bill imposing a duty of 15 per cent they will get the benefit of 85 per cent and will make a very large fortune. But of course they would like the 100 per cent, because they would make a little more money than they would on 85 per cent.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are we to dicker here with our consciences and our obligations as Senators in regard to a great constitutional question and an issue that is so important, and consider whether somebody somewhere may get a little money out of this change of legislation?

You can not levy a tariff at any time anywhere that somebody who has goods afloat or in bond will not get the benefit of it. I recollect that when passing the war-revenue measure I proposed a tariff on tea, and it went through. I asked my friends on both sides of the Chamber if I ought not to propose a tariff on coffee, and everybody said, "There ought to be a tariff on coffee, because there is no difference and it would be purely a revenue tariff, but if you do that the Arbuckles, or somebody else, I have forgotten whom, would make a great sum of money, because they had cornered the coffee of the country." You can not stop that kind of thing or prevent it. We are discussing principles here, not policy or the question whether somebody is going to make a few dollars out of any change in legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. There may be a difference of opinion as to whether we are discussing principles or not. There might be, I think, a safe criticism offered upon the speeches made by the Senator from South Carolina as to whether or not he confined himself exclusively to the great constitutional principles which he sometimes elucidates.

I have no disposition to engage in any controversy or to make a single suggestion outside of the merits of this case. We propose to give Puerto Rico $2,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States. The Senator from South Carolina says we stole it from the people of Puerto Rico. Well, that is his opinion. My opinion is different. We collected it under the laws of the United States. It was legally collected. It is our money, it is in our Treasury, and now we propose as a humanity-loving people to put our hands into the Treasury of the United States and take $2,000,000 out of it and send it to Puerto Rico as a humane offering to assist those people in their suffering and distress and poverty.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. And I will say that we ought not to take, as I did not one week ago, one single moment of the time of this body in getting this bill enacted into a law, so that those people can have the benefit of our generosity at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The amendments of the Senate to the House bill as it came over here gave the tax back as a specific sum, and for that I voted. The Senate conferees have submitted to the House, by which they continue to give back the taxes collected; and I do not see why you should continue to collect taxes and then turn around and restore them to the people from whom you take them. You have an ulterior purpose here, and you know it. When I say you, I do not mean the Senator from New Hampshire, but I mean the Republican party.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, I will ask the Senator from South Carolina if he does not know that under the existing law we are compelled to collect those taxes? Has the President of the United States any constitutional power to say to the people of Puerto Rico, We will exempt you from the payment of taxation?

Mr. TILLMAN. I believe not, but this Congress can, in an hour, pass a bill by which Puerto Rico will be relieved, and we will reach our arms around her and take her to our bosom. Instead of that you hold her throat with one arm and then cram charity down her throat with the other.

Mr. GALLINGER. I venture to say, in reply to the Senator from South Carolina, that the Congress of the United States will not pass the bill he alludes to in an hour, because I am sure the Senator would insist on making a speech on that bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I dare you to bring it in. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not the authority, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me, we had some dares here yesterday; but when the bob-tail flush of my friend from Ohio was sprung on the Senate, the Senator from Vermont came up missing, and therefore you did not win the game. Now, if you want to dare me not to make a speech and pass a bill bringing Puerto Rico within the United States and no limitations under our Constitution, with all its rights, I dare you, I say, to bring in a bill. Nobody on this side will debate it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has the advantage of me now by his use of language that I do not understand. [Laughter.] I have no authority to bring in any bill. I am not chairman of the committee, and of course the Senator can safely challenge me to do what it is not in my power to do under any circumstances.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon for using the word "you." It is not in the rules for a Senator to use that in a personal sense. When I say "you," I dare the Republican majority here to bring in such a bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, the Republican majority probably will transact its business in its own way, unintimidated and uninfluenced by threats or suggestions from the Senator from South Carolina. He has already relegated the Republican party into a minority party. He has already defeated the Republican party next November; and now I take it for granted that the Republican party, during the few months of life that have been allowed to it by the Senator from South Carolina, will go along in its own way and transact business without any reference to the dictation or suggestions from the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I beg pardon for having supposed for one moment that anything I would say—because I certainly had no such thought—would influence the majority in any way. They are bound to go their own road, and they are bound to whip in their minority, although they now appear to be in rebellion. You can not get a vote, you dare not come to a vote, for fear you will not have a majority to do your dirty work.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, that is a matter of taste. Whether it is dirty work or otherwise, I will not enter into a discussion of that point with the Senator from South Carolina. The Republican party can stand on its record. Its legislation is known to the world. When this legislation is accomplished, I have no doubt whatever that while it will confound the Senator from South Carolina, it will be very gratifying to the people of the United States.

However, Mr. President, I did not rise to make a speech, but simply to make a suggestion, which I have endeavored in a desultory way to make, that in my opinion the time has come for us to vote on this report; and if the Senator from South Carolina will now enter into a contract with me, and not take any more time in its discussion, I will yield the floor in the hope that we may have an immediate vote.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I shall take but a few moments. That would be a very poverty-stricken intellect which could not discover that in all this discussion there has been very little said upon the question before the Senate. The debate, so far as it has been a debate at all, has consisted of political speeches, some of them, I venture to think, not entirely, in dignity, appropriate to this place. I think my friend from South Carolina can with propriety revise some of his remarks.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, if my kind friend—and I mean that in no perfunctory sense, because I consider myself honored by being able to claim the friendship of the Senator from Wisconsin—will indicate anything that I have said which was not proper for this presence I will take great pleasure in making such revision or recantation as I think would be necessary under the circumstances.

Mr. SPOONER. I have not had any desire that the Senator should recant or revise on my account——

Mr. TILLMAN. I know, but on my own account.

Mr. SPOONER. Or on account of the party to which I belong, but on his own account.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say on my own account. Will the Senator be kind enough to indicate the words to which he takes exception?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, I will indicate them. When the Senator referred to some contemplated action or possible action by the "other side," as it happens to be from where I am now standing in this Chamber, I am quite unable to see how he can gain his own consent to denominate it as "dirty work." Nor am I quite able to see—and as the Senator asks me I will state it—how the Senator finds it entirely proper to refer to some of the votes upon the treaty as having been "bought." I leave that, however, for him to settle with the Senators who are involved, if there be any, in that suggestion. The Senator, if he desires me to file further a bill of particulars——

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to hear it all, sir, if it is a dose of apology that I have here to take.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask for no apology.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to get it all in at one time.

Mr. SPOONER. I doubt somewhat, and I am modest about it, if the Senator should have charged us, on the question of our adherence to the principle "equality among men," with "hypocrisy," with the adjective which he used. The Republican party has always been in favor of equality among men. I can not say the same of the Democratic party, nor can the Senator; but, Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Now will the Senator allow me? Are you through with this?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think it is very well to have the amende honorable, if I am to make one, come in immediately after the accusation or the attack. I do not consider it in any personal sense or as displaying any ill feeling on the part of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. President, I am unfortunately one of that class of men who are quite as plentiful as they ought to be, who will sometimes say things in the heat of debate that in calmer moments they would not utter. But I never say anything that I do not mean, and therefore I think when the balance sheet is made up in the next world, as undoubtedly it will be, there will be a good deal to my credit for not having used words to conceal thoughts or taught my tongue to practice deceit.

And now, to come down to particulars. On the matter of dirty work—that is perhaps a bad adjective; it is a Saxon adjective that leaves a little bad taste in the mouth. But the question is, What sort of work is the Republican party engaged in in this Capitol?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina will suspend one moment. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from South Carolina concludes.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor and has kindly yielded to me to make answer to his catechism.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina will suspend one moment. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily while the Senator from Wisconsin concludes his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from Ohio will allow the consideration of this report to be completed.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I ask that its consideration may be completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily until the completion of the discussion upon the conference report. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

Mr. TILLMAN. The word "dirty," Mr. President, has various meanings. My purpose in using it a moment ago was to express my feeling as regards the class of legislation upon which we are now engaged. That is, that we are legislating here for an island and its people that came into the United States without any volition on their part, that gladly welcomed our army. The people were pledged by our general in command to all the rights of citizenship and the benefits under the flag.

I speak in general terms. I do not give the exact words. Therefore, if we have any bowels of compassion or any sense of honesty and decency among us as a people, we are in honor bound to see that that island and its inhabitants are not discriminated against or ill used or legislated against or imposed upon in any way possible for us to prevent.

Now, under the guise of charity we are here appropriating money collected under our laws, under the Dingley Act, in our own ports upon their exports to this country. Instead of removing the barrier—taking down the custom-houses as far as they are concerned, admitting their goods to our shores like people from any other part of the United States would have the right to demand—we say to those people, "You are not citizens, you are not our equals, you have not the rights of the Constitution, we do not intend to give them to you except by piecemeal, if at all;" and you go on and you legislate in a way to show that greed and selfishness and party exigency are at the bottom of the legislation you propose here.

Well, "dirty" may be too strong. Will the Senator suggest some adjective that will fit the case? If I have not described it properly, I should like to have a substitute that will not offend his refinement and his good taste. What shall I call it?

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator speaking to me?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am speaking to the Senator from Wisconsin. What kind of work are you engaged in?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will take time to consider, I think he will have no difficulty in calling it by some adjective which any gentleman would use in speaking of a matter upon which he differed with others. I think the Senator will have no difficulty when he stops to consider, if he will, in admitting that it may be possible for men to differ from him in opinion upon questions of legislation and public policy without subjecting themselves to any just imputation of dishonesty or trickery or mere party politics.

I will not undertake now to furnish the Senator with the adjective for the reason, among others, that it would not perhaps be proper for me to do it, and for the further reason that the Senator from South Carolina has a fine vocabulary and always uses the proper word when he chooses to use it. I know of no Senator better able to choose appropriate words and to use them than the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, Mr. President, I think I am stumped. [Laughter.] The Senator from Wisconsin reads me a lecture, and I confess that in some things it is possibly deserved. I think that Senator and other Senators here will bear me out in claiming that I am not a narrow man. I am not a bitter partisan. Well, I will say that I am no more a bitter partisan than the Senator from Wisconsin, if he will compromise on that. I have been a man who would vote the Democratic ticket without regard to who was the nominee if he got his nomination regularly, but I even got above that once.

Mr. SPOONER. Was that by accident? [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I got there by argument and in the light of day and by calmness and consideration when I decided that if Grover Cleveland was nominated by the Democrats as President in 1896 I would have to go somewhere else. But that is not the issue here. We are discussing the word "dirty." I confess that if it would offend the Senator, I will take the word out absolutely, and just say "do their work." I can not put any other word in there to express my idea and feeling of the work they are doing except that it is dirty.

But, if it hurts the gentleman's feelings or if it offends his party associates here, I will take it out. I have no desire to leave any sting by any of my words. I do not know what else to say in my idea of the work that is being done or proposed to be done here except to class it as dirty. It may be that that is more comprehensive and covers more points than any other one word would do. I suppose if I were to sit down and get a book of synonyms I would find some other word which would be more euphonious and appropriate; but I will leave it out and let it read that "the Republicans are to do the work."

Mr. GALLINGER. Why not say beneficent?

Mr. TILLMAN. Then that would be a lie, right red-hot. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. President, in regard to the word "hypocrite," which seems to have hurt the Senator's feelings in regard to the equality of the races, I do not know that I can even modify that; because if I have ever seen anything which indicated to my mind hypocrisy, it has been the attitude of the Republican party with regard to the colored races in Hawaii and with regard to the Filipinos, who are nearly all colored so far as we are concerned, and the attitude of the Republican party toward the negroes of the South.

I do not want to bring up the old race issue in this Chamber. I have already had my say on that subject. I have expressed my opinion and feeling as to the inconsistency of the attitude now occupied by the Republicans and their past attitude in the light of their treatment of these other colored people who have come to us by conquest and by acquisition under the Hawaiian joint resolution.

But I say I can not modify that word, because if the Republicans are not hypocrites on that subject, and if they are not hypocrites now in dealing with this Puerto Rican question in pretending that it is a charitable move they are engaged in and that they desire to uplift those people and prevent them from starving, I do not know what else it may be.

If the Senator can justify the taking of taxes by the Dingley tariff from one part of this country and putting them into the Treasury and turning right around and giving them back by Congress, he will have a much more difficult task to convince the people of the United States—the plain, everyday people—than I think he will be able to accomplish.

If he can succeed in it, while he is one of the most eloquent and persuasive and honey-tongued men in this body, if he can go to Iowa, where the farmers have risen in their wrath and notified their legislators and the legislators have notified you; if he can go to Illinois, where I understand there is more of the anti-Puerto Rican fever than there is in Iowa; if he can go to Indiana, where I understand the fever is also very prevalent, and pursuade those people that they do not understand it, but that you people here know more about it than they do, and that on their sober second thought after they have heard from headquarters their consciences will have to give way to their greed, I think the Senator will be congratulated. If the Republican party can persuade the people of the United States next November that this legislation is honest, that it is not hypocritical, and in some sense it is not dirty, then I will feel that the American people have entered upon a road that is, to say the least, one that does not portend to the glory and good of this country.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the Senator, when the settlement of accounts to which he refers comes, will, I have no doubt, be credited with a great many good things, a great many kind impulses; and I have no doubt, either, that he will not find it charged against him that an opportunity ever presented itself for him to use his tongue which he did not eagerly embrace. So far as the attitude of the Republican party as to the principle of equality among men is concerned, I take no time to speak of it; but the last place on earth where any impeachment of it should originate, in my judgment, is the State of South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like for the Senator, as he has particularized my State now, to hear the details. I am ready to give them to him if he wants to raise the issue, and to state how and why that has been able to be charged against us. I am not flinching.

> Lay on, Macduff,
> And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

It will not be me.

Mr. SPOONER. I based the observation, although it is not at all pertinent, as almost everything else which has been uttered here is not at all pertinent to the conference report, upon the testimony of the Senator from South Carolina as well as upon the history of this country. The Senator stated the other day on the floor of the Senate that they had made a great effort in South Carolina to disfranchise the "nigger;" that they had stuffed ballot boxes, and that they had used the shotgun against them. That is why I say that from South Carolina there ought not to come criticism upon the Republican party as being opposed to equality among men.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is that all?

Mr. SPOONER. That is all for this moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. All for that purpose. Get through with your indictment of my State, and then I will answer.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not indict anyone.

Mr. TILLMAN. You are indicting me as the representative of that State.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are you through on that point?

Mr. SPOONER. I am through with that sentence.

Mr. TILLMAN. Have you any more? I should like to have you finish and bring in all the counts.

Mr. SPOONER. I will yield to the Senator. That is count enough.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in rising here to explain my language, and to justify it, I have not the documents at hand to sustain all the charges I make, but I will, briefly and in the best way I can, recapitulate the conditions which brought about the necessity for stuffing ballot boxes, for shooting negroes, and for using violence and fraud in taking charge of our State government in South Carolina. The Senator, I suppose, did not understand me to say that such conditions exist there now, because I have never made any such acknowledgment.

I proclaimed the fact that in 1876, when we had stood eight years of carpetbag government and there was nothing left us of our civilization unless we rose in our might and took the government back from the carpetbag horde of thieves and scoundrels and their scalawag allies, the native-born rapscallions, who had been foisted upon us at the point of the bayonet—when government ceased to yield protection, when there was semianarchy, when 8,000 armed negro militia were parading up and down the roads, threatening our wives and our children and our homes, when at night burning houses were lighting up the horizon in almost every county, when the conditions were so appalling that any kind of government, any military despotism, was preferable to that, we made up our minds that the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution were themselves null and void; that the acts of Congress under them placing our State under carpetbag rule were null and void; that oaths required by such laws were null and void, we resolved that the intelligence, the wealth, and the patriotism of the State, belonging only to the white people, should seize the government from the horde of ignorance and vice; that we would not longer tolerate bribe-takers on the bench and thieves in our high places; that life was not worth having on the terms and under the conditions forced on us.

We swore by the memories of revolutionary sires that we would redeem our State from the grasp of aliens and negroes, and we did it; and I have no apologies to make for it. If you contend that no indictment of Republicans can come from South Carolina, I will tell you that the Republican party was responsible for that condition of things; I will tell you that Grant, who was then President, sent the army there to hold down the whites and perpetuate the condition of misrule and anarchy and robbery which prevailed, and where the troops were the white majorities, the Democratic majorities, were the greatest—not by reason of the presence of the troops, but because the whites did not hesitate to vote early and often and to carry the elections in any way that was found necessary. The Republican party did all that wrong blindly, but it does not now treat the colored races that have come to us as it treated the Southern negroes, and that is the reason why I charge it with hypocrisy.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the Republican party was not responsible for it. The Republican party, it is true, after the war had ended, gave to the colored man the right to vote. The Republican party did not enact that legislation upon the theory that it was necessary in order to prevent future Democratic successes. At that day no one dared to prophesy that the old Democratic party of the war times would live very much longer; no one foresaw its wonderful vitality.

The Republican party enacted that legislation, wisely or unwisely, because there had been enacted in the Southern States what were called "black codes," which almost restored the colored man to slavery. The Republican party enacted that legislation in order to give the negro a weapon of defense against such legislation; and they enacted it, Mr. President, in order to maintain in the sight of God and before all the world in good faith, in letter and in spirit, the proclamation of emancipation which had been signed by Abraham Lincoln; God bless his memory forever! [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. In the first place, Mr. President, let it not be forgotten that in dealing with the race question in the South those of the Southern people who were engaged in the civil war, the Confederate war, had inherited those slaves. They had been taught from childhood that the existence of slavery was not wrong, morally or legally. The author of the Declaration of Independence was a slaveholder; the Constitution recognized slavery; and after the strife was over and the issue had been settled by the sword, the question as to the disposition of the emancipated slaves was, of course, a very perplexing one.

The Senator says that but for the enactment by the Southern legislatures of the "black codes," in which there was to be a practical restoration of slavery under the guise of liberty, there would have been no enfranchisement of the ex-slaves; that they would not have been given the ballot. History does not state that, and the condition of politics at the time does not warrant it.

Those who voted for it, or some of them, were no doubt honest in the belief that it was necessary, but there is no earthly doubt but that ulterior and baser motives were at the root of it. There was first a desire of revenge by putting the ex-slaves in control of the Southern States and putting white necks under black heels. There was next a desire to perpetuate the domination of the Republican party in the United States.

Then, when it comes to a comparison of the action of the two parties, I say to the Senator that there are a great many wrongs that the negroes have to suffer in the South, and there will continue to be many. Neither he nor anybody else can help it; we can not help it; and no legislation which can be enacted can help it. It can only cure itself in a better atmosphere, and be solved by the people concerned, because outside influence and outside interference would only aggravate the trouble and more embroil the fray.

But I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have in the past month had introduced here from a Republican committee a provision upon the Hawaiian bill by which contract slaves in that island were to be governed under a similar black code to that which we enacted in South Carolina and in other Southern States. You sought to perpetuate that condition in your own bill, for the benefit of the sugar planters, until it was stricken out by a motion on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, it is quite true, Mr. President, that the Hawaiian Committee reported a bill which contained many provisions which were amended by the Senate.

The Senator from South Carolina from my standpoint—doubtless not from his—is mistaken when he attributes the passage of the law giving to the colored man the right to vote to a mere desire for party supremacy or to any motive of revenge.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Allow me to proceed.

But, after all, that is a matter, perhaps, of little consequence. The negro during the war had won the eternal gratitude and appreciation of his old master. There never was a day during the war, Mr. President, nor a night, on which the negro slaves of the South could not have disbanded the Confederate army. They could have resorted to the torch; they could have resorted to all manner of violence. But they did not. They were left in charge of the plantations; they were left in charge of the wives and daughters, as well as the property there, and I believe it is true that during all those years there was nothing on their part but solicitude for the mistress, and loving, tender care for the children.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. They knew perfectly well, then, that their masters were away in the army engaged in a struggle, the result, if not the object, of which would be to fasten more firmly upon them the shackles of slavery. They knew, even to the humblest of them, that our Army was an army of liberation; they knew that when the flag of the United States came into their vicinity it meant freedom to them; and yet they were a kindly, faithful people, resisting all temptations to remember the past. They had nothing in their hearts of vengeance.

All I mention that for is to say this in regard to it, that when the struggle was made to take by fraud and to take by violence, even to the extent of the shotgun, from the negroes, their participation in the government—whether that participation had been wisely authorized or unwisely authorized; perhaps some other scheme of protection should have been devised for them—it was violence against right.

The colored man had the same right to vote, Mr. President, under the laws of the United States that the white man qualified to vote possessed. The colored man has the same right to come to the Senate of the United States and sit here as a Senator in the place occupied by the Senator from South Carolina as the Senator has under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

I will not talk about a resort to fraud. That is peaceable, at least. I never yet, however, have been able to find justification for the use of the shotgun, for murder, against the man who had a right to vote, and who sought, under our Constitution and our flag, to exercise that right.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me now?

Mr. SPOONER. Let me finish, please.

But what happened happened. The right was practically taken from them—taken, as the Senator says, by fraud, by violence. Later it was taken by a constitutional provision. All I meant to say—and I say it again—was that, with that history, with that usurpation, with that trampling upon the rights of American citizens by violence and fraud, I am tired of hearing from South Carolina this eternal prating about "equality" as to Puerto Ricans and as to the citizenship of the Tagals.

But, Mr. President, this is all inconsequential. It has nothing to do with the measure before the Senate. If the Senator supposes that he has in his heart any more friendliness, or that Senators on his side of the Chamber have any more friendliness in purpose for the people of Puerto Rico who have recently come under our flag, he arrogates a vast deal to himself and to his associates.

I object, for one, to that persistent assumption. We are as anxious to do what is right and what is generous and what is honest by the people of Puerto Rico as the Senator, although we may differ in our opinion as to the measure which is wise and which is best adapted to the exigency.

Because the Senator differs from me and because his associates upon his side of the Chamber differ from me, I find no warrant for impeaching his integrity of purpose, I find no warrant for denominating his action as an attempt to do the "dirty" work of a political party, as a campaign is approaching or a Presidential election is approaching. Mr. President, I am frank to say that, in my judgment, if this were an "off" year, if it were two years removed from a Presidential election, the debate in both Houses upon this subject, as well as upon the subject of the Philippines, would have been very different from what it is and from what it has been.

I think sometimes it would be a good thing for the people of the United States, save in very great exigencies, if the legislation in a Presidential year could be confined to the necessary appropriation bills. Nothing can come before either branch of Congress without political maneuvering upon it. Hardly anything which is debatable can be discussed upon its merits; and of all the time which has been taken here upon this conference report, which I propose to discuss briefly in a moment, not thirty minutes have been devoted to the conference report itself. We have had political speeches from the beginning of it to the end of it.

The Senator from South Carolina has challenged us again and again to state the attitude of the President upon this subject or that. I am not here to speak for the President. I am here, just as every other Republican Senator is here, loyal, as we are, to the President, loyal, as we are, to our party, to do under our oaths what we think is right in meeting these questions, which are new questions, which are complicated questions, and which, Mr. President, require thought and care and moderation, instead of vituperation and political harangue.

Now, what is the question before the Senate? I understand that Senators on the other side who voted, I think, without a roll call for this appropriation bill will now vote against it. Why? Because the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and his associate conferees, barring the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], for whom I have very great respect, yielded to the House of Representatives and reported from the conference committee the bill substantially as it passed the House rather than as it passed the Senate. It has been attacked from the Democratic standpoint and from the Populist standpoint, whatever principles that standpoint involves.

The Senator from Iowa has been criticised for changing his mind. He has been asked here to rise and state how it happened that he changed his mind. The Senator from Iowa does not very often have occasion—and it is a just tribute to his wisdom—to change his mind after he has deliberately reached a conclusion; but between the two Houses we are obliged often to make concessions.

I think the bill ought not to have passed the Senate, Mr. President, with the Senate amendment in it. I think, if the Senator from Iowa came to the conclusion that the Senate amendment was ill-advised, he reached a correct conclusion; and I have little respect for a man who can not change his mind. He is either one of those men who thinks he is always right, or who would rather be consistent than to be right. Such a man is too narrow a man, too selfish a man, to be a fit public servant in high places.

I will not say that the opposition to this amendment is a pretext, for that would not be courteous; but I do venture to say, Mr. President, that the objections which are made to it here are as "baseless as the fabric of a dream."

The Senator from South Carolina says we robbed the Puerto Ricans of this money. We did not. He speaks of a constitutional principle involved in this bill. There is none, as I understand the bill. This is not a proposition to put in force a tariff between the United States and Puerto Rico.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me, as he goes along, to make some points?

Mr. SPOONER. Always.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course he has got off from the bone upon which he and I have been gnawing; but we shall come back to that after a while.

Mr. SPOONER. I thought I had allowed the Senator many times to interrupt me.

Mr. TILLMAN. I got up three times, but you were so enthused that you absolutely turned your back on me and went on with your speech; but that is neither here nor there. I will discuss the South Carolina case and the negro question just as soon as I get a chance; but right here I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SPOONER. I have never consciously declined to yield to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know the Senator did not intend to do it. He would not have been guilty of any intentional discourtesy, but he was so enthused with his speech, and wanted to finish his thought, that he did not yield to me. The Chair will say that I got up and asked to interrupt the Senator two or three times, but he would not yield. However, that is neither here nor there. We shall not dispute about that. I do not charge the Senator with any purpose of showing me any discourtesy or any indignity.

Mr. SPOONER. I disclaim any such intention.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know the Senator would not; but I desire to ask the Senator a question, with his leave. I am only a common farmer, and therefore I suppose it is perhaps presumptuous that I should ask a question of such a great lawyer as is the Senator. The question I wish to ask him is, Where do you get your authority to appropriate this money out of the Treasury of the United States? You do it under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, do you not?

Mr. SPOONER. Well——

Mr. TILLMAN. Is that true or is it not true?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not care whether it is true or not.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to know whether, in your opinion as a lawyer, it is true or not?

Mr. SPOONER. We have the power to appropriate, and I think we get it——

Mr. TILLMAN. Under which clause of the Constitution?

Mr. SPOONER. We get it from the same clause of the Constitution that we got the power to appropriate to relieve the sufferers from the floods in the South.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is under the general-welfare clause. Do not let us go to splitting hairs and to run off on these byways.

Mr. SPOONER. We get it under the same clause of the Constitution under which we got the power to govern Louisiana.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is under the general-welfare clause.

Mr. SPOONER. Well?

Mr. TILLMAN. Then is Puerto Rico a part of the United States or is it not?

Mr. SPOONER. We are not sitting in Puerto Rico.

Mr. TILLMAN. But we are sitting here legislating for Puerto Rico, to give her money out of the Treasury of the United States if she is a part of the United States; and if she is not in the United States and if you do not appropriate it under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, you have no right to appropriate it at all.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, I heard the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I intended that the Senator should hear me and that everybody else should hear me.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, we derive our power to appropriate money, of course, from the Constitution. Whatever may be said about the question of whether the Constitution follows the flag or not, or whether the Constitution ex proprio vigore—the Senator understands that, I suppose?

Mr. TILLMAN. I believe I know what it means. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator says he is "a common farmer." I deny it. He is an uncommon farmer. [Laughter.]

Whether the Constitution ex proprio vigore extends over Puerto Rico or not, there is no question whatever but that in some sense Puerto Rico is a part of the United States. Puerto Rico belongs to the United States. We obtain our right from the Constitution to legislate for Puerto Rico. I do not think the Constitution ex proprio vigore extends over Puerto Rico. I know, however, that it extends over us, and that we are exercising constitutional power here.

Mr. TILLMAN. To take money out of our Treasury and spend it outside of the United States?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Or in the United States? I am trying to get the Senator to determine whether Puerto Rico is in or out, and whether the Constitution is there or not. If it is not there, how do you get authority under the Constitution to give it any money?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the Constitution is there; nevertheless I think we have the power, as Puerto Rico belongs to the United States and as its people are in a way dependent upon the United States, to appropriate money for their relief, and to subserve their best interests in every way, which we propose to do.

Did the Senator vote for this bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. I did.

Mr. SPOONER. Where did you get the constitutional authority to do it? [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not a question of my getting any constitutional authority for it at all. I often follow bad examples here; and when your committee brought in that proposition and said it was a humanitarian measure, intended to keep the people of Puerto Rico from starving to death, I voted for it, because I thought it was returning to those people the money you had unconstitutionally taken from them. That is why I did it.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the Senator voted for it believing it was unconstitutional and believing it was founded upon a lie?

Mr. TILLMAN. I believe it was founded upon a lie, undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. Undoubtedly. Well, the Senator is rather suspicious.

Mr. TILLMAN. My associations have not tended to dispel any suspicions I brought into this body. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator sees nothing but ulterior purposes and mystery in everything and everybody. I have always found that a man who is suspicious of everybody in the world needed watching.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then watch me. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. I have watched the Senator from South Carolina, and I have never in my heart for one moment doubted his integrity—never. I must say that in order to make it clear that my remark had no personal application.

Mr. President, when this bill originally passed the Senate, it passed as a bill of mercy, did it not? It passed on the theory that by the fortunes of war a people had come to us out from under the paralysis which the tyranny of Spain brought to every people that Spain governed, a body of men, women, and children in distress, intensified by the forces of nature, by a hurricane which devastated that island; and upon that theory the Senator from South Corolina voted for this bill, and upon that theory all Senators on his side of the Chamber voted for the bill. That was true then, and it is just as true now as it was true when this bill passed the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is an amendment as the bill is brought back here from the other House which changes the situation.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; there is an amendment, and I am going now to speak about that; and then I will finish.

What is the amendment to this bill, Mr. President? As the bill passed the Senate it limited the power of application by the President of this $2,000,000 to entirely public purposes—

> To be used for the government now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein.

The only relief that it could bring to those who were in individual distress would be in their ability to earn wages under the Government in the construction of public works, waterworks, sanitary improvements, roads, schoolhouses, and all that which with this money might be inaugurated in Puerto Rico.

It was urged here, among others by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], that it would not reach some cases which were pressing; and he suggested an amendment to it authorizing the President to use a portion of the money for "agricultural" relief. Some thought that it would be discriminating to use it for agricultural relief and not leave the President at liberty to use it for relief in any case where humanity demanded it.

We passed the bill, I think, with a wrong provision in it. We passed the bill because it was a gratuity, because it was a generous act to the people of Puerto Rico, but tying too much the hands of the President in his utilization of it.

I think the Senate conferees wisely yielded to those of the House of Representatives, and the measure is brought back in this situation from the conference committee, providing that the money shall be used for the Government—

> now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein until otherwise provided by law.

It can be used now, Mr. President, as it could not have been used as the bill went from the Senate, for the purchase of seed, where necessary to enable men who have not the money with which to purchase seed to plant their fields and rehabilitate their farms and to engage in productive labor. It can be used now, wherever the President finds there is pressing distress, to relieve that distress.

Of course it is without limitation as to the objects of relief. We can not know in detail the necessity for relief. That is a new people to us. This whole proposition is new to us. It is easy to criticise. As Byron says, I think in his "Review of the Scotch reviewers:"

> A man must serve his time at every trade,
> Save censure; critics all are ready-made.

But we who have to act in formulating public policies, who have to study and think about them and every phase of them, have a very much more difficult and complex problem and burden upon our hands than those who are not charged especially with the duty, but who have the utmost liberty, with or without thought, to criticise what we do.

Mr. LINDSAY. I wish to make this suggestion to the Senator: Whether or not, whenever the necessities of any people are so great as to demand at the hands of the governing power intervention to relieve them from their personal distresses, the money appropriated for their relief is appropriated for a public purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. I so regard it in a general sense and in the generous sense. It is a public purpose in one way.

Mr. LINDSAY. If that be true, where is the difference between the two bills in that respect?

Mr. SPOONER. Because of the doctrine noscitur a sociis. I think the President would have had, perhaps, great difficulty in distributing this fund to have reached the conclusion that he was at liberty to use it to alleviate cases of individual distress. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me—and I am not technical about this at all—it is, under the bill as it passed the Senate—

> To be used for the government now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein.

There was, I think my friend will agree, great danger that the clauses together, applying the doctrine of noscitur a sociis, would have forced the conclusion upon the President that he was limited to these special public and governmental uses.

At any rate, an administrative officer disbursing a fund under such a statute would feel compelled to be very careful to come within the law prescribed by Congress, and he might very well say to himself, as the Senator, I think, would say to himself, and as I know I would say to myself, that if Congress had intended that any portion of this fund might be utilized in cases of individual necessity, might be utilized for the purchase of seed for this farmer or the other, they would have said so in the bill.

Mr. LINDSAY. Does the amendment say so?

Mr. SPOONER. The amendment says so, I think. It says—

now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein until otherwise provided by law.

All the language that was in the bill as it passed here is in it now, except the conferees have added "for the aid and relief of the people thereof," and I think, especially in view of the discussion, the President will have no doubt of his authority to utilize this money as we intend it shall be utilized, in relieving whatever distress he finds there which it is absolutely necessary to relieve.

Whether he may draw the line between those who are chronically in want and those who are for the time being in want, as suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, I do not know. The Senator says that the experience of the South showed that where the colored man could get support without working he would not work.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say it again.

Mr. SPOONER. "I say it again," too. That is probably true; and I say, too, that I believe where a white man without working can get a living by the aid of colored labor, he will not work very much.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course not, neither in South Carolina nor in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. SPOONER. No. So we not differ much about that.

Now comes the other provision which makes so much trouble here. It is said that by this bill, if it is passed as presented by the conference report, we in effect declare that the Dingley law is to be continued as against Puerto Rico. I deny it.

There is no proposition in this bill to affect the Dingley law at all. There was no proposition in the bill as it left the Senate to change the Dingley law at all. The Dingley law is in force as against Puerto Rico. It is in force because by the acquisition of territory the President acquires no right to repeal or modify an act of Congress. These duties were not "stolen." These duties were lawfully collected, Mr. President.

I read in the hearing of the Senate the other day, not in support of the proposition that we may constitutionally impose duties upon Puerto Rico differing from those which apply to the remainder of the United States, a statement from Fleming against Page, which I will read again only for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the Senate the fact that that proposition may be as our Democratic friends claim it, and yet it be absolutely true that it was lawful to collect these duties. The court says:

The principle thus adopted and acted upon by the executive department of the Government has been sanctioned by the decisions in this court and the circuit courts whenever the question came before them. We do not propose to comment upon the different cases cited in the argument. It is sufficient to say that there is no discrepancy between them. And all of them, so far as they apply, maintain that under our revenue laws every port is regarded as a foreign one unless the custom-house from which the vessel clears is within a collection district established by act of Congress, and the officers granting the clearance exercise their functions under the authority and control of the laws of the United States.

So it is stated by the court that in the Florida case, after Florida had been ceded to the United States, but before a collection district had been established there, the revenue officers, sustained by the Attorney-General, held that the port was a foreign port, and the duties then existing by law should be collected. Now, what is this proposition?

We have collected, and I say lawfully, in my opinion, this money. We are proposing to appropriate it from the public Treasury for the benefit of the people of Puerto Rico, not because we robbed them of it—for we did not—but because we wish to be generous to Puerto Rico, and because it is our duty to be generous to Puerto Rico. I said the other day that of the $2,000,000 collected nearly $1,800,000 were collected from duties on sugar imported; some from duties on tobacco.

I said that a comparatively few men paid that duty. I sought to ascertain how many paid that duty and who paid it. It was paid by the importers. I received this telegram in answer to my inquiry:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 21, 1900.

Senator SPOONER:

The following telegram just received from the collector customs, New York: "The principal importers of sugar from Puerto Rico are A. S. Lascoils & Co."—

The gentlemen who are suing to recover it back—

"Lawrence, Turnure & Co., American Sugar Refining Company, L. W. & P. Armstrong, Muller, Schall & Co., John Farr, and Melchor, Armstrong & Dessau."

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me right here? It has been brought into this debate before, but it is just as well to put it in again, if he will allow me.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Those gentlemen paid the import duty on sugar—those five or six firms.

Mr. SPOONER. They are the principal importers.

Mr. TILLMAN. No matter. We may say for our purposes that they alone paid it. Where did they get it? They bought the sugar from men who grew it, who raised the cane and ground it up and manufactured and prepared it for market and sent it to them, did they not?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, probably.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well. The importers who paid this duty bought the sugar from the producers. They bought it at the usual price of sugar in New York, minus the tariff which we levy. In other words, the producer had to lose the tariff. Then that producer had to reduce the wages of everybody who had anything to do with raising that cane, and the whole burden fell back on the laborers in Puerto Rico and the owner of the plantation. It did not fall upon these importers at all. They are only the medium by which the money was paid into our Treasury.

The producers of the sugar are the ones who have received a less price for their product by reason of the fact that the duty existed. If it had not existed, if Puerto Rico had been under your construction of the law put in a collection district of the United States, and there had been no barrier between Puerto Rico and the United States, then the price of sugar would have been higher in Puerto Rico, and the wages of the laborer would have been higher, and you would have a benefit extending all along down the line through every person engaged in sugar production.

As it is, you have collected it from five importers over here, and you turn around and send the money back to Puerto Rico, and you make the people in Puerto Rico engaged in sugar production contribute to the support of the government there and to the support of all the other people of that island. I say it is unjust and dirty business.

Mr. SPOONER. Apparently everything with which the Senator from South Carolina does not happen to agree is unjust—that is bad enough—and dirty also.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I wish to say that the Senator from South Carolina is quite mistaken with respect to wages in Puerto Rico. The testimony before the committee is distinct and clear to the effect that wages are not lower in the island to-day than they were when the Government of the United States entered into possession of the island, and that in a large portion of the island the wages are higher to-day than they have ever been.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. SPOONER. I have not finished.

Mr. TILLMAN. You will not allow the Senator from Indiana to interpose and then not allow me to get back?

Mr. SPOONER. Proceed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Indiana if his information extends as to whether or not that increase in wages there has not arisen because of the public works, the building of roads, and other things which the Government has of itself undertaken and for which it has paid? Then, if your statement be true as a general thing, in the name of God, why are not the Puerto Ricans better off than they were before, and why do we want to go down there and establish soup houses to keep the people from starving to death if they can all get work at higher wages than they ever could before?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I stand corrected by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. He says there has been a slight increase in wages among agricultural labor, but the people are out of work in many places.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, nearly all of the gentlemen whose names I have read from the telegram are bankers. They are the bankers, I am told, of the American Sugar Refining Company, and they imported this sugar for the American Sugar Refining Company. There is no proposition here, nor has there been, to pay any portion of this money to the laborer who produced at starvation wages this sugar. The Senator from South Carolina has made no suggestion of that. The Senator from South Carolina is in favor, I believe, of a refund of the cotton tax.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am.

Mr. SPOONER. Are you in favor of giving it to the labor which produced the cotton?

Mr. TILLMAN. If you can find it.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, you can not find it.

Mr. TILLMAN. In that connection, as the Senator is trying to rake up all the old sores between the Southern people——

Mr. SPOONER. This is not an old sore.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is an old sore, dragged in here by the horns. You have already gored me all around, and now you come at me from behind.

I call the attention of those whose bowels of compassion have been so stirred here over the terrible condition of the starving Puerto Ricans to the fact that after the Southern States—we will take South Carolina as an example—had been devastated by Sherman's army, and nothing but chimneys were left to mark the homes of our people from Savannah to Cheraw, in a swath 70 miles wide, when there was not enough left in the way of food to keep a crow alive, in addition to all the ills we had to endure by reason of the disorganization of our labor, you turned around and in your love and kindness for the Southern people levied a tax of 3 cents a pound on cotton, a special product raised in the South only. There was a devastated and ruined country that had borne all the horrors of war, had been burned up, their labor system torn up, their government overturned and everything, and then your compassion and sense of justice put that special tax on. Why did you not put it on wheat and corn and tobacco and other agricultural products? Why did you go to the South only to do it?

Mr. SPOONER. All that that amounts to is that the Senator——

Mr. TILLMAN. That you loved us so, and you did not have any other feeling than love. You loved us so well that you pinned us to the flag with bayonets, and then turned around and took everything you could from us, and when you could not get anything more by law you turned the negroes and carpetbaggers loose to steal what little was left!

Mr. SPOONER. We pinned our flag around you with bayonets, and you ought to thank God for it, for with that flag around you we brought you all back into this Chamber and into your old home to stay.

Mr. TILLMAN. We are here to stay and we demand our rights, and we are not to be trampled on and badgered and patronized any longer. I say that as a South Carolinian I am the equal of any Senator on this floor, and I propose to have my say here, no matter whose feelings it hurts.

Mr. SPOONER. You do not hurt my feelings.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, I do not want to.

Mr. SPOONER. And you have not frightened me.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not tried, and I could not if I did try.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from South Carolina is right again.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am nearly always right; at least I am honest.

Mr. SPOONER. I have admitted that, and if it will do the Senator any good I will admit it again. But all that the Senator's observation amounts to is that we are treating the people of Puerto Rico with infinitely more generosity than we have treated a portion of our own people.

Mr. TILLMAN. Indeed you do.

Mr. SPOONER. And yet, in the next breath, he stands here and almost froths at the mouth because we are treating Puerto Rico and its inhabitants with such horrible cruelty. We are treating the people of Puerto Rico with a generosity up to this date absolutely peculiar to the people of Puerto Rico. We have had no such case before.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why do you not wrap the flag around them?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina must not interrupt without obtaining leave.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Chair's pardon.

Mr. SPOONER. I stated that this sugar was imported by the American Sugar Refining Company almost entirely, as I understand it. I stated the other day that they paid the duty upon it. I stated that if it were refunded—and I think it has no effect upon the labor over there, and no one has proposed and no one will propose that a refund of it should be distributed among the producers of sugar. The producers of sugar are comparatively few.

One has been here in this city, one who is not a citizen of the United States and was not a Spanish subject. He does not propose to become a citizen of the United States. He produces, I think, or controls, 50 per cent of the sugar raised in Puerto Rico, and he is the only gentleman whose representatives have been to me concerning the tariff between Puerto Rico and the United States, and he asks that the trade shall be free.

Talk about trusts, protected industries! I never understood that this 15 per cent of the Dingley rates was a protective duty. No man on our side of the Chamber, so far as I know, has ever so regarded it—not at all. It is a duty levied solely for the benefit of the people of Puerto Rico. But I did not intend, nor do I now intend, to discuss that bill.

I want to say this, and this only, on that subject, that the only measure which has been proposed in either House of Congress, so far as I know, upon this subject, which could benefit directly or indirectly a "trust" was the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] the other day to appropriate this money not to the people of Puerto Rico, but to the importers who paid the duty.

Mr. TILLMAN. He just simply made a mistake.

Mr. SPOONER. He did make a mistake, and he withdrew it.

Mr. BERRY. Which Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Arkansas, Mr. JONES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin touches me on so many sides.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not referring to the Senator just then. Where did I touch him?

Mr. TILLMAN. I had a good one for you, but I will wait.

Mr. SPOONER. The trouble with the Senator is that he is too "touchy." Under the bill—and I will be through in a moment—we collect these duties and we will continue lawfully to collect these duties until by law we have changed the Dingley rates. This bill provided—

That the sum of $2,095,455.88, being the amount of customs revenue received on importations by the United States from Puerto Rico since the evacuation of Puerto Rico by the Spanish forces on the 18th of October, 1898, to the 1st day of January, 1900.

That was the way it passed the Senate. We were to appropriate for the benefit of Puerto Rico the money collected upon imports from Puerto Rico up to the 1st day of January last. Is there any reason why we should not have included in that appropriation the money collected from those imports since the 1st day of January last?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me now?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. The only reason why that provision should not be in there is that you do not accompany it with a provision that then duties shall stop. You ought not to inaugurate a system here of taking money out of those people's pockets with one hand and then handing it back to them with the other, and continuing that perpetually. Why do you not inaugurate a system for Puerto Rico which will have some lasting force to it? Why do you not announce your policy? Right here I have got back to the point which I had forgotten a moment ago.

It is to ask the Senator how he explains his statement that this 15 per cent is not a protective duty, which we know it is not in one sense, in connection with the statement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that you have to preserve the principle of the right of Congress to tax these people by import duties, and therefore you did this merely for that purpose and held on to it for that reason?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not square my statement with the statement of the Senator from Ohio as narrated by the Senator from South Carolina, because the Senator from Ohio never made any such statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. What did the Senator from Ohio say, then?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Ohio said this: That this duty was imposed for revenue purposes, not for the purpose of raising revenue for the people of the United States—not a dollar to be appropriated for the use of the people of the United States—but all of it for the benefit of Puerto Rico; and the Senator from Ohio said he was glad that underlying this measure it happened that this question was involved and could be early presented to the Supreme Court of the United States. But my recollection of the utterance of the Senator from Ohio is that he distinctly disclaimed the purpose of introducing the bill or being influenced in any wise in his report on that bill by that question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator let me state what I think the Senator from Ohio said?

Mr. SPOONER. If I am wrong, the Senator from Ohio can correct me.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Wisconsin has stated in almost the same language my statement at the time, to which I understand the Senator from South Carolina to allude.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator had allowed me to go on, then possibly he would have found out that he did not understand to what I was alluding. The Senator from Ohio, if I do not forget his language, declared that we had to maintain the open door in the Philippines, and therefore had the right to erect a tariff barrier between the Philippines and the United States, or we would have to abandon the Philippines. That was the inference, although he did not say so.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to correct the statement of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. What I said, to which the Senator must of necessity allude, was that in the committee we learned from the testimony there adduced that there was a commanding necessity for revenue and that the people of that island were unable by direct taxation to raise that revenue, and that we sought to raise it by this indirect method. It is one of the incidents and not the purpose of the case that these questions have arisen. I said in that connection that I was glad they were to be raised, for I thought it was of grave importance that they should be litigated and should be judicially determined. Beyond that point I did not say anything in regard to the matter.

But I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina that I said all that, or practically that, in the formal report filed here early in the session in support of the Senate bill 2264, and disclaimed particularly in that report that we had any idea of fixing a protective tariff, but only the idea of raising revenue.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator forget what he said in regard to maintaining the open door in the Philippines?

Mr. FORAKER. Not at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. That in order to carry out our implied pledges, our international obligations, or something of that kind; in other words, if I do not misquote him, he said that it would be very hard and difficult for us to demand an open door in China and then refuse the open door in the Philippines, and therefore we ought to welcome an opportunity to have the Supreme Court pass upon this question as to the power of Congress, and that would settle the other matter as well.

Mr. FORAKER. What I said was that we ought to know now, before we granted an open door in the Philippines, as we will undoubtedly be invited to grant one, whether or not we have the constitutional power to levy a duty on imports from this country into the Philippines; that if we did not have that power we can not find it out too soon; that if we do not have that power it would necessitate—that was the remark I made, in almost this exact language; I will have it in a moment, as I have the RECORD now handed to me—possibly a change of policy in respect to the Philippines from that which is now contemplated.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, the purpose of this Puerto Rican legislation is simply to maintain the principle that Congress has the right to legislate for these islands in any way it pleases, and can set up any barrier it pleases between them and us, and that we are now treating Puerto Rico in this way simply to maintain the principle that we intend to enforce in the Philippines hereafter.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not rise to discuss the Puerto Rican tariff bill, which is not before the Senate; but I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina, so far as I know anything about it, that it is not the purpose at all. When that bill comes before the Senate we will be able to make that perfectly plain.

The Senator from South Carolina says, Why do you not change this so as to change the revenue system? The Senator knows why we do not. Amendments were offered to this bill for that purpose, and it was agreed by common consent, upon the request of the Senator from Missouri, I think it was, and upon the request of Senators on the Republican side of the Chamber, that as this bill was one to carry relief to those who presently needed it, and as it was a bill about which there could be no dispute, we would offer no debatable amendments to it.

What I want to call to the attention of the Senate, and then I shall have finished, is that the only difference between this report and the bill as it passed the Senate is that the bill as it passed the Senate would have given to the people of Puerto Rico the moneys collected under the Dingley law up to the 1st of last January, and would have taken into the Treasury of the United States the moneys collected under the Dingley law since the 1st of January and up to the time that we pass some law repealing or modifying the Dingley law as to Puerto Rico.

As the bill is amended, all the money heretofore collected or hereafter collected under the Dingley law, until it is changed as to Puerto Rico, is appropriated to the benefit of Puerto Rico, and not one dollar of the money, as the conference report puts it—it was not so when the bill passed the Senate—goes into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of our people, but it all goes to the benefit of Puerto Rico.

Now, Mr. President, I intended to speak ten minutes upon a single point in this conference report, but I have been interrupted so frequently that I have occupied the floor much longer. I will discuss the House tariff bill when it comes before the Senate. It is not here now.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I regret that I feel the necessity of bringing up again some parts of the speech of the Senator who has just taken his seat. However, he would not allow me to answer or interject an objection as he went along. It has reference to the race question in the South, the question which has been the cause of more sorrow, more misery, more loss of life, more expenditure of treasure than any and all questions which have confronted the American people from the foundation of the Government to the present day. Out of it grew the war, and after the war came the results of the war, and those results are with us now. The South has this question always with it. It can not get rid of it. It is there. It is like Banquo's ghost, and will not down. If I have felt called on to attack the Republican policy of this day and time and to accuse the Republicans in this Chamber with being hypocrites in regard to that issue, I have felt constrained to do so by reason of the facts and of the events of the past few years.

The Senator from Wisconsin—and I hope he will not leave the Chamber, although I do not propose to deal in any sarcasm or in personalities in the slightest, but still I prefer him to remain here if he will——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from South Carolina need not have any anxiety about that. I have not the slightest intention of leaving the Chamber.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I shall only advert briefly this evening in what I shall say now to the phases of this question which were alluded to so eloquently by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin.

He gave us a picture of the condition of the slave during the war, and of the debt of gratitude which the Southern people owe to those slaves, who had charge of our wives and children and homes, and, to their everlasting credit, during those four long and bloody years not one solitary crime was reported against them of the kind that is now reported every week. I say that he can not exceed me in appreciation of the fact that the Southern people did owe and do owe and will everlastingly owe a debt of gratitude to their slaves for their behavior.

But I would call the Senator's attention to the absolute and inevitable corollary, that if the slaves of the South, with the opportunities which were afforded them during those years when all the men were at the front, and when their wrongs, if they had any, would have prompted revenge, were guilty of no crime against their mistresses and their children, it in thunder tones gives the lie to the charges as to the cruelty of the slave system in the South.

There were numerous instances, possibly too numerous, of cruelty and wrongdoing, and I shall not apologize for the system, for, thank God, it is gone—torn up by the roots at a great cost of life and sacrifice of property. I would not restore it if I could by the waving of a hand. But I say to him when he parades that as a reason why we ought to be grateful—and I acknowledge that we ought—he at once convicts himself and those of his fellows who went on that crusade of blood and destruction for the purpose of liberating those people of having been misled and of having given Harriet Beecher Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin undue weight in inaugurating that crusade. I have already given due credit on this floor to the North for patriotism and honesty of purpose, and I realize that the love of the Union was a mighty factor in that great struggle. But it can not be denied that the slaves of the South were a superior set of men and women to freedmen of to-day, and that the poison in their minds—the race hatred of the whites—is the result of the teachings of Northern fanatics. Ravishing a woman, white or black, was never known to occur in the South till after the reconstruction era. So much for that phase of the subject.

* * * * * * *

As to the rights of the negroes in the South, of which he now claims to be the champion——

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I do not understand the Senator. I am very unfortunate in being unable to gather his meaning. He speaks clearly, and I usually have the means of interpreting language that is plain and unmistakable; but he did say something about the rights of those people.

Mr. SPOONER. I did.

Mr. TILLMAN. And he said we had taken their rights away from them. He asked me was it right to murder them in order to carry the elections. I never saw one murdered. I never saw one shot at an election. It was the riots before the election, precipitated by their own hot-headedness in attempting to hold the government, that brought on conflicts between the races and caused the shotgun to be used. That is what I meant by saying we used the shotgun.

I want to call the Senator's attention to one fact. He said that the Republican party gave the negroes the ballot in order to protect themselves against the indignities and wrongs that were attempted to be heaped upon them by the enactment of the black code. I say it was because the Republicans of that day, led by Thad Stevens, wanted to put white necks under black heels and to get revenge. There is a difference of opinion. You have your opinion about it, and I have mine, and we can never agree.

I want to ask the Senator this proposition in arithmetic: In my State there were 135,000 negro voters, or negroes of voting age, and some 90,000 or 95,000 white voters. General Canby set up a carpetbag government there and turned our State over to this majority. Now, I want to ask you, with a free vote and a fair count, how are you going to beat 135,000 by 95,000? How are you going to do it? You had set us an impossible task. You had handcuffed us and thrown away the key, and you propped your carpetbag negro government with bayonets. Whenever it was necessary to sustain the government you held it up by the Army.

Mr. President, I have not the facts and figures here, but I want the country to get the full view of the Southern side of this question and the justification for anything we did. We were sorry we had the necessity forced upon us, but we could not help it, and as white men we are not sorry for it, and we do not propose to apologize for anything we have done in connection with it. We took the government away from them in 1876. We did take it. If no other Senator has come here previous to this time who would acknowledge it, more is the pity. We have had no fraud in our elections in South Carolina since 1884. There has been no organized Republican party in the State.

We did not disfranchise the negroes until 1895. Then we had a constitutional convention convened which took the matter up calmly, deliberately, and avowedly with the purpose of disfranchising as many of them as we could under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. We adopted the educational qualification as the only means left to us, and the negro is as contented and as prosperous and as well protected in South Carolina to-day as in any State of the Union south of the Potomac. He is not meddling with politics, for he found that the more he meddled with them the worse off he got. As to his "rights"—I will not discuss them now. We of the South have never recognized the right of the negro to govern white men, and we never will. We have never believed him to be equal to the white man, and we will not submit to his gratifying his lust on our wives and daughters without lynching him. I would to God the last one of them was in Africa and that none of them had ever been brought to our shores. But I will not pursue the subject further.

I want to ask permission in this connection to print a speech which I made in the constitutional convention of South Carolina when it convened in 1895, in which the whole carpetbag régime and the indignities and wrongs heaped upon our people, the robberies which we suffered, and all the facts and figures there brought out are incorporated, and let the whole of the facts go to the country. I am not ashamed to have those facts go to the country. They are our justification for the present situation in our State. If I can get it, I should like that permission; otherwise I shall be forced to bring that speech here and read it when I can put my hand on it. I will then leave this matter and let the dead past bury its dead. I make the request, Mr. President, to have permission to print the speech delivered by me in the constitutional convention in South Carolina in 1895 in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. QUARLES in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to print matter which he has just described as part of his speech. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska rise to this question?

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; there is no objection on my part. I rose to another matter of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

[Mr. ALLEN introduced a joint resolution, which appears elsewhere in to-day's RECORD.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BERRY and Mr. PETTUS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. I suggest to the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] to transfer his pair with the Senator from West Virginia to the senior Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. BURROWS. That will enable us both to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. CHANDLER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is out of the city, and I understand that he is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] on all questions.

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. CHILTON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CHILTON] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. I do not see him in the Chamber. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] who is absent from the Senate. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when the name of Mr. PLATT of New York was called). The Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] was called away on an important matter, but he is paired. I desire to say in his behalf that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair on political questions with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER]; and unless I am assured by some of his colleagues to the contrary, I shall presume that he would vote "nay" on this question. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea." I will withhold my vote, being paired.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WETMORE. My colleague, the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], is absent. A pair has been arranged on this question with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If the senior Senator from Rhode Island were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. I suggest to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] that we exchange pairs, so that each of us can vote.

Mr. HEITFELD. That is agreeable.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD. I vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. At the suggestion of his colleague [Mr. ALLEN] I transfer that pair to him and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLEN. On this question I stand paired with my colleague [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. PRITCHARD. My colleague [Mr. BUTLER] is unavoidably absent. I understand that he is paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON].

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Montana (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]. I see that he has not voted and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—35.

So the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], in charge of the unfinished business, has kindly consented to allow me to ask for the consideration of the unobjected pension bills on the Calendar, which I now do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the unobjected pension cases on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

JOHN E. HIGGINS.

The bill (S. 1918) granting an increase of pension to John E. Higgins was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the word "late," to strike out "a member;" in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" and in the same line, before the word "he," to strike out "which;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John E. Higgins, late of the band, Third United States Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend, in line 6, after the word "late," by striking out the words "of the band" and inserting "musician."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY HILL.

The bill (S. 2651) granting a pension to Henry Hill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Hill, late body servant to Gen. W. T. H. Brooks, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 13th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2651) granting a pension to Henry Hill, have examined the same and report:

This bill proposes to pension Henry Hill, of Tennallytown, D. C., late body servant to Gen. W. T. H. Brooks, United States Volunteers.

From the evidence filed with this committee the following facts appear: Claimant was not an enlisted man, but was employed in the summer of 1861 as cook for the band of the Third Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry. He then became body servant to General Brooks, commanding the "Old Vermont Brigade," with whom he remained until July 1, 1862. On that day, in the battle of White Oak Swamp, Virginia, he was severely and dangerously wounded in the face, and, as one witness states, it looked as though half of his head had been shot away. He was sent to Cliffburne Hospital, Washington, D. C., and there treated for his wound.

Reports from the Auditor for the War Department showing claimant's service and from the Acting Chief Record and Pension Office, War Department, showing his hospital treatment, are appended hereto. He made claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, but his claim was rejected February 3, 1892, on the ground that he was not an enlisted man.

The claimant is now 63 years of age, and badly disfigured by the wound he received in battle. If he had been an enlisted man there could be no question about his title to pension. His case is an exceptional one and is not covered by existing law.

In view of all the circumstances of the case your committee believe the claimant should be allowed a pension for his wound.

The bill is therefore reported back favorably with a recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Hill, late body servant to Gen. W. T. H. Brooks, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 5, 1900.

SIR: Referring to your letters of the 21st and 28th ultimo, relative to obtaining information as to the service of Henry Hill as cook for the band, Third Vermont Infantry, during the summer of 1861, and as body servant to General (W. T. H.) Brooks, United States Volunteers, I have to inform you that the rolls of the band, Third Vermont Infantry, from its organization in June, 1861, to its muster out in August, 1862, and also pay vouchers of its leader, Nelson D. Adams, for the same period, have been examined and the name of Henry Hill, or a similar name, has not been found thereon.

The pay vouchers of W. T. H. Brooks, brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, from October 6, 1861 (date promoted to brigadier-general), to December 31, 1862, have also been examined with the result that on all the vouchers from November 1, 1861, to latter date, except for the month of July, 1862, the name of "Henry" appears, without surname, as a servant, described on same as follows: Complexion, colored; height, 5 feet 10 inches; eyes, dark; hair, dark; and on others as "black man" and "colored man." For July, 1862, another name appears in his stead as servant.

Respectfully,

F. H. MORRIS, Auditor.

Mr. JOHN H. WALKER,
Clerk to the Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 16, 1900.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 14th instant, in which you request, for the use of your committee in connection with Senate bill No. 2651, the complete medical history of Henry Hill, who alleges that he was the body servant to General Brooks, commanding the Second Brigade, Second Division, Sixth Army Corps, and that during the summer of 1861 he cooked for the band of the Third Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, I beg to state that an examination has been made of all records on file in this office deemed likely to afford information in the case, and the only record of his service or disability found on file consists of an unsigned report of John S. Billings, assistant surgeon, United States Army, showing the treatment of Henry Hill in Cliffburne Hospital, Washington, D. C. A copy of that report is as follows:

"Fractured bones of face. Dr. Otis. Recovery.

"Henry Hill (negro), cook to Brigadier-General Brooks. Age 27. Stout and healthy man. Was wounded at the battle of White Oak Swamp, July 1, 1862. Was standing behind a frame house when a large solid shot passed through the house, and one of the fragments of wood struck him on the right side of the face, producing a large lacerated wound. On his admission to Cliffburne Hospital, July 5, 1862, a wound was found extending from the internal canthus of the right eye perpendicularly downward to the mouth, crossing and comminuting the nasal bones and left superior maxilla, separating the nasal bones, and then tearing open the cheek from the left corner of the mouth to the angle of the jaw. The eye was depressed, the upper lid falling with it, having been cut across horizontally—the ethmoid bone fractured horizontally, and the lower fragment, including the middle turbinated bones, being driven downward.

"This was removed, together with the left nasal bone and the fragments of the vomer, also the lachrymal bone, and with some difficulty the shattered jaw and malar bone restored to their normal position. The flesh wounds were then closed with the twisted suture silver wire being used to unite the wound of the eyelid, and all the parts were fixed in position by isinglass plaster and collodion. The lower jaw was used as a splint, corks being placed between the teeth to support the shattered bones and a firm bandage applied from chin to vortex. Milk, beef essence, and eggnog were administered at short intervals by means of a tube. The pins were removed on the third day and the plaster on the seventh, the wounds of the face having united perfectly. July 30—has been going on well and presents but little deformity. The septum of the nose has united well; vision, which was at first destroyed in the left eye, is now rapidly returning, and his general health and strength is perfect."

[Indorsement.]

"Washington, D. C., July 30, 1862. John S. Billings, assistant surgeon, U. S. A.

"Lacerating wound of face, comminuting nasal bone and left superior maxilla. Recovered."

It is proper to add that it was not customary to enter the record of the body servants of officers or civilian cooks on the military records on file in this office, and it is probable that additional information relative to the service of the man mentioned may be obtained upon application to the Auditor for the War Department, in whose office the vouchers containing the names of officers' body servants are filed.

Very respectfully,

JOHN TWEEDALE,
Acting Chief Record and Pension Office.

FRIDAY, March 23, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE.

Mr. BOREING. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to present a privileged report, and I ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky, from the Committee on Printing, by direction of that Committee, calls up for consideration a resolution which will be reported by the Clerk.

The resolution (H. C. Res. 16) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of the work entitled The Louisiana Purchase, by the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States, 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 7,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF BUREAU OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

Mr. BOREING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The resolution (S. Con. Res. No. 6) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Bureau of American Republics 2,500 copies of the annual report of the Director of the Bureau of American Republics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL AT BROWNS POINT, PUGET SOUND.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8128) to establish a light-house and fog signal at Browns Point, in Puget Sound.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house and steam or hot-air fog whistle be established and constructed at Browns Point, on Commencement Bay, in Puget Sound, being at the entrance of the harbor of the city of Tacoma; said light-house and fog signal not to exceed the cost of $35,000.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, were read:

In line 3, after the word "a," strike out "light-house" and insert "light;" after "and" strike out "steam or hot-air fog whistle" and insert "fog signal."

In line 6, after "said," strike out "light-house" and insert "light."

In line 7 strike out "thirty-five" and insert "six."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to establish light and fog signal at Browns Point, in Puget Sound."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. We should like to have some explanation of this measure. We should like to understand why it should be taken up out of order, and why it should not take its regular course under the rules of the House.

Mr. CUSHMAN. It is a very important matter, we having already lost one vessel on this point, a vessel worth about half a million dollars, and another one having come very near being lost a short time ago. The cost of the proposed light and fog signal is a minimum.

The bill has been reported favorably by the entire Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and there is a very urgent necessity why the bill should pass at the present time. This bill provides for no appropriation. It simply authorizes a light-house and fog signal to be placed at this point. The appropriation will have to be made later.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That follows, does it not, and, as I understand it, calls for about $35,000?

Mr. CUSHMAN. The bill does not ask for $35,000. The amount asked for is $6,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Clerk read something about $35,000.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes; but an amendment has been proposed limiting the cost not to exceed $6,000.

Mr. CANNON. Let me say to the gentleman from Tennessee that this is a public work not authorized, and that it would be subject to a point of order on the sundry civil bill. The original bill proposed $35,000. After investigation we provide for a different kind of light and for an expenditure not exceeding $6,000. I have given the matter some attention, because it was brought to my attention in connection with the sundry civil bill, and is reported favorably from the committee. In my judgment it is an apt authorization.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CUSHMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIGHT-SHIP, CAPE ELIZABETH, ME.

Mr. ALLEN of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9497) to amend an act providing for the construction of a light-ship to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 4, 1899, entitled "An act providing for the construction of a light-ship to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Me.," is hereby amended so that the limit of the cost for the said light-ship and fog signal shall be increased from $70,000 to $90,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to proceed with the construction of the said light-ship and fog signal, as directed by the original act as modified by this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, we should like very much to understand something about this measure. I do not like to object to a matter of this kind. I do not like to object if these things are necessary, nor do I make any formal complaint about recognitions; but it seems to me that recognitions ought to be uniform and equally divided between the two sides, especially where appropriations are carried. I should like to have some reason stated, at any rate, for the emergency suggested by this bill. It seems to carry an appropriation of about $20,000.

Mr. ALLEN of Maine. Mr. Speaker, this light-ship was authorized by the last Congress, and an appropriation of $70,000 was made. The estimates were made about a year ago; and when the bids were called for and received, the lowest bid was about $80,000. There were four bids, ranging from $80,000 to over $90,000. Now, this light-ship is very necessary for the protection of vessels approaching Portland Harbor, because Cape Elizabeth is a very dangerous point. Therefore it is necessary to have authority for an appropriation sufficient to cover the bid; and also, as the Secretary of the Treasury says, to cover some other details, including a towing machine. The citizens, merchants, and business men of Portland are very anxious that this light-ship be provided as soon as possible. There is at this time a large vessel possibly wrecked near Portland Harbor, on a ledge near it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] can see in the report the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury recommending this bill.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, this light-ship was appropriated for in the appropriation bill for the current year at a limit of cost of $70,000. Now, it is alleged that owing to the advance of labor and material it can not be constructed for $70,000, but that it will take $90,000.

Mr. ALLEN of Maine. That is the case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN of Maine, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FLOATING LOOSE TIMBER AND LOGS ON CERTAIN RIVERS.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 9824.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9824) authorizing the Secretary of War to make regulations governing the running of loose logs, steamboats, and rafts on certain rivers and streams.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the prohibition contained in section 15 of the river and harbor act, approved March 3, 1899, against floating loose timber and logs, or sack rafts, so called, of timber and logs in streams or channels actually navigated by steamboats, shall not apply to the St. Croix River above Stillwater, Minn.; the Nemadji and Chippewa rivers in Wisconsin; the Red Lake River in Minnesota, or the Mississippi River above the St. Paul Boom, and between the mouth of the Chippewa River and the head of West Newton Slough, so called.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall have power, and is hereby authorized and directed, to prescribe rules and regulations, which he may at any time modify, to govern the floating of loose timber and logs, and sack rafts, so called, of timber and logs, and general navigation, on the streams and waterways specified in section 1 of this act, and shall publish the same; and such regulations when so prescribed and published shall have the force of law, and any violation thereof shall be a misdemeanor, and every person convicted of such violation shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) for not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That the proper action to enforce the provisions of this section may be commenced before any commissioner, judge, or court of the United States, and such commissioner, judge, or court shall proceed in respect thereto as authorized by law in the case of crimes against the United States.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby reserved.

SEC. 4. That this act shall not, nor shall any rules or regulations prescribed thereunder, in any manner affect any civil action or actions heretofore commenced and now pending to recover damages claimed to have been sustained by reason of the violation of any of the terms of said section 15, as originally enacted, or in violation of any other law.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be captious at all——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BURTON. I suggest that the gentleman withhold his objection until I explain the bill.

Mr. LLOYD. I do not know that I am opposed to it if I have an opportunity to investigate it, as the gentleman knows I am not disposed to interfere with the passage of proper legislation; but if you pass the bill for the present perhaps I may not object to it at all.

Mr. BURTON. I understand the gentleman asks time to consider, and objects so far as present consideration of the bill is concerned.

Mr. LLOYD. I may not object later on if I have time to investigate the bill.

Mr. BURTON. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks this bill affects his own locality?

Mr. LLOYD. It affects my own locality, and it may be I may desire the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURTON. This bill affects the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Mr. LLOYD. But is affects constituents of mine.

Mr. BURTON. It applies to conditions that exist only in those States.

Mr. LLOYD. Citizens of my own district are concerned in rafting logs in Minnesota and in that locality, and perhaps I am in favor of the measure if I could carefully investigate it. Why is the gentleman so demonstrative?

Mr. BURTON. I want to remonstrate with the gentleman for objecting. It is likely to cut off the consideration of the bill for a considerable time. This is for the protection of an important interest in those States.

Mr. LLOYD. Can not you pass it to-morrow morning?

Mr. BURTON. I suppose we might; but I am not certain about it. It is a very important interest, and it is important that this question should be decided at once and the bill passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if this matter can not come up in the regular river and harbor bill?

Mr. BURTON. It would destroy for one year one of the most important interests in the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin if it were postponed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why not bring it forward in the river and harbor bill?

Mr. BURTON. There is to be no general river and harbor bill at this session.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is that true? Why not have one at this session as well as any other session?

Mr. BURTON. Do I understand the gentleman advocates a river and harbor bill at this session?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. That is a question that has been decided by the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman emphasizes the fact that we will not have a river and harbor bill at this session, and I think possibly there is something in connection with this session that we should not have it at this rather than some other session.

Mr. BURTON. The main reason was the very large amount already appropriated in river and harbor bills that has been unexpended, being thirty millions at the present time, and then there is a probability of fifteen million more being appropriated in the sundry civil bill. That was the main ground that influenced the committee not to bring forward any general bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The elections of this year have nothing to do with it?

Mr. BURTON. Nothing to do with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LLOYD. After examining the bill, I think it a good measure and hope it will pass. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question in regard to it. I want to ask the chairman of this committee if the second section of this bill applies to any other water than the waters described in the first section of the bill?

Mr. BURTON. It does not, except it is the same provision as to penalty as that which is in the existing law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But it does not undertake to settle the rights of towage and other matters?

Mr. BURTON. The first part of the section provides for an exception to the general law in the regulations for the rivers included in the bill. The second part of the section provides penalties for violations of these regulations. The penalties are the same as those imposed under the general law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I feared that the language of the second section might be broad enough to affect waters other than those described in the first section.

Mr. BURTON. It is not.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. ADAMS was recognized.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, a bill in that same line——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been recognized.

SOUTH AFRICAN REPUBLIC.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report House resolution 178 with Senate amendments, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to send to the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public welfare, copies of any and all letters on file in the Department of State from citizens of the United States resident in the South African Republic from January 1, 1892, to the present time.

With the following amendments recommended by the committee:

In line 6, strike out the word "two" and insert "nine," and at the end of the resolution add the words "making complaints of treatment by the South African Republic;" so that the same shall read "from January 1, 1899, to the present time making complaints of treatment by the South African Republic."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be adopted; and I wish to say that in its present shape it is perfectly satisfactory to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], who introduced it, and has the approval of the full committee.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, as the introducer of the resolution I accept the amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider pension bills on the Private Calendar, according to the special rule.

MARIA E. MAILLEY.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire, the Chair lays before the House the bill (H. R. 5390) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Maria E. Mailley," with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read and concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider private pension and other bills, under the rule.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were 151 yeas and 6 nays.

Mr. TALBERT. I make the point that no quorum is present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-three gentlemen are present; a quorum. The ayes have it; and accordingly the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. LACEY, will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, with Mr. LACEY in the chair, for the consideration of pension bills under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of this Congress the second and fourth Friday in each month, after the disposal of such business on the Speaker's table as requires reference only, shall be set apart for the consideration of private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill.

In line 7 strike out the word "of."
In the same line, after the word "Fifth," insert the word "Regiment."
In the same line, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."
Strike out, in lines 7 and 8, the words "late of Berks County."
In line 8, before the word "at," insert the words "and pay her a pension."
Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Catharine A. Schwunger."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN C. RAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7488) to pension John C. Ray.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension law, the name of John C. Ray, late of the U. S. steamers Champion and Springfield, in the civil war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6, after the word "late," insert the word "pilot."
In line 7 strike out the words "in the civil war."
In line 8 strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twenty-four."
Also amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to John C. Ray."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES T. DONALDSON, JR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 301) for the relief of James T. Donaldson, jr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension rolls the name of James T. Donaldson, jr., lieutenant, Company A, Eighth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, United States Army, and pay him at the rate of $30 per month from the date of the approval of this act.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

Strike out all after the word "assembled," in line 2, and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James T. Donaldson, jr., late second lieutenant Company A, Eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to James T. Donaldson, jr."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ORANGE F. BERDAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6486) to increase the pension of Orange F. Berdan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $72 per month, the name of Orange F. Berdan, late of Company C, Fifth Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him such pension on and after the passage of this act.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."
Strike out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "at the rate of $72 per month."
In line 6, after the word "Fifth," insert the word "Regiment."
Strike out, in line 7, all after the word "him" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."
Also amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Orange F. Berdan."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARIA V. SPERRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4991) granting a pension to Maria V. Sperry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, the name of Maria V. Sperry, widow of William Sperry, late member of Company K, Fifth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $15 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."
In line 5 strike out the word "member" and insert the word "private."
In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate of."
In the same line strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."
In the same line, after the word "month," insert the following: "Such pension, however, to cease upon proof that the soldier named in the bill is living."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ROBERT BOSTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3775) granting an increase of pension to Robert Boston.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Robert Boston, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., late a captain of Pennsylvania Cavalry and Twenty-fourth United States Infantry Colored Troops, and pay him a pension of $50 a month in lieu of the pension which he now receives.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4 strike out the word "upon" and insert in lieu thereof the word "on." In the same line, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." In the same line strike out the words "of the."
In line 5 strike out the words "United States." In the same line strike out the word "Wilkesbarre."
In line 6 strike out the word "Pennsylvania." In the same line strike out the word "a." In the same line, after the word "of," insert the words "Company F, First Battalion." After the word "Pennsylvania," in the same line, insert the word "Volunteer."
In line 7, before the word "Twenty-fourth," insert the words "Company A." Strike out the word "Infantry" in the same line. After the word "Colored," in the same line, insert the words "Volunteer Infantry." Strike out the word "Troops" in the same line.
In line 8, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate." In the same line strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "thirty." Strike out all after the word "of" in line 8 and insert the words "that he is now receiving."

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. I move to amend by striking out the word "thirty" and substituting the word "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not be in order, because that is the amount stated in the original bill; but if the amendment is voted down the result would be the same. The gentleman can call for a separate vote on that proposition if he wishes. There are several amendments and a separate vote on this amendment would accomplish the same purpose. If this amendment of the committee as read is voted down the amount would stand at $50.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. Then I make that motion, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A separate vote will be had upon the amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "thirty."

Mr. STEELE. There ought to be some very good reason for this if the committee have taken different action. We certainly ought to know why this man should have more than the committee propose to give.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee, I should like to make a brief statement with reference to this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will be recognized.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I have known Capt. Robert Boston for the past twenty-five years. He has been a near neighbor of mine. I am familiar with all the circumstances surrounding this case.

Captain Boston for the past nine years has not been out of the house, and for the past two or three years he has been lying upon a sick bed. More than that, Mr. Chairman, Captain Boston, during the last three years, has lost his mind and is insane.

Further than that, the wife of Captain Boston is an invalid. These people are poor. I know these facts of my own personal knowledge.

Captain Boston is now receiving $17 a month. If it were not for some technical defect in the testimony he would be entitled to $50 per month. I beg leave to read from the report of the committee in verification of this proposition:

From testimony filed by the pensioner and that obtained upon special examination, it appears that the soldier had an attack of pneumonia in May, 1864, while he was not in the service of the United States; that while serving in the Twenty-fourth United States Colored Troops he was crippled up and could hardly walk around some times on account of rheumatism, and that he had been under treatment for rheumatism ever since his final discharge from the service, and that he had so-called fainting fits ever since 1866.

This proof as to existence of rheumatism and disease of heart from 1865 to 1879 is, however, conflicting, some witnesses who were associated with the soldier in business not possessing any knowledge of any disability during said period.

I may say, Mr. Chairman, that there was some little testimony to the effect that the heart disease that this soldier had was hereditary. In answer to that, I merely submit this proposition, that Captain Boston's father and mother lived to be over 80 years of age. I think that proposition is a refutation of this slight testimony.

It is clearly shown, however, that since about 1890 the soldier has been a physical wreck; that he has not been able to leave his house without an attendant; that he has during said years been a constant care to his wife, who is troubled with an affection of the spine caused by an injury some years ago; that the soldier at one time was a very successful business man, accumulating some money, but which he lost subsequently, and what means he had left had since been expended during his illness.

These facts, Mr. Chairman, I personally know to be true.

The medical examination of 1892 rated him $30 for disease of heart, $10 for injury to ankle, and $10 for malarial poisoning.

Medical examination of 1897 rated him $4 for malarial poisoning, $8 for injury to foot, $6 for rheumatism, $17 for disease of heart, and $17 for insanity; and this certificate of medical examination shows further that he has irregular periodical attacks of insanity, during which time he has homicidal and suicidal tendencies; that he shot himself in the chest during one of these attacks several years ago; that he has not worked in nine years, and has not left the house unless accompanied by an attendant, and that he requiries such attendance half of the time.

That was in 1897, three years ago, and that would have given him a total rating of about $54.

There has been filed with your committee the statement of the wife of the pensioner to the effect that owing to the death of comrades her husband had failed to establish his claim in the Pension Bureau; that she had been his only attendant all of the time since such aid was required; that her own health is giving away under the constant strain, and that his present pension is inadequate for his support.

A petition and letters signed by judges of the orphans', common pleas, and other courts of Wilkesbarre, Pa., have also been filed asking for Congressional relief, and stating that the case is a much more deserving one than many which have received the approval of the Government.

A petition was presented to the committee, Mr. Chairman, signed by a hundred names of some of the best citizens of our community. The judges of our court, many leading attorneys at our bar, and many of our representative business men who have personal acquaintance with these facts, signed that petition.

Mr. Chairman, I make this appeal and offer this amendment with some apologies to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Ordinarily I am disposed to sustain their reports, because I am a member of the Committee on Pensions, and I know that usually the committee have better knowledge of all the circumstances than the House can possibly have, and their report ought generally to be sustained. But I am satisfied that had I come before the committee at the proper time the committee would have granted this man $50. I feel satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that this committee, having heard these statements, will allow this amendment to pass.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have great sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The claimant was a worthy soldier. There is no question about that. There is no doubt either that he is in a very precarious condition. Yet the law can only give him $17. He has a pensionable status of $17. If we were to stand by the law as it is, he would only get $17; but in view of the fact of his necessitous condition, in view of the fact of his good record, and in view of the further fact that probably the diseases of which he is now complaining had some connection with his service, the committee thought, as a gratuity, as a kind recognition of a brave soldier, they were justified in going beyond the law and making it $30.

If his condition were traceable to his army service, then he would be entitled to $50. But not being entitled to $50, because of the fact that his condition can not be proved to be the result of his army service, we thought we would have to establish some rule of action for all these cases, and where we found a good soldier who could prove his disabilities to be above $17 and we found him poor and necessitous, that we would reach out the hand of mercy and give him something more. The committee would be glad to give this old soldier $50 but for the fact that if you establish the principle that you will come here and pension every old soldier to the point of his full disability without his being able to prove it to be of service origin, then there is no limit at all.

So, Mr. Chairman, much as I personally would like to accommodate the gentleman from Pennsylvania, much as I would like to see this or any other good American citizen taken care of by the public, unless he can prove the service origin of the disability I do not feel, either as a member of this committee or as a member of the Invalid Pensions Committee, that I could sit by and see $50 voted to this man, because we can not give it to every other one in similar condition.

I believe we can afford to give him $30, and in doing so it is generous of the Government to do it; but when you undertake to raise it to the limit of his disability when it is not traceable to service origin, then you go beyond the amount you should give, not only as dictated by humanity, but you deplete the Treasury without good excuse. Not only to standing by the committee, but as a matter of justice to this old soldier and to every other citizen of the Republic, I hope this House will stand by the committee report. If you strike out thirty and make it fifty in this case, the same argument can be made in nearly every other one; and I hope, gentlemen of this House, the committee will be supported and the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be voted down.

Mr. BARBER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to corroborate what has been said by my colleague in relation to this case now pending. I have had personal knowledge for many years of the condition of this man, not only of his previous record, but of his mental and physical condition. To me, as representing certain societies, it was reported several years ago that this man was totally unable to earn a livelihood; that his mental faculties were deranged to such an extent that he was not able even to help himself, much less those dependent upon him, and from my hands have gone out for several years regularly moneys in payment of bills and indebtedness incurred by his wife in supporting this man; and only last week, when I was at home, I was called upon to pay out an indebtedness amounting to $40 or $50 for this man's sustentation and to keep him from becoming a public charge.

It seems to me if there is a case worthy and deserving of consideration, it is a case like this; and, with all due respect to the committee and the report of the committee, it does seem to me that this is a case that appeals to our humanity, where a man is deprived not only of ability to work, but where he is also a helpless and hopeless invalid, dependent upon charity. If there ever was a case that appeals to us on account of merit, I think it is this one, and therefore I think this man should have the amount asked for by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, this whole matter is in a nutshell. There is nothing sacred about the report of this Committee on Invalid Pensions. The difficulty about this is in this direction: This man is a total wreck, in a pitiable and deplorable condition, beyond any question, but not traceable to service origin. The difficulty with which he is now suffering is such that while under the act of 1890 he would be entitled to $12 a month, we have added $18, which is the amount given, under the rule that we have adopted, to a man who is in the condition that this man is. If this committee, however, after hearing the statements made by gentlemen who are familiar with the individual case, thinks proper to raise it to $50, we shall not be offended. That is the rule we have adopted. If you stay with us on this line, this amount should not be increased; and if you choose to increase it, all well.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana, if I did not misunderstand his remarks, claimed that he is opposed to voting for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT] to raise the pension of this old soldier from $30 to $50, because the disability can not be traced to service origin. I understand that is the position, too, that the chairman of the committee took.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I did not say it was not traceable, but that it was not certainly traceable.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not wish to misrepresent either one of those gentlemen; but I understood their opposition to this increase asked for by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is because the soldier had not received the disability from any service he rendered in the Army.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if you will take the list of bills that they have brought in here, you will find that of about three-fourths of the bills on the Calendar the claimants can not trace their disability to service origin; and we have passed bills of that class time and again, after they have appealed their cases to the Bureau and it has turned them down because the disability could not be traced to service origin. Now, it seems to me that this old soldier should receive this pittance which is asked for by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Applause.] But for fear of some favoritism, the gentleman from New Hampshire, the chairman of this committee, and one of the members of the committee stand up here and say, "Oh, his disability can not be traced to service origin, and he ought not to have it."

Why make this discrimination; why make this distinction, when three-fourths of the bills here give pensions to men who possibly received some hurt or some disability years after the war was over? I recollect one case where a man had his pension increased where he was getting $12 under the act of 1890, especially one who was hauling wood and was hurt by a stick falling on him; another fell off the cars, and another was kicked by a horse when he was drunk, and the appeal was made because they were old. They said that they were old and poor. While they did not incur the disability in service, they were poor old soldiers, and they did not want the old soldier to go to the workhouse. Why do you attack this case and refuse to give this pittance to this old soldier, who is poor and disabled, and who, according to the best account, will not live long? Why are you so parsimonious in this case and so liberal in so many other cases? Why be so inconsistent? I hope the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will prevail, and I will give it my hearty support.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that on the last pension Friday we passed a bill increasing a private soldier's pension from $12 to $50 over my amendment to make it $30?

Mr. TALBERT. And the very strenuous opposition of the gentleman from California, who had the manhood to stand up here and offer objections.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I absolutely deny that there has been any inconsistency in the reports of this Committee on Invalid Pensions, or in this particular case under consideration. Here we find in the report, what? That this man is not under the necessity of requiring personal attention at all times. He requires such attendance about half of the time.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. Has the gentleman read the testimony which was sent up from the Pension Department?

Mr. DRIGGS. No; but I have read the report here and the report as it was written by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] who reported the bill for the committee.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. The gentleman from New York will remember that there is a statement made by myself to the effect that this man has not been out of his bed for the past three years. That is corroborated by a half a dozen witnesses. Does the gentleman from New York stand up here and say that the man does not need constant attention when he is insane and has not been out of his bed for three years? That is absurd. I know this to be a fact, and there is a petition sent to the committee, signed by the best people in our community, stating these facts. We are all personally cognizant of the facts.

Mr. DRIGGS. There is nothing to that effect shown in this report, and it has been the rule and practice of this committee——

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. DRIGGS. If it is for a question.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York this question: In the event that his disability was directly traceable to the time when he was in the service of the United States, would there be any objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT]?

Mr. DRIGGS. There would be, unless it was absolutely shown by the fact that he required the constant attention of another party.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, that is outside of my question. My question is this: If this soldier could trace his disability to the time when he was in the service, would there be any objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DRIGGS. If he could trace this to service origin, there would be no necessity for a special law.

Mr. FINLEY. Is there not some evidence that he did receive injuries while in the service, and to which this disability might be attributed?

Mr. DRIGGS. I believe there is; otherwise the committee would not have reported the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. In that view, why not give him the benefit of the doubt?

Mr. DRIGGS. Simply because, as I have stated, of the report of the committee, and that is what we have to go by; in that report none of these facts are set out. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT] says this man has been three years in bed, but it does not appear in the report.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. Did the gentleman read my personal statement——

Mr. DRIGGS. I did not.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT (continuing). To the effect that he has been in bed for the last three years, and requires constant attention and care, and has lost his reason?

Mr. DRIGGS. The report says that he is temporarily insane.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. He is insane, and if it were not for his devoted wife he would have been taken to the asylum years ago.

Mr. DRIGGS. Now, Mr. Chairman, unless this can be absolutely shown, I am satisfied that the recommendations of the committee are correct, and he should not receive more than $30 a month. That is the stand we have taken in every one of these cases, and the committee reports should be upheld. That is what we are trying to do—deal out equal justice to every man that presents a bill to us for consideration.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the conduct of the committee at our last session. There was a bill brought in to raise the pension of a soldier from $24 to $50. I believe it was a Senate bill and had passed the Senate. The report stated that he had first been pensioned at $4, and on numerous applications—more than twice, I believe—it had been raised as high as $24. It was shown by the report that the medical experts of the Bureau stated that it was not traceable to service origin; and yet the distinguished chairman of this committee said he could not find it in his heart to deny the old soldier $50 a month, and he criticised the action of the Bureau by saying that the experts were not as infallible as Almighty God; and the committee, almost to a man, stood up and supported that bill for $50 in the face of the fact that the medical experts showed that he was pensioned to the highest figure that he would be entitled to if his disabilities arose from service origin.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of sustaining the reports of the committee because I think they report their bills as high as they ought to be, and in many instances too high, in view of the fact that they only hear one side of the case and are very kind-hearted gentlemen.

And I do not know but that they have given in this case everything that they ought to give. But I am now calling attention to the danger of such a precedent as we have established here. I got up and moved to amend that bill so as to make the pension $30 a month; but my motion was opposed successfully by the chairman of the committee, and the bill was rushed through at $50. Now, here comes a man asking for $50, and the proof shows that his present condition is certainly as bad as that of the other gentleman. It is further admitted that while he does not show that his disability is of service origin, the case does not show that it is not.

Now see the position in which this House has placed itself by voting a pension of $30 in the teeth of the report of the medical experts of the Bureau. You are now asked to vote a pension of the same amount in a case which appeals to the feelings of compassion and pity in the breast of every member of this House. I am not advocating the passage of the present bill; but if I had advocated the other one, I certainly would be in favor of this one. But I ask gentlemen to observe what they are doing—filling the House with precedents allowing extravagant pensions for disabilities not of service origin; and I do not know where it will end. I have called attention to this matter simply to show that my objections in the former case were well founded; and such objections ought to be made in all such cases.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to close the debate on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted. It has been proceeding by unanimous consent. The question is on the amendments of the committee. The Chair will first put the question on the amendment as to the rate—to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Before that question is put, if the debate on the amendment is exhausted, I ask unanimous consent to be heard as a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that this bill should have precipitated any debate at all; but I notice from the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee and also the gentleman from South Carolina, and perhaps others on the floor, that there is a misunderstanding in regard to this matter. I want to make this statement, and to make it upon honor, that the committee has always tried, as best it could upon the information laid before it, to arrive at a just conclusion. It is true that our conclusions can not always be correct. If this case had been laid before the committee with the same statement that has been made here on the floor by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I have no doubt what the result would have been. New light has come to me on this case within the last ten minutes; information which I knew nothing about has been presented. It appears also that the case was prejudiced in the Department by evil-minded persons, whose evidence having been placed there once was afterwards eradicated, as is often the case.

For myself I want to stand by the action of the committee so far as the evidence is brought to my attention. But when an honorable member of this House rises in his place and on his honor makes a statement such as has been made here, from personal knowledge, that this man is insane and confined to his bed, and when another gentleman on the floor assures me that he and other people of his neighborhood have out of their private purses been aiding and supporting this man—when a case like this is presented, I, as one member of that committee, have no hesitancy in casting my vote for right and justice. [Applause.] The evidence presented before the committee does not bind me imperatively. Ordinarily I act on the light presented to me there; but I hold that there can be presented here better evidence than can be found by the Department sending out its secret agents—better evidence than that filed in the Department by prejudiced and evil-minded persons—better evidence than this is the testimony of a man who stands on this floor, the peer of any man here, and states upon his personal honor what he knows to be the facts of the case.

The question of service origin does not bind my judgment and my action infallibly; for I say if every soldier now living is compelled to prove his disability to have been of service origin, he may have to go under the earth or above it to find his testimony.

Justice is what this House wants to do—fairness, equity to the very last limit. But when we have presented here a case like this, with information that did not come before the committee—and I do not hold the gentleman blameless because he did not appear—but I say if he had appeared before that committee and made the statement that he makes here now there would have been a different report on this bill.

I hope this House will understand that the members of this committee will have no hard feelings—they will not construe the action of the House as a reflection on them—if the judgment of the House should reverse the judgment of the committee. If this amendment is sustained, it will certainly be done with my approval, and not in opposition to my opinion, as the matter now stands.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. I would like unanimous consent to occupy two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the proposition just made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] that had I appeared before the Committee on Invalid Pensions a different conclusion might have been reached, I have this to say: That one morning I met the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GASTON], a member of this committee, and had a conversation with him in reference to the facts of this case. He asked me to appear before the committee. I went down to the committee room; I knocked at the door; I went into the room. The committee were busy. Nearly all the members were present, and they had a bill under discussion; they were busily employed.

I said to the chairman of the subcommittee on Pensions [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] that I desired to say a word before the committee in reference to this case of Robert Boston. The subchairman [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] said to me that the committee were then engaged and it would be just as well if I submitttted to the committee a personal statement in writing in regard to all of these facts. I said, "If a written or typewritten statement is sufficient, why, gentlemen, I am just as well satisfied. I would not like to disturb your committee. I know you are very busy."

Thereupon I withdrew. Gentlemen, I went before the committee to make a personal statement, and I am perfectly well satisfied that had I had an opportunity—and it was through no fault of the committee that I did not have the opportunity—to say what I have said upon this floor, and what I could say if I had the time, I am satisfied the committee would have given this man $50.

In answer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MIERS] I have this to say: He says that the injuries are not clearly traceable to service origin. This man is receiving $17 for injuries that are traceable to service origin, and if all the injuries were clearly traceable to service origin he would not be here before this committee. He would get his $50 down at the Pension Bureau. Now, in answer to the gentleman from Indiana, I merely call your attention to the facts. You will find in the report of the committee that it is stated that the injuries are not "clearly" traceable to service origin. In answer to that I told you a moment ago that there appeared certain testimony that this soldier had heart disease. I will tell you how this came about. You know the practice down in the Department of sending letters of inquiry up to people in the neighborhood to find if the testimony can be corroborated. Some evil-disposed person injected into this case some testimony to this effect, that his heart disease was hereditary. In answer to that I stated a moment ago that this man's father and mother lived to be over 80 years of age. Is not that a sufficient refutation of the charge that the heart disease was hereditary? I think you will agree with me that it is.

I am very much in earnest in this case, gentleman, and I have offered this amendment with due apologies to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I am on the Committee on Pensions and I sympathize with them, but I am very certain that I am right about this case, and I have felt it to be my duty to ask that this report be amended and that this man be granted $50. I sincerely hope, gentlemen, that you will pass this bill in that form.

The question being taken on the amendment to strike out fifty and insert thirty, the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT asked for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 32.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The other amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

WILLIAM G. WILLOUGHBY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5088) granting a pension to William G. Willoughby.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to place the name of William G. Willoughby, late a private in Company B, Twenty-fifth Wisconsin Infantry, and also in Company I, Twelfth Wisconsin Infantry, on the pension roll and pay him a pension of $72 per month in lieu of the pension that is now received by him.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4 strike out the word "instructed" and in lieu thereof insert the word "directed." In the same line, after the word "place," insert the words "on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5 strike out the words "a" and "in." In the same line, after the word "Twenty-fifth," insert the word "Regiment." After the word "Wisconsin," in the same line, insert the word "Volunteer."

Strike out in line 6 the words "and also in," and insert in lieu thereof the word "and." In the same line, after the word "Twelfth," insert the word "Regiment." After the word "Wisconsin," in the same line, insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 7 strike out the words "on the pension roll;" in the same line, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

Strike out the word "seventy-two," in lines 7 and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Strike out in line 8 the words "the pension;" after the word "that," in the same line, insert the word "he."

Also amend title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William G. Willoughby."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. CALDERHEAD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5088) granting a pension to William G. Willoughby, submit the following report:

This beneficiary, now 60 years of age, served as a private in Company B, Twenty-fifth, and Company I, Twelfth Wisconsin Volunteers, from December 14, 1863, to July 16, 1865, and was under treatment at various dates for measles, chronic diarrhea, sprain of ankle, and hypertrophy of heart.

He applied for pension in September, 1882, and was pensioned under the general law in 1886 at $4 per month on account of disease of kidneys and bladder, and increased to $6 from August 20, 1890.

He is now a pensioner at $12 per month on account of said diseases and disease of heart and nervous system.

A claim under the general law on account of partial paralysis as a result of the causes for which pensioned under that law was rejected in 1887 upon the ground that such paralysis was not shown.

He filed medical testimony as to treatment for nervous prostration in 1887, as a result of his pensioned causes, but such condition was not found upon medical examination until January 14, 1899, which showed existence of disease of heart, rheumatism, and paralysis of left side, and rated him $50 for said disabilities, as periodical aid and attendance was necessary by reason of same.

This board of surgeons found no disability from disease of kidneys or bladder.

The paralysis came on as a result of apoplexy, which claimant had June 10, 1898.

There has been filed with your committee a statement of Dr. Farnham, of Lincoln, Nebr., a physician of good standing in his profession, stating that the soldier belongs in that class for whom the law provides a rating of $50 per month; that his physical condition at the present time is such that his attendants had to take off his pants and wring them out at short periods; that his condition will, of course, grow worse until such time as he will be entirely helpless; also, a statement of the Hon. Mr. BURKETT, a member of this House, to the effect that he is personally acquainted with the soldier, and that he knows that his condition is very serious, and that financially he is unable to care for himself and is dependent upon others.

It is not shown as a fact that this soldier's present helpless condition is of service origin; yet, in the light of all the circumstances stated above, your committee believe that he should have some relief, and therefore recommend that the bill be amended as follows:

In line 4 strike out the word "instructed" and in lieu thereof insert the word "directed." In the same line, after the word "place," insert the words "on the pension roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5 strike out the words "a" and "in." In the same line, after the word "Twenty-fifth," insert the word "Regiment." After the word "Wisconsin," in the same line, insert the word "Volunteer."

Strike out, in line 6, the words "and also in" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and." In the same line, after the word "Twelfth," insert the word "Regiment." After the word "Wisconsin," in the same line, insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 7 strike out the words "on the pension roll;" in the same line, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

Strike out the word "seventy-two," in lines 7 and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Strike out, in line 8, the words "the pension;" after the word "that," in the same line, insert the word "he."

Also amend title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William G. Willoughby."

And when so amended your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILFORD COOPER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8045) granting a pension to Wilford Cooper.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Wilford Cooper, late of Company D, Fourth Missouri Cavalry, also of Missouri State Militia, and pay him a pension of —— dollars per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6, before the word "Cavalry," insert the words "State Militia Volunteers;" in the same line strike out the words "also of Missouri State Militia."

In line 7, after the word "pension," insert "at the rate;" in the same line, after the word "of" and before the word "dollars," insert the word "twenty-four;" after the word "month," in the same line, insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Wilford Cooper."

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to precipitate a discussion here, but, by consent of the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. CALDERHEAD], I would state this in support of an amendment which I wish to offer to the committee amendment to raise the amount from $24 to $30. After the committee had made its report and acted upon it, additional information was received from the neighbors of this claimant, and I call the attention of members to the fact that were it not for the doubt that exists as to whether certain disabilities can be traced to service origin or not, the claimant would be entitled to $40. I simply ask to amend by making the amount $30 instead of $24, and instead of $50, as I had first intended. I have the support of the subcommittee, and, with the consent of the chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out $24 and insert $30.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty." This is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, in reference to this bill, I will say that the facts are as stated by my colleague. After the bill had been considered by the committee and reported at $24, additional information was presented which, if it had been before the committee at the time the bill was acted upon, I have no doubt would have induced the committee to recommend $30. I now agree to it for my own part, and I think the other members of the committee would do the same thing.

The amendment to the amendment, striking out "twenty-four" and inserting "thirty," was agreed to.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES A. HAUSMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5961) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to reissue the pension certificate of Charles A. Hausmann and increase the rate of his pension.

Eggeman, late of Company G, Fourteenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and U. S. S. Brooklyn (navy service), and to pay him a pension of $50 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6, after the word "Fourteenth," insert the word "Regiment."
In line 8, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate;" in the same line strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."
In line 9, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."
Also amend title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John R. Eggeman."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HORACE B. DURANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6885) granting an increase of pension to Horace B. Durant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Horace B. Durant, late assistant surgeon, One hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read:

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM H. LANE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5886) granting a pension to William H. Lane.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of William H. Lane, late a member of Company D, Second Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4 strike out the word "upon" and insert in lieu thereof the word "on."

In the same line, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6, before the word "of," insert the words "at the rate."

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BENJAMIN F. KURTZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6900) to increase the pension of Benjamin F. Kurtz.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin F. Kurtz, late of Company A, Fifth Regiment of West Virginia Cavalry Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $40 per month in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4 strike out the word "upon" and insert in lieu thereof the word "on."

In line 6 strike out the word "Fifth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Second."

In line 7 strike out the word "of." In the same line strike out the words "Cavalry Volunteers" and in lieu of those words insert the words "Volunteer Cavalry."

In line 8, before the word "of," insert the words "at the rate." In the same line strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Strike out all after the word "of," in line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the words "that he is now receiving."

Mr. GRAHAM. I desire to offer an amendment to strike out "thirty" in line 8 and insert "forty."

I have consulted with the committee and they approve this change. This man is totally blind. This merely restores the amount to that originally stated in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion would not be in order, then; but the same result would be arrived at by voting down the committee amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. There are other committee amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can call for a separate vote on this amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do that.

The other committee amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is desired.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out the word "forty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. GRAHAM. I wish to state very briefly, for the benefit of the House, that this case came under my own personal observation. The soldier served with me for three years and four months, enlisting at the beginning of the war. He was out in the first battles of the war, served through the entire term of his enlistment, and came home crippled. Since then he has become totally blind. It was impossible to prove that this blindness occurred from service origin, so we are compelled to bring in the bill in this manner. I would state that the man is helpless. For his other troubles he is pensioned at the rate of $12 a month; but he requires constant attention; and I can say that no better, braver soldier served during the war. He was in every engagement of his regiment and was captured with a detachment in which all in that detachment were either killed or captured and fell into the hands of the enemy. He was imprisoned for five or six months and came home a physical wreck, but this blindness can not be directly proved to be of service origin. For that reason I ask for this special pension, and I hope the House will grant it.

The question being taken on the amendment recommended by the committee, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be favorably reported.

Subsequently,

Mr. GRAHAM said: I move to reconsider the action which the House has just taken on the bill H. R. 6900. That action was a mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order in committee, but would be in order in the House. The bill has been laid aside.

Mr. GRAHAM. I ask unanimous consent to recur to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to and again take up the bill H. R. 6900, an act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Kurtz.

Mr. GRAHAM. There was a misunderstanding in the vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the order of the committee can be vacated. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the order laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation be vacated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to which the gentleman refers having been agreed to, he desires to ask unanimous consent that the amendment as to the rate, fixing it at $30 instead of $40, be vacated.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the committee amendment to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. OLMSTED. A parliamentary inquiry. If we vote "no," we vote to restore the rate to $40?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill provides a forty-dollar rate, but the Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend an amendment to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. OLMSTED. And we are all in favor of the original amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The action of the committee on that amendment having been vacated, the question now recurs on the committee amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I think there ought to be some explanation why this amendment should be voted down.

Mr. GRAHAM. It was explained while the gentleman was absent.

Mr. OLMSTED. I understand the committee are willing that the amendment shall be voted down.

Mr. PAYNE. I think there ought to be some more specific reason stated than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the committee amendment.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to have the gentleman make some explanation, as I was not in a while ago. Does the gentleman say that the committee have agreed to this?

Mr. GRAHAM. They have agreed to the change. That is, the chairman has, and I have spoken to members of the committee.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that facts have been presented that were not before the committee. This case is somewhat similar to that which was passed a few moments ago. And after the statement was made I stated that I would make no opposition. I bind no one but myself.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What are the facts in the case?

Mr. GRAHAM. The party is totally blind. He served in the Army with myself for three years. We slept under the same blanket; and no better or braver soldier ever served the flag. He is totally blind and has to be helped along.

Mr. SIMS. Why do you not make it $50?

Mr. GRAHAM. We make it $40. He deserves $50, though.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CARRIE L. DALE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6952) to pension Carrie L. Dale, widow.

The bill was read, as follows:

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."
In line 5 strike out the word "Mrs."
In line 6, after the word "First," insert the word "Regiment."
In line 6, after the word "Maine," insert the word "Volunteer."
In line 6 strike out the word "to."
In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate;" in the same line strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MATILDA O'CONNOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3131) to restore to the pension roll the name of Matilda O'Connor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension roll the name of Matilda O'Connor, who was heretofore granted a pension as the widow of Joseph Rhiel, late of Company K, Thirty-first Iowa Infantry, to take effect on and after the passage of this act.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "to," in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Matilda O'Connor, widow of Joseph Rhiel, or Richell, late of Company K, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL B. WEEKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3941) to restore the pension of Samuel B. Weeks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Samuel B. Weeks, late of Company L, Ninth Indiana Cavalry, at the rate of $12 per month, and to pay him the same under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 27, 1890.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "to," in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "pay to Samuel B. Weeks, late of Company L, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the pension at the rate of $12 per month granted to him by certificate No. 581146, under the act of June 27, 1890, without any further deduction or rebate on account of former overpayments or erroneous payments of pension."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SIMON VAN DER VAART.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LACEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3537. An act to grant authority to change the name of the steamship Paris—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries;

S. 2166. An act granting a pension to Charles A. D. Wiswell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and

S. R. 108. Joint resolution providing for the printing of the report of the governor of Arizona for 1899—to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4008. An act to establish light and fog stations to mark the main southern entrance of the new breakwater at Buffalo, N. Y.

EDWARD T. KENNEDY.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5110) to increase the pension of Edward T. Kennedy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Edward T. Kennedy, of Greenfield, Mo., late captain of Company C, of the Eleventh New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, to $100 per month, and cause his pension to be paid to him at that rate in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "to," in line 4, and all in lines 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and insert in lieu thereof the words: "place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward T. Kennedy, late of Company C, Eleventh Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPH E. BALDWIN.

The business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3454) granting a pension to Joseph E. Baldwin, of Topeka, Kans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $30 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph E. Baldwin, of Topeka, Kans., late of Company C, National Guards, Enrolled Missouri Militia, and Company C, Seventh Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and Company A, Missouri Militia, and Company E, Thirty-second Regiment of Enrolled Missouri Militia.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "roll," in line 4, and all in lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph E. Baldwin, late of Company C, First Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, Company C, Seventh Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and Company E, Thirty-second Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ROBERT H. JONES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4675) to recognize the rank and rerate the pension of Robert H. Jones.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Robert H. Jones, with the rank of second lieutenant of Company A, Fifth Regiment United States Colored Troops, and to rate his pension in accordance with said rank.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "roll," in line 4, and all in lines 5, 6, and 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert H. Jones, late of the Fifth Battery Ohio Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend the bill in line 9, after the word "late," by inserting the words "second lieutenant." It is simply to give him his proper rank.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, after the word "late," insert the words "second lieutenant."

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Pardon me. I have just received information that instead of the Fifth Battery Ohio Light Artillery it should be Fifth United States Colored Troops; so that my amendment should read: "Insert after the word 'late' and before the word 'of,' 'second lieutenant of Fifth United States Colored Troops.'"

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Fifth," in line 9, strike out "Battery Ohio Light Artillery" and insert "United States Colored Troops."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose this bill. I will vote for it; but before I vote for it I would like, in my own time, to have read a letter which appeared in Sunday's Post of the 11th, which, while it is ridiculous, is rather a vindication of my course. It is written by a Federal soldier who was awarded a medal for bravery upon the battlefield; and, not with a view to any criticism, I would be glad to have the Clerk read it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to know if it relates to the pending bill.

Mr. TALBERT. No, sir; not exactly. It relates to pensions generally and to my course, and is rather a vindication of it, though somewhat ridiculous. I am not trying to kill time, but will ask the Clerk to read it, as it will save time when we go into the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the reading of the letter which he sends to the desk. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALZELL. I object, Mr. Chairman, to the reading of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. TALBERT. I then ask that it be read in my own time; I have the floor.

Mr. DALZELL. It is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that it be read in my own time.

The Clerk read as follows:

House night school—Refractory pupils brought to book by Professor TALBERT—Compulsory-attendance issue—Number of members who "play hookey" has been growing session after session, and the South Carolinian now insists that there must be reform—There will be no school at night hereafter unless a quorum is present. (Copyright, 1900, by Amos J. Cummings.)

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, that is not in order, and I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made that the article is not in order.

Mr. TALBERT. Does the Chair sustain the objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the objection. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that is rather a captious objection of the gentleman from New York or somewhere that this small privilege shall be denied me. The fact is, I have been unjustly criticised by the newspapers for the course I have taken, and this is somewhat of a vindication of my course. The letter bears upon the general subject of pension legislation. I have sat here all day and not interposed any objection to these bills that have been considered.

Now, I desire to let the committee go to the House and pass these bills, and I do not desire to be an obstructionist, but if this simple privilege is denied me, remember that I demand that you bring a quorum when you get back into the House to pass these bills. Now, it is simply a privilege, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. It hurts nobody, while it is rather ridiculous.

Mr. PAYNE. That does not improve matters. I do not propose to be bulldozed to allow anything to go into the RECORD. I do not believe, further, that it is in any way germane to the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. It is a little ridiculous.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It comes to this, Mr. Chairman, a gentleman occupying the position of a member of Congress comes here with a lot of frivolous stuff out of a newspaper and attempts to block the wheels of legislation unless he can print it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion is out of order. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report back, with the recommendation that they lie on the table, the following bills:

H. R. 3454. A bill granting a pension to Joseph E. Baldwin, of Topeka, Kans.; and
H. R. 4675. A bill to recognize the rank and rerate the pension of Robert Jones.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that that committee has had under consideration certain bills on the Private Calendar, two of which are reported back with the recommendation that they do lie on the table, and others, some with amendment and some without, with the recommendation that they do pass. The Clerk will read the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 4836. A bill for the relief of Wilbur F. Loveland, late of Company E, Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 69, noes 1.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SULLOWAY. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The doors will be closed; the yeas and nays are ordered on the pending question. Those in favor of the engrossment and third reading of the bill will, when their names are called, vote "aye," and those opposed will vote "no;" those desiring not to vote will answer "present." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 1, answered "present" 29, not voting 171; as follows:

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. FLEMING.

Mr. GROW with Mr. RIXEY.

Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. BRADLEY.

Mr. TALBERT (interrupting the reading of the pairs). Mr. Speaker, before it is developed that there is no quorum present, as I do not want to punish the whole House for the petulance of one man, I ask leave to withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's request is out of order. The Chair regrets that the gentleman did not make it sooner. But after the count has been made, developing that there is no quorum, it is not competent to dispense with proceedings under the call by the withdrawal of the point of no quorum.

The reading of the pairs was resumed and concluded.

Mr. EDDY. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. ROBB. I wish to withdraw my vote and to vote "present."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Will it be in order to ask unanimous consent that the roll call be vacated?

The SPEAKER. We have no power to do that until we have a quorum present.

Mr. JENKINS. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. OTJEN, is sick at his hotel, and I ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin states that his colleague, Mr. OTJEN, is sick, and he asks that he may be excused. That is in order on this call. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. I wish to make the same request on behalf of my colleague, Mr. TERRY, who is sick.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. MCCULLOCH, states that his colleague, Mr. TERRY, is sick, and asks that he be excused. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. MCALEER, but believing that he would vote in the same way that I did I have voted.

The SPEAKER. These remarks are not in order.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. LORIMER, is detained at his house by the illness of one of his children, and I ask that he may be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois states that his colleague, Mr. LORIMER, is absent on account of illness in his family, and asks that he may be excused. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. S. A. DAVENPORT. My colleague, Mr. GROW, is detained from the House by reason of sickness. I ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that his colleague, Mr. GROW, is absent on account of sickness, and asks that he may be excused. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. MCCALL, is confined to his house in this city by illness, and I ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts states that his colleague, Mr. MCCALL, is confined to his house by sickness, and asks that he be excused. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MULLER, be excused on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that his colleague is absent on account of sickness?

Mr. DRIGGS. Yes. I ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that his colleague, Mr. MULLER, be excused on account of sickness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the Speaker, and he voted in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

House bills of the following titles, favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, were severally considered, the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole agreed to, and the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 857) for the relief of James Chapman, late surgeon Eighth New York Cavalry, assistant surgeon Nineteenth New York Infantry, and surgeon One hundred and twenty-third New York Infantry;

A bill (H. R. 856) for the relief of Mary McCarthy, mother of John McCarthy, Sixth Company, First Battalion, New York Sharpshooters;

A bill (H. R. 4335) granting a pension to Sarah Robinson, guardian of William H. Edmonds, helpless and idiotic minor of Joseph C. Edmonds;

A bill (H. R. 7323) granting an increase of pension to Harrison Canfield;

A bill (H. R. 8397) for the relief of John White;

A bill (H. R. 7445) granting a pension to Emma B. Reed;

A bill (H. R. 7594) granting a pension to Amelia Taylor;

A bill (H. R. 3085) granting a pension to William Sheppard, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (H. R. 1768) granting an increase of pension to George J. Stealy, of Clarksburg, W. Va.;

A bill (H. R. 156) granting a pension to Lena E. Patterson;

A bill (H. R. 6356) to grant an increase of pension to Lewis R. Armstrong; and

A bill (H. R. 4795) granting an increase of pension to John O'Connor.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I ask unanimous consent that on the remaining bills favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole the previous question may be considered as ordered, on the bills and amendments to their final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the previous question be ordered upon the several bills and amendments to their passage, excepting those which were reported with the recommendation that they lie upon the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PUERTO RICO.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me, I should be glad to present a conference report. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report, and that the Clerk read the statement.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I should like to ask the gentleman if the minority member of the committee [Mr. MCRAE] has signed this statement.

Mr. CANNON. No; he has not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I see that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] is now in his seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report and to have the statement read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 4, and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein until otherwise provided by law;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. G. CANNON,
W. H. MOODY,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico the revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:

The full text of the bill as finally agreed upon by the conference committee reads as follows:

"That the sum of $2,095,455.88, being the amount of customs revenue received on importations by the United States from Puerto Rico since the evacuation of Puerto Rico by the Spanish forces on the 18th of October, 1898, to the 1st of January, 1900, together with any further customs revenue collected on importations from Puerto Rico since the 1st of January, 1900, or that shall hereafter be collected under existing law, shall be placed at the disposal of the President, to be used for the government now existing and which may hereafter be established in Puerto Rico, and for the aid and relief of the people thereof, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein until otherwise provided by law; and the revenues herein referred to, already collected and to be collected under existing law, are hereby appropriated for the purposes herein specified, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

J. G. CANNON,
W. H. MOODY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MCRAE. Does the gentleman expect a vote on this to-night?

Mr. CANNON. I hope to. To-morrow is Saturday——

Mr. MCRAE. It is now 5 o'clock, and certainly there is not time to discuss it and vote on it this evening.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And this is pension day.

Mr. CANNON. As the bill agreed upon is substantially the House bill, and as it ought to be passed at once if it is to be passed at all——

Mr. MCRAE. Oh, I know that has been the——

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman says that has been the statement from time to time—I suppose that is what the gentleman intended to say—but the bill as agreed upon is substantially the House bill, and in reality, if there is any point in passing the bill at all, as I believe there is, it ought to be passed as early as possible. I will yield to the gentleman if he desires some time.

Mr. MCRAE. I desire some time, and other gentlemen would like to have some time. I do not think anything can be gained by trying to pass the bill this evening, and I suggest that the gentleman let the report and statement be printed in the RECORD and taken up to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal. It is not our fault that the bill has not been passed before. We only discussed it twenty minutes when it was first presented and twenty-eight minutes when it came into the House again.

Mr. CANNON. I think we would have passed it two or three days ago if we could have gotten a chance, but the delay seems to have been in the coordinate branch.

Mr. MCRAE. It has not been our fault.

Mr. CANNON. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MCRAE. I want about twenty-five or thirty minutes, and some other gentlemen on this side may want some time, but I do not know.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have sixty minutes, and I will yield to the gentleman twenty minutes or twenty-five.

Mr. MCRAE. I will say to the gentleman with perfect frankness that we shall ask a yea-and-nay vote on this, and at this hour he must certainly agree with me that——

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to the gentleman that I am not willing that this conference report shall be delayed until Monday, and I do want to have it passed, if I can, to-night.

Mr. MCRAE. We can take it up to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON. But to-morrow at 1 o'clock there is a special order.

Mr. MCRAE. Well, we can, by unanimous consent, postpone that until 2 o'clock. I do not want to be the means of delaying the bill at all.

Mr. CANNON. Let us do the best we can to pass it to-night. I will yield twenty or twenty-five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MCRAE. It is perfectly apparent to the gentleman that there is no quorum present.

Mr. CANNON. We have just had a quorum.

Mr. MCRAE. I know; but the gentleman knows as well as I do that members have left since, and it will simply keep those of us who are here a couple of hours longer to get them back, when it can be done to-morrow just as well.

Mr. COX. Pass it over until to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON. I think we can at least complete the discussion of this conference report to-night, and, I trust, have a vote. I think we have a quorum here. I told everybody that I could get at that I would call it up and dispose of it if the House would consent to to-night.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not see why we can not postpone the special order until 2 o'clock, and that will give us two hours to dispose of the bill to-morrow. There will be no objection to postponing the special order.

Mr. CANNON. I think we have a quorum now, and I am afraid we will not have to-morrow.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There will be no trouble about that. There is not a quorum here now, and it is 5 o'clock Friday evening, and we have worked diligently all the afternoon.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any reason why we should not go on now and complete the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. We expect about an hour's debate, and that takes us to 6 o'clock, and then a yea-and-nay vote, and it will take to about 7, and then possibly we will not have a quorum. Why not let it go over until to-morrow?

Mr. McRAE. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that no notice was given that this would be called up; gentlemen on both sides have gone home supposing that we would go on with the pension bills when a quorum was got, as they expected that would be the order for the remainder of this afternoon; and I suggest that he ask unanimous consent to set up the special order to 2 o'clock, and we will make any reasonable arrangement as to the time at which the vote shall be taken.

Mr. CANNON. I will accommodate the gentleman as far as I can. I will ask unanimous consent that the special order to-morrow shall be postponed until the conference report is disposed of, that we vote on the conference report to-morrow at 1 o'clock, and that the hour preceding 1 o'clock, commencing after the reading of the Journal, shall be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. McRAE. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the special order for to-morrow be postponed until the disposition of this conference report, that after the reading of the Journal the consideration of the same shall take place, the time to be equally divided between the two sides, the vote to be taken at 1 o'clock. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FREER, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LINNEY, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. COONEY, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CRUMP, for two weeks, on account of illness in his family.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. STEELE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that for a moment.

Mr. PAYNE. I will withdraw it.

STATUE OF GOVERNOR OLIVER P. MORTON.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Saturday, April 14, be devoted to consideration of resolutions accepting the statue of Governor Morton.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that Saturday, April 14—at what hour?

Mr. STEELE. At 1 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. At 1 o'clock, be set apart for ceremonies in connection with the receiving by Congress of the statue of the late Governor Oliver P. Morton, of Indiana. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WANGER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9566) authorizing the establishment of a light and fog signal on the new breakwater, harbor of refuge, Delaware Bay, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 754); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEATWOLE, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (H. C. Res. 14) to print 6,000 additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 755); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (H. C. Res. 23) to print 8,000 copies of matter furnished by the Director of the Bureau of American Ethnology, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 756); which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2542) to authorize the Cambridge Bridge Commission to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 757); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2931) to incorporate the American National Red Cross, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 758); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred House bill 758, reported in lieu thereof a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 213) to allot the lands of the Mescalero Apache Indians in Donna Ana County, N. Mex., accompanied by a report (No. 759); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 24, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 2d instant, a statement by the superintendent of the public schools of the District of Columbia relative to the whole number of pupils enrolled, and the average daily attendance of pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and the total expenditures on account of the same for each of the fiscal years from the year ending June 30, 1885, to the year ending June 30, 1891, inclusive; which, on motion of Mr. MCMILLAN, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

SLOOP BETSEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of law and of fact filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the findings by the court relating to the vessel sloop Betsey, Peleg Blankinship, master; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of the Sherman County League, of fourth-class postmasters of Ashton, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of fourth-class postmasters; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BARD. I present a petition of the Pacific Stockmen's Association, praying for the speedy and favorable enactment of a law to classify lands in the arid and semi-arid regions, segregating such tracts as are more valuable for grazing than any other purpose, and leasing the same as grazing ranges for the use of actual stock owners. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEASING THE GRAZING LANDS.—A MEMORIAL BY THE PACIFIC STOCKMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists have the honor to respectfully present this request for your speedy and favorable action upon a law to classify lands in the arid and semi-arid regions, segregating such tracts as are more valuable for grazing than any other purpose and leasing the same as grazing ranges for the use of actual stock owners and the owners of abutting agricultural lands, reserving mineral and such other rights as will equalize benefits, induce actual agricultural settlement where the same is possible, and, above all, arrest the rapid destruction of the sole value of these ranges, which consists in their natural grasses and other forage.

For our reasons we beg to say: That the present land laws of this country recognize only three classes of land—agricultural, mineral, and timber. The maximum area in which land in each class may be acquired by law is fixed, and all such lands may pass into private ownership. Experience has furnished evidence that in the region of which we speak there are vast tracts of land which are in neither class. Their highest present value is for grazing. Their forage is a source of national wealth which can be obtained only by feeding stock upon them. The law for which we pray should provide for the expert classification of these lands by the Agricultural Department and for leasing them to stockmen in such holdings as will permit their use for grazing, furnish a motive for the renewal of their exhausted forage by understocking and reseeding, and will leave the title in the Federal Government, in order that if nobler use than grazing finally appear patents may issue to the agricultural settlers of the future.

The rapid decline of the grazing value of these ranges is a fact of common knowledge and is due to their use as commons, which furnishes no motive for their preservation, but encourages their overstocking, that each herdsman may get what he can of their value in the present, regardless of the future. When this condition is stated, another is disclosed. In all the region under consideration, if there is to be a future agriculture, it must depend upon conservation of moisture. The ranges, being rapidly stripped of their annual covering of forage, are as constantly increasing in aridity. What rain falls upon them runs off, and the streams which drain it are alternately torrential and dry. The destruction of the forage therefore not only makes the land that is stripped more arid, but creates desert conditions which affect disastrously the moisture of the whole intermountain regions by increasing evaporation and the radiation of heat. Therefore the remote interests of the future agricultural settler will be served by reserving Federal title and control under such oversight as will make forfeiture of leases the penalty of overstocking and continued obliteration of the natural forage. We believe that administration of such a law should be by the Federal Government alone and that the surplus revenue over the cost of such administration should be given to the States and Territories wherein the lands are located, in trust, for use in the storage of storm waters for irrigation to bring into tillage lands that may be made fertile thereby. This will return to the States and Territories a revenue in lieu of the taxes lost to them by reason of the title to these arid ranges remaining in Federal ownership. The official statistics show that in the year 1898 in the following States and Territories the Government land bore to the whole area of each these proportions:

	Per cent.
California	58
Arizona	76
Montana	78
Utah	82
Wyoming	86
Idaho	89
Nevada	95

These lands are mainly arid and mountain tracts, and mostly would yield some revenue that would go to the States for irrigation, the highest economic purpose to which it can be devoted in the arid region. But if the ranges remain much longer in common, their forage will be permanently eradicated and aridity of the whole region will be dangerously increased, the possibility of agricultural settlement will be indefinitely deferred, meat food supply and export of the country will disastrously decrease, and the revenue that might increase the irrigated area by water storage will be forever lost.

We are not unmindful of the opposition that comes from stockmen themselves and from the advocates of a different policy within the region concerned. The governors of Colorado, South Dakota, Wyoming, Nebraska, Montana, and Arizona have asked for delay.

Some of these gentlemen have frankly indicated their purpose to be the granting of all these lands to the States and Territories in which they are situated and the final relinquishment of Federal title and control. Such policy is urged in the interest of the agricultural settler. It is history, however, that State control of all lands heretofore so granted to the States has proved to be in the interest of large aggregations rather than that of small holders. The Federal Government land policy is, historically, the only friend of the small holder who wishes to found and support a home upon the products of the soil. We hold, therefore, that these arid ranges should be held in trust by the Federal Government for the future settler, wherever agriculture may prove to be a possibility, and that such possibility be meanwhile increased by reclothing them with the forage of which they have been stripped, to renew their moisture and their valuable capacity as a conserver of rainfall and its prolonged run off in the channels of streams that were once perrennial and are now periodically dry.

Finally, we are not asking of your honorable body a novel and untried policy. The State of Texas, finding its public domain stripped and going back to desert by use as commons, has adopted this leasehold policy, and the benefits have already appeared to justify it. Australia, under conditions almost exactly like ours, was stung to action by the same results that are now upon us, and saved and restored the value of her grazing domain by a leasehold system that has proved of inestimable value. The land grant of the Northern Pacific Railway was largely composed of arid grazing lands, and, after degeneration by extirpation of the forage had far progressed, that corporation adopted the leasehold system, which has already proved its conspicuous value.

For these reasons we ask your favorable consideration of such a law, admonishing all concerned that every season that passes without it at the same time adds to its necessity and detracts from its utility, for the value of the ranges is passing every year, never to return.

The foregoing memorial was adopted by the Pacific Stockmen's Association at a convention thereof held in San Francisco March 5, 1900, and ordered presented to the Congress of the United States.

F. C. LUSK,
President Pacific Stockmen's Association.
F. J. SINCLAIR,
Secretary.

LEVI C. FAUGHT.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 477) granting a pension to Levi C. Faught, that some amendments may be made to it. The bill was passed by the Senate on the 3d of March, 1900, and is pending in the House. I desire to have it returned to the Senate that a change may be made in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Does the Senator enter a motion to reconsider now?

Mr. COCKRELL. Probably I ought to enter a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the usual way to enter a motion to reconsider and accompany it with a motion to recall the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right. I enter the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri enters a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7264) granting a pension to Hannah C. Smith, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 420) for the relief of the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SULLIVAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for paving Fourteenth street to Lydecker avenue and Lydecker avenue to the east side of Thirteenth street, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, submitted a favorable report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 3782) granting an increase of pension to Victor M. Gabrielle; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3783) granting a pension to Charles L. Knight; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3784) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John W. Bartley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3785) for the relief of W. W. Jackson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3786) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy of the United States of America to furnish and deliver to the Schley home fund committee of the Woman's Industrial and Patriotic League, of Washington, D. C., certain historical bronze; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3787) for the relief of Mary A. Shufeldt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. QUARLES introduced a bill (S. 3788) granting an increase of pension to James Williams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 3789) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Minnich; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SULLIVAN introduced a bill (S. 3790) to increase the pension of Anna M. Collier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 4,500 copies of the work entitled The Louisiana Purchase, by the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States; 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

STATISTICS RELATIVE TO SOLDIERS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the following information: A statement of the number of soldiers, volunteer and regular, who have been killed and died from wounds received in the Philippine Islands since the close of the war between Spain and the United States of America; the number of regular and volunteer soldiers who have died from disease during that period; the number who have been wounded in action or otherwise, and what proportion of them are still incapacitated for duty; the number who have committed suicide during said period; the percentage of sick, disabled, and invalid soldiers therein; what contagious diseases have been prevalent, if any, in the military camps on the islands of the Philippine Archipelago during said time, and what steps, if any, have been taken for the better protection of their health, and a statement of the number of soldiers who have become insane since the close of the Spanish-American war while in service in the Philippine Archipelago, and the disposition which has been made of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. While the Senator is about it, why does he not fix a time when the statement shall begin, instead of the close of the war? That is a technical time, and did not occur until the ratification of the treaty of the peace, long after our armies were in the Philippines. I suppose the Senator wants to go back to the time when the troops went there.

Mr. ALLEN. It is true that the war was not technically at an end until the ratification of the treaty in April of last year, but it is the intention by the resolution to cover the period from the time of the armistice, when practically peace was declared, down to the present.

Mr. HALE. Then I think the Senator would need to change the resolution; otherwise he will get the information for only the time since the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not now remember the exact date.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to examine the resolution before it is acted on. While I probably shall not oppose its adoption, I trust the Senator will let it go over.

Mr. BACON. I suggest before it goes over that the Senator from Nebraska insert the date August 1, 1898.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska desires to amend it before it goes over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Let it be amended so as to read "since August 1, 1898."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made. The resolution will be printed and go over under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2882) to authorize the Cambridge Bridge Commission to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 156) granting a pension to Lena E. Patterson;

A bill (H. R. 856) granting a pension to Mary McCarthy;

A bill (H. R. 857) granting an increase of pension to James Chapman;

A bill (H. R. 1768) granting an increase of pension to George J. Stealy;

A bill (H. R. 3085) granting an increase of pension to William Sheppard;

A bill (H. R. 4335) granting a pension to William H. Edmonds;

A bill (H. R. 4795) granting an increase of pension to John O'Connor;

A bill (H. R. 4836) granting an increase of pension to Wilbur F. Loveland;

A bill (H. R. 6356) granting an increase of pension to Lewis R. Armstrong;

A bill (H. R. 7323) granting an increase of pension to Harrison Canfield;

A bill (H. R. 7445) granting a pension to Emma B. Reed;

A bill (H. R. 7594) granting a pension to Amelia Taylor;

A bill (H. R. 8128) to establish light and fog signal at Browns Point, in Puget Sound;

A bill (H. R. 8397) granting an increase of pension to John White;

A bill (H. R. 9497) to amend an act providing for the construction of a light-ship to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Maine; and

A bill (H. R. 9824) authorizing the Secretary of War to make regulations governing the running of loose logs, steamboats, and rafts on certain rivers and streams.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4008) to establish light and fog stations to mark the main southern entrance of the new breakwater at Buffalo, N. Y.;

A bill (H. R. 4686) for the relief of J. A. Ware;

A bill (H. R. 5390) granting a pension to Maria E. Mailley; and

A bill (H. R. 9080) appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law.

LOUISE D. SMITH.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3662) granting an increase of pension to Louise D. Smith.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Louise D. Smith, widow of William H. Smith, late first lieutenant, Tenth Regiment United States Cavalry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDGES OF DISTRICT COURTS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1596) to equalize and regulate the duties of the judges of the district courts of the United States in the State of Alabama.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 6, page 2, section 3, after the word "reside," to insert the words "and hold his chambers;" so as to make the section read:

That the present judge of the district courts of the United States for the middle and northern districts of Alabama, so long as he continues in office, may reside and hold his chambers in the middle or northern district of Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES C. DRAKE.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3060) for the relief of James C. Drake.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay James C. Drake $1,529.20, which sum was expended by him while acting as United States marshal in the State of Washington.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHEDULES OF CERTAIN POSTMASTERS' SALARIES.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from New Hampshire will wait one moment, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] was not present when the order of resolutions was reached.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama submitted a resolution which is lying on the table. The Chair lays before the Senate, under the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate, a resolution which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 21st instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to return to the Senate certain schedules of salaries of postmasters in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Kansas, and Kentucky computed under the act of March 3, 1883, which schedules were before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, but which were temporarily recalled by the Postmaster-General on the 30th day of September, 1890.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON subsequently said: Mr. President, yesterday in the absence of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] a resolution offered by him came before the Senate, and I gave notice that I should move to have it referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Some Senators asked me to enter that motion, but I declined to do so in the absence of the Senator from Alabama. I was necessarily absent for a few moments this morning after the meeting of the Senate, and I am told that during that time the resolution was taken up and passed. I ask the Senator from Alabama to allow the resolution to occupy the place it did yesterday, when I refrained from making the motion which I then had in mind.

Mr. MORGAN. What was the motion the Senator had in mind?

Mr. ALLISON. To refer the resolution itself to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MORGAN. I consent to a reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the resolution referred to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was passed is reconsidered, and the resolution is again before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, with the consent of the Senator from Alabama, as the Chair understands.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so referred, in the absence of objection.

COMMISSION ON TRADE WITH CHINA, JAPAN, ETC.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1939) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to study and make full report upon the commercial and industrial conditions of China and Japan, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTUS. I would ask the Senator in charge of the bill why it is that there is no specification of what these commissioners shall receive?

Mr. GALLINGER. A committee amendment is pending which provides for their compensation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are quite a number of amendments from the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are quite a number of amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the first amendment is acted on, I should like to submit an amendment to the clause in line 6, page 1, which provides that the commissioners shall be appointed by the President. I move to add "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, line 8, section 1, after the word "business," to insert "so as;" so as to read:

It shall be the duty of the commission to ascertain what of the products of our farms, mills, and workshops may be sold there, and how these should be manufactured, packed, and shipped, as well as the proper methods of transacting the business so as to largely increase their use and consumption.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 10, section 1, to strike out the words "where the field appears open upon a thorough study and report of the economic and commercial conditions" and insert "and also in such other adjacent countries in eastern Asia as the commission shall deem advisable;" so as to read:

Second. To do the same work in the Empire of Japan, and also in such other adjacent countries in eastern Asia as the commission shall deem advisable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 14, section 1, after the word "To," to insert "investigate the economic resources and other cognate questions and to;" and in line 16, after the word "in," to strike out "China and Japan" and insert "the aforesaid countries;" so as to read:

Third. To investigate the economic resources and other cognate questions and to promote the expansion of our commerce in the aforesaid countries by such methods as may be properly employed and recommended by such a commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 20, section 2, after the word "in," to strike out "China and Japan" and insert "those countries;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of State shall instruct the diplomatic and consular agents of the United States in those countries to render all possible assistance to the members of the commission in the prosecution of their work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 23, section 3, after the word "That" to insert "under the direction of the President of the United States;" on page 3, line 1, after the word "to," to strike out "China and Japan" and insert "the aforesaid countries;" on page 3, line 3, after the word "this," to strike out "bill" and insert "act;" on page 3, line 5, after the word "President," to strike out "of the United States;" in line 8, before the word "Congress," to strike out "the;" and after the word "Congress," in the same line, to strike out "at its next session;" so as to make the section read:

That, under the direction of the President of the United States, the commission shall enter upon the performance of their duties at the earliest practicable date, and shall proceed to the aforesaid countries, where they shall spend at least one year in doing the work set forth in section 1 of this act, after which, upon returning to the United States, they shall make a report to the President of all the essential details of their work and the results of their investigations, which report shall be submitted by the President to Congress, with such suggestions and recommendations as the President may deem proper and advisable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 13, after the word "dollars," to strike out "which shall include" and to insert "to be immediately available, for;" in line 15, after the word "and," to insert "necessary clerical help, as also," and in line 17, after the word "report," to insert:

All of which shall be determined by the President of the United States: Provided, however, That the salaries of the members of said commission shall not be in excess of the sum of $5,000 each per annum.

So as to make the section read:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000, to be immediately available, for the compensation of the commissioners and necessary clerical help, as also the actual and necessary traveling and other proper charges of the commission, excepting the publication of its report, all of which shall be determined by the President of the United States: Provided, however, That the salaries of the members of said commission shall not be in excess of the sum of $5,000 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I do not care to object to the consideration of this bill. If the majority of the Senate desire to pass it, the responsibility is with them. I simply want to say that I did not vote for the bill in the committee, because I think the Congress of the United States can attend to all that is required by the bill, and this is a useless expenditure. For these reasons I was unwilling to vote for the bill in committee. As I said, the majority of the committee were in favor of the bill; in fact, I believe all the members of the committee except myself were in favor of it. While I do not object to its consideration, I wish to have it noted that I am opposed to the bill, and I do not believe it ought to pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the Republican party is in absolute power and control in this Government. It is enacting the measures providing for the revenue. It is enacting the laws for its expenditure. The Republicans are in absolute control in the Senate, and we on this side of the Chamber are powerless to prevent the passage of any legislation that they deem necessary.

This measure comes from the Republican party, and being deemed necessary by them I do not propose to antagonize it. I do not agree with the principle or the policy of it. I want it distinctly understood hereafter that absolute responsibility rests upon the majority of the Senate for all the legislation that is enacted, and we are powerless to prevent it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not consume the time of the Senate in discussing this bill beyond taking a moment to state that the President of the United States in his last two messages to Congress has recommended the appointment of a commission, such as is here provided for. Germany has sent two commissions to the Orient for the purpose of studying matters of trade and commerce; France has sent one; Great Britain has sent either one or two; and it is deemed by the President and by the great commercial bodies of the country an opportune time for the United States to send a commission, an inexpensive one, to China and Japan and the adjacent countries to see if we can not find increased markets for American products, the products of our farms and our mills and our workshops.

I believe thoroughly in the measure, and I trust it will be passed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it has been difficult to find out just what is in the bill, owing to the confusion in the Chamber. I wish to ask the Senator who has it in charge if it contemplates the appointment of citizens, eminent citizens, outside of members of the House and Senators?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that the purpose the committee had in view beyond question was the appointment of persons outside of Congress; and I am sure that the President would not for a moment consider the matter of appointing a member of either branch of Congress on a commission of this kind.

Mr. HALE. That is the purpose of the committee?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the purpose of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to say one thing, suggested by the inquiry and the answer, which I think it is proper to say here. I suppose I am warranted in saying that a majority of the Senate, certainly with substantial unanimity two important committees of the Senate of which I am a member (I think there is but one exception), think that the practice of appointing members of this or the other House of Congress to such important public places by the President, whether with or without the advice and consent of the Senate, is one which on the whole is not a good one. A great many members of the Senate think it is contrary to the Constitution of the United States. I think one Senator, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], said in my hearing somewhere, when it was proposed to the Senate to confirm such appointees on one occasion, that if the commissioners were officers they could not lawfully be appointed, and if they were not officers they could not lawfully be confirmed by the Senate. I thought that was a suggestion of great weight.

But the practice has grown up. It did not originate with the present President. The first examples of it in this Administration were at a time when a particular diplomatic service was such that it seemed there was hardly another man in the United States so fit for the particular function as a very eminent member of this body who sits near me on my left. He was selected, and the public desire for that most valuable service caused the general principle to be lost sight of. So nobody, I suppose, wanted to do anything or to say anything which would seem to blame the President of the United States. Still less did anybody wish to do anything or to say anything which would seem to cast any reflection whatever on the members of the Senate who had undertaken in important and difficult periods of our history these important and difficult and responsible duties.

But at the same time many people think it is unconstitutional, as I do. Many others think that it establishes a wrong relation between the Executive and the Senate to put it in the power of the Executive to select from this body members for special public honors and distinctions, for the most attractive public employments, and in some cases it must be a serious embarrassment to members of the Senate. For instance, if Senators who negotiate a treaty come back with it and it is laid before the Senate, how can any of their associates argue to their minds in debate here the wisdom of such a measure? They come pledged beforehand. Before their Senatorial duty begins another duty has affected and influenced their minds.

I am sure, after the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire, that there is no purpose of continuing that practice. I think it would be better, at some time when there is nobody immediately concerned and interested—so that it could not be supposed to be doing anything to reflect on anyone—that Congress should pass a law or resolution expressing its disapprobation of that practice.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me just one moment to offer an amendment?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, sympathizing with the view the Senator from Massachusetts holds as to men in public life being appointed on commissions, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "persons," in line 3, the words:

No one of whom shall be a member of either branch of Congress.

That would seem to meet that objection, certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, after the word "persons," page 1, insert:

No one of whom shall be a member of either House of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not entirely sure that that amendment is a proper one. The object sought to be accomplished is undoubtedly proper, and that is that no one who is a member of either House of Congress shall, while a member of Congress, perform the duties of one of these commissioners. But it is certainly entirely practicable to appoint a member of Congress if he proposes to give up his seat in Congress for the purpose of accepting it.

The position ascribed by the Senator from Massachusetts to myself was not stated with exact accuracy, although it is very rare that that criticism can be made upon anything which is said by the Senator from Massachusetts. The position which I think is a correct one, is not that a member of Congress can not be appointed to the office, but that if a member of Congress is appointed to any office his acceptance ipso facto vacates his seat either in the Senate or in the House.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, my statement, I think, was that the Senator said if it were an office he could not hold it; but of course if he ceased to be a member of Congress, he could fill it.

Mr. BACON. That he could not hold his position as a Congressman at the same time?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; that is what I meant to say; and if it were not an office, the duty could not be put upon the Senate of confirming him.

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with the object sought to be accomplished by this amendment. I think, however, there should be a change of phraseology, because it is certainly competent for the President, under the Constitution at least, to appoint a member of the Senate or a member of the House to any office, and it has frequently been done in the past, the understanding being, of course, that he surrenders his position as a Senator or as a Representative when he accepts it.

I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts such a change of phraseology as would simply cover the point that no one should serve while a member of Congress, because it is entirely competent for the President to appoint him and entirely competent for him to accept it; but if he accepts, he vacates his office as a member of the Senate or of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator suggest phraseology that would suit him? Of course it is competent for Congress to prohibit the appointment of Senators and members of the House.

Mr. BACON. I do not think that ought to be done, because there might be a man eminently fitted for the position, and he might be willing to surrender his place in the Senate or in the House to accept it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. I shall be glad to accept an amendment to the amendment if the Senator will suggest it.

Mr. BACON. I have not drawn it. I am sure the Senator from New Hampshire, with his accustomed facility in such matters, will readily make the desired change.

Mr. HOAR. May I make a suggestion?

Mr. BACON. I have not quite finished, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. HOAR. May I make a suggestion before you go on, because I should like to have you give your opinion on it.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest the following:

Provided, That no member of either House of Congress shall hereafter serve under any appointment made by the executive department of the Government while holding his office as such member.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that be added to the bill.

Mr. BACON. "While holding the office of Senator or Representative." I think that is a very good suggestion.

Mr. President, I desire to say one word in reference to the bill. I have not had the opportunity to read it, but I understand that it provides for the selection of the members of this commission, who shall be distributed through the different sections of the country. That, I think, is a very important provision and one which looks to the accomplishment of the greatest good.

Ordinarily, Mr. President, I might say generally, I am opposed to these commissions. I think they are very frequently created when possibly their work might be as well done in some other way. But this one I regard as extremely important. I am one of those who believe that the extension of our commerce and the development of our trade with foreign countries can best be done by peaceful measures. I am opposed to trying to open the door with swords and bayonets. This being upon the line of the gathering of such information in a peaceful way, a way which will put our people in all sections upon notice and give information of the particular products which can be advantageously sent to the great opening trade in China and advertise them of the best methods by which they can proceed, I think the comparatively small amount of money, when the immense trade and possibilities are taken into consideration, can very properly be devoted to this purpose.

I know that in my immediate section there is the greatest interest in the question of the development of the trade with Asia, by which the agricultural products as well as the manufactured products of that section may find a wide and a favorable market. While of course I differ with very great hesitation from some of my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, I believe that the measure generally is one of very great merit; and I shall be very glad to vote for it, especially with the provision which it contains looking to the representation of all sections of the country upon the commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the amendment I submitted to line 3 was adopted be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be reconsidered; and the Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following:

And provided further, That no member of either House of Congress shall hereafter serve under an appointment made by the executive department of the Government while holding his office as such member.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. In connection with the bill I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the report made when the bill was reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS OF CHINA AND JAPAN.

[February 23, 1900.—Ordered to be printed. Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following report. To accompany S. 1939.]

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1939) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to study and make full report upon the commercial and industrial conditions of China and Japan, and for other purposes, have examined the same, and report:

During the past few years the attention of the American people has been forcibly directed to the necessity of increasing the foreign commerce of the United States, and it has already been demonstrated that by properly directed efforts we shall be able to secure a largely increased export trade, both of our manufactured goods and the products of American farms. It goes without the saying that the growth of our foreign trade will largely promote the prosperity of all classes of our people, and the Orient, by practically common consent, holds the largest promise for our commercial expansion.

JAPAN.

The Empire of Japan has already come into very close commercial relations with the United States. In ten years our exports to Japan have grown from $5,233,643 in 1890 to $17,264,688 in 1899. During the same period the exports of American raw cotton increased from $85,211 to $5,775,784. Iron, steel, and manufactures of these increased from $242,479 to $2,578,618. The sale of locomotives increased from $8,000 to $529,514, cigarettes from $76,556 to $445,263, tobacco from nothing to $2,414,482, and flour from $127,120 to $722,710.

Our total exports to Japan in 1898 were $20,385,541, being $3,120,853 more than for the year 1899, which were, as above stated, $17,264,688. This fact is instructive, as showing that of late our trade with that great Empire has apparently not been pushed as earnestly as its importance demands.

In 1881 the United States supplied Japan with only 5.72 per cent of the imports into that country, while the United Kingdom of Great Britain furnished 52.57 per cent of those imports. In 1898 our country made a better showing, the percentage standing as follows: The United States, 14.57 per cent, and the United Kingdom, 22.84 per cent. These statistics show the possibilities of our trade with that Empire when the American people shall prosecute that business with the same vigor and intelligence that are employed at home. There certainly is no reason why the balance of trade with Japan shall be 54.8 per cent against ours, as it was in 1899, the imports from that country for that year being $26,716,770 as against our export trade of $17,264,688.

The Empire of Japan contains 46,000,000 of people who are rapidly growing into a civilization closely allied to our own, and yet of their methods and needs we know comparatively little. We should certainly exert ourselves to acquire authentic and official information covering the whole field of their trade and commerce, to the end that we may secure our full share of the trade advantages which Japan will offer in the coming years.

CHINA.

There is a still larger field open to us in China, an Empire that covers one-twelfth of the habitable area of the globe and that holds one-quarter of the world's population. The Chinese possess a high type of oriental civilization, and in their commercial transactions they are rapidly conforming to the methods of the Western World. While many of the inhabitants are poor, there is much wealth in money and natural resources, both developed and undeveloped. The nation has a debt of only 50 cents per capita. The trade with China is especially desirable, because the Chinese are not natural mechanics, like the Japanese, but are mainly farmers and merchants. This fact is one of importance to our people. When once we secure that trade, it is self-evident that they will be permanent and valuable customers.

On Washington's Birthday, February 22, 1784, a vessel sailed from New York for the purpose of establishing trade relations with China. The venture was sufficiently successful to warrant a continuance of the business, which, however, was of small account until after the treaty of 1842 between Great Britain and China, by which Canton, Amoy, Shanghai, Foochow, and Ningpo were made treaty ports. For a quarter of a century after that time very few American goods, except cotton cloth, found a market in that Empire, so that it is safe to say that our commerce with the Chinese Empire in general lines of goods dates from about the year 1868.

INTERESTING STATISTICS.

Mr. George F. Page, an American of large business experience in this and foreign countries, who has just returned from China, where he spent a year in studying the commercial and industrial conditions of that Empire in connection with the sale of a large variety of American products, in a paper which he published in December, 1899, gives the following interesting résumé of our trade relations with that great Empire:

The tendency among the importing merchants is to favor Americans, first, because they have come within the past two years to believe in the ability of the American people to do the business; second, because they like Americans, who practice a less cavalier manner in dealing with these people than is customary with those from some other nations; and third, because, as they say, America is not seeking for any portion of China in a possible partition, nor even a "sphere of influence" if the Empire maintains its integrity.

China's foreign commerce is already considerable and growing rapidly. The following statement is compiled from the latest published complete official statistics.

The total value of the exports of domestic produce (merchandise only) from China in United States gold dollars was:

	Amount.	Gain in 10 years.
		Per cent.
In 1868	$97,685,000
In 1877	98,469,000	1—
In 1887	101,416,894	3
In 1897	127,531,000	26

In 1897 the average export per capita was 32 cents.

The total value of merchandise imports into China for the same period, calculated in the same manner, was:

	Amount.	Gain in 10 years.
		Per cent.
In 1868	$102,610,000
In 1877	111,098,000	8+
In 1887	123,424,173	11+
In 1897	158,207,000	28+

In 1897 the average imports per capita were 40 cents.

From the same statistical source it appears that of the $158,207,000 the British Empire furnished 78⅞ per cent ($124,527,780); and the United States furnished 6½ per cent ($9,703,435). Of this last sum 62½ per cent was plain gray and white cotton cloth, 28½ per cent was petroleum products, and only 9½ per cent was general merchandise, or a little less in value than $1,000,000.

If, now, we credit the British Empire with all the opium shipped into China, this item amounts to	$21,762,780
Her plain gray and white cotton cloth	16,887,728
Her fancy cotton cloth	6,030,813
Her cotton yarns	20,057,280
Her general merchandise	59,830,179

That is to say, in 1897, the last year for which we have at hand complete and detailed official statistics, the British Empire furnished China 12⅞ times as many goods, in the total, as did the United States; and eliminating from the calculation opium, cotton cloth, cotton yarns, and petroleum products, the British Empire supplied of all the rest 60 times as much as we did. And yet we are nearer in geographical location to China than any other country except Japan, until Russia completes her Siberian Railway, unless Hongkong be considered an export station of the British Empire. Even then the Philippines will give us an export station substantially equivalent to Hongkong, to say nothing of the vast resources of those islands set against the barren rock on which Hongkong is located.

There is something wrong, or this great disparity in the commerce of the two nations with China could not exist. Nor is this all. In 1897 the exports from Japan to China exceeded those of the United States by more than 80 per cent; and our imports from China during that year were 43½ per cent greater than our exports to that country.

The extent of our shipping in Chinese waters is a significant item. During the same year (1897) we had 333 vessels, with a total tonnage of 270,000 tons, out of a total, of all kinds, of 44,500 vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 34,000,000, or about three-fourths of 1 per cent of the whole.

We will now come to later dates, for there are some official statistics that are not complete in detail and are published in a limited way, "subject to revision." From such statistics it appears that the total value of our exports to China in 1898 were $11,962,828, a gain over 1897 of 2¾ per cent scant, instead of 40 per cent, as stated recently by some of the newspapers, their error being due to an incorrect valuation of the Haikwan tael, which was worth $0.78 in 1897 and $0.697 in 1898. This gain of scant 2¾ per cent is a little less than the average of the last five years. In 1899 our exports to China were $5,498,450, and the gain from that year to 1898, inclusive, averaged 23½ per cent per year. During 1898 the exports from Japan to China increased $61,871.99 more than those from the United States.

During the ten months ending October 31, 1899, our gain in total exports to China over those of the corresponding months of 1898 were 19½ per cent scant. Our imports from China for the same term increased 33½ per cent; and our exports to the various islands called Oceania increased a little more than 49.9 per cent. Of our total exports to China during the last ten months named, the increase in cotton cloth over the sales for the same ten months of 1897 was $2,484,295, a gain of 42 per cent, showing that petroleum products and "general merchandise" fell off $443,006.

It is impossible to give the exact figures in the China sales of petroleum products, as they are combined with those in some other Eastern countries, in all of which they aggregate an increase over the same term of 1898 of a tlitle more than 52 per cent. It is, therefore, apparent that the falling off in "general merchandise" is in excess of half a million dollars. There is surely something wrong, or these figures would be impossible.

The wrong is not far to find. It is twofold—first, ignorance, and second, mismanagement. The American manufacturers and merchants are greatly lacking in their knowledge of the men with whom and the conditions with which they have to deal; and until the needed information is acquired the columns of figures must continue to show against us. Among the mistakes that result from ignorance are the sending of goods that, in kind or in some defect of manufacture, are not suitable to that market. There are also improper methods of packing and wrong shipping.

We need to acquire a complete knowledge, in detail, of the demands, conditions, and the possibilities of our trade in that Empire. There is so much at stake that this knowledge can not be too comprehensive; the danger lies in superficiality.

* * * * * * *

The conditions and the times are ripe just now for this work. The old order has ceased. Whatever comes to the Chinese Government, the people are entering upon a new career. The transformation may be slow, but it will be realized. One needs only to note the progress made during the last decade to be convinced of this. During that time 10 miles of railroad have extended to 350, and 3,500 miles more are prospected. A single mill or shop with foreign machinery has multiplied a hundredfold in Shanghai alone. Ten thousand miles of inland waterways have been opened to universal steam navigation. Instead of one store carrying American canned goods, they may be counted by scores and probably by hundreds. One line of steamers from America, consisting of poor boats, has become four lines of modern vessels; and, as soon as they can be built, two steamers larger than any now afloat on the Pacific will be put into commission. Electric lights and electric cars have invaded the land. English is taught in the schools. The foreigner is no longer a derided man, but may travel anywhere on business or pleasure.

We need the Chinese trade. We shall need it even more in the coming years when our factories and workshops shall produce in still larger excess of our home demands. Within the very near future it will be decided what nations are to have their share of the commerce of one-quarter of the world's population. Our part will not come to us unsought, but it will come in large measure, if we go after it properly and promptly.

The statistics for the year 1899, recently published, indicate that our total exports to China amounted to $14,437,422, a gain of 20½ per cent over the year 1898. Of this total the sales of cotton cloth amounted to $10,273,487, a gain over 1898 of $3,328,967, while our general merchandise sales were $743,161 less in 1899 than in 1898.

The foregoing facts show plainly that while we have increased our business largely with China only a part of the trade that should come to the United States from that Empire has as yet been secured. This is especially true of the multifarious products of our farms, workshops, and mills. A considerable part of the trade that should come to us now goes to the farmers, merchants, and manufacturers of other nations, and it goes there for the reason that those nations have studied the conditions existing in China, and have adopted the proper and necessary methods to secure the business. It is undeniable that the information acquired by our competitors has been very largely obtained through the employment of commercial commissions, such as it is proposed by this bill to create. Germany has sent one such commission, France has sent two, and Great Britain has sent two, all to China. These nations are now receiving the benefit of the work done and the investigations made by those five commissions, while we remain largely ignorant of the conditions with which and the men with whom we have to deal.

In his last two annual messages to Congress President McKinley earnestly recommended the appointment of a commission similar to those sent to China by Germany, France, and Great Britain, clothed with authority to do similar work. The demand has likewise come from a large number of trade organizations and commercial bodies scattered all over our country, and the bill under consideration is in response to the recommendations of the President and the demand thus made by the men who are most directly connected with the export trade of the United States.

The bill contemplates that the commission shall be composed of representative business men selected from the five geographical divisions of the country, so that they shall represent all our people and all our industries. It is proposed to make such an appropriation as will enable the commission to spend a sufficient time in the Orient to acquire in detail the information needed by our exporters for the intelligent and successful prosecution of the business, and the purpose is also to gain information that will open the markets of the Orient to the products of our farms, and to this end it is to be hoped that at least one representative of the agricultural interests of the country shall be appointed on the commission.

Careful investigation and inquiry lead to the conclusion that three of the commissioners should spend at least a year in China, while the other two can be profitably employed during that time in Japan, with the possible addition of doing work in some of the adjacent countries of eastern Asia. This contemplates a vast amount of definite and detail work, leaving no time and providing no means for display and entertainment except so far as, to a limited degree, an exchange of courtesies may be found necessary to maintain our dignity as a nation among those Eastern peoples. The purpose is to make it a business commission, the chief end in view being to gain desirable information and secure concessions that will result in the widening of our markets in this most inviting and attractive field. It is hoped that under the direction of the President of the United States, and acting in conjunction with our diplomatic and consular agents, the commission will be able to secure modifications of some of the existing conditions, and thus open the way to the expansion of our commerce.

It is expected that the report of the commission will constitute an encyclopedia of trade conditions and suggestions that will be of great value to all Americans interested in our commerce with Oriental countries, and to this end the small amount of money that will be spent in connection with the enterprise is not worth considering.

Deeply impressed with the importance of the proposed inquiry, and believing that it will have a far-reaching and beneficial influence upon American trade, your committee report the bill back favorably in an amended form, with a recommendation that it pass.

Report of the executive committee to the New York Board of Trade and Transportation at its meeting, January 10, 1900.

NEW YORK, January 10, 1900.

To the New York Board of Trade and Transportation:

GENTLEMEN: Your executive committee submits the following report and recommendations relating to our commerce with China:

The first attempt on the part of Americans to sell goods in China was made in 1784. It was not, however, until after the treaty of 1842 between Great Britain and China, by which Canton, Amoy, Shanghai, Fuchau, and Ningpo were made "treaty ports," that trade in any proper sense existed between the Celestial Empire and the United States. Even then, for a quarter of a century, very few of our goods, except cotton cloths, found a market in that Empire. Our commerce with China may, therefore, be said to date from about the year 1867, since which time it has had a more or less steady growth, and during the last five years has developed possibilities which point to the necessity for the adoption of methods that will insure to this country its share of the trade of that vast Empire, with its 400,000,000 of inhabitants.

Statistics show plainly that as yet only a fraction of the business that should come to the United States has ever been acquired by us. The merchants and manufacturers of other nations have secured more than their share. This is notably true of Japan and the British Empire.

The statistics for 1897 are the last published that are complete and without being "subject to revision." During that year Japan exported to China something over 80 per cent more merchandise than we did; and she had no petroleum products to swell her cargoes, while petroleum products formed 28½ per cent of our exports to China during that year. The British Empire exported to China during 1897 merchandise to the value of $124,527,780, or twelve and five-sixths times as much as the entire exports from the United States to China during the same year. Our total exports to that country during 1897 amounted in value to $9,703,425, or 6½ per cent of the total exports from all countries to China.

An analysis of the exports for that year from both the British Empire and the United States indicates a disparity in general merchandise transactions not at first suggested by the figures we have given. In addition to our petroleum products, 62½ per cent of our trade consisted in cotton cloths. These two items, therefore, amounted to 90¾ per cent of the $9,703,435, leaving for all other kinds of merchandise a business of only 9¼ per cent ($889,482). The British Empire did practically nothing in petroleum products; but she had a large business in opium, cotton cloth, and cotton yarns, these items amounting to $44,607,601, leaving for "all other kinds of merchandise" a business of $59,850,179, so that of the products of the farm, the mill (other than cotton), and the workshop Great Britain's business with China in 1897 was sixty-seven and one-quarter times greater than our own.

Such statistics as have been published concerning the Chinese commerce since 1897 do not indicate any proper and substantial improvement in the sales of our "general merchandise" in that market. In fact, there appears to have been a marked shrinkage during the first ten months of 1899.

While we earnestly seek to increase the sale of cotton cloth and petroleum products in China, we are most of all interested in the "expansion of our commerce" in the manifold productions of our farms, our mills, and our workshops that are adapted to that great and rapidly growing market, and we believe that every effort should be promptly made that promises to put our trade with that Empire on a firm and satisfactory basis.

Great Britain, Germany, and France have sent commissions to study and report upon the trade conditions of China, and those countries are now receiving the benefit of the information thus obtained, while we of America are very largely "in the dark" concerning the needs of the Chinese and what we can and should do to properly supply their wants.

The President of the United States, in his message to Congress of December 5, 1898, and again in his message of December 5, 1899, urged the appointment of a commission "to study the commercial and industrial conditions in the Chinese Empire, and report as to the opportunities for and obstacles to the enlargement of markets in China for the raw products and manufactures of the United States," and a bill to create such a commission, who shall also study and report on Japan, has been introduced simultaneously in both Houses of Congress.

Another proposition, strongly advocated by our consul-general at Shanghai and now being agitated in this country, is the establishment of a national permanent exposition of American products in Shanghai, the port through which over 60 per cent of all the imports into China pass, in order that the Chinese merchants, who always demand samples and are not disposed to buy from catalogue representations, may see just what we have to offer.

In view of the foregoing facts, and believing that the methods suggested will greatly expand our commerce with China and very largely contribute to the export trade which we shall need in the coming years, we recommend the adoption of the following resolutions, to wit:

"Resolved, That it is the judgment of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation that the measure entitled 'A bill authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to study and make full report upon the commercial and industrial conditions of China and Japan, and for other purposes,' which bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa, and in the Senate by Mr. GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, on December 20, 1899, ought to be enacted into law.

"Resolved, That it is the judgment of this board that the United States should adopt the same methods as those of other countries which have thus far been successful in securing Chinese trade, and to that end we urge that a permanent industrial exposition of American products should be established at Shanghai, China, and that Congress should cooperate in this work by suitable appropriations and by assisting in its administration.

"Resolved, That the secretary be directed to send copies of this report and these resolutions to each Senator and Representative in Congress, and that they be, each and all, respectfully requested to endeavor to secure the early passage of the Gallinger-Hepburn bill (S. 1939, H. R. 4999) to create a China-Japan industrial commission, as hereinbefore mentioned, and also to use their influence to secure such legislation as will promote the proposed permanent exposition of American products in Shanghai.

"Respectfully submitted.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
New York, February 3, 1900.

At the monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, held Thursday, February 1, 1900, the following resolutions, reported by its committee on foreign commerce and the revenue laws, on the extension of the commerce with China were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas this chamber has uniformly urged the importance of the extension of our commerce with China and the East; and

"Whereas the President of the United States, in his last two annual messages to Congress, has urged the appointment of a commission 'to study and report upon the industrial conditions in China and Japan:' Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That it is the judgment of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York that prompt action should be taken by Congress authorizing the President to appoint such a commission, composed of business men representing all sections of the country, who shall enter upon the discharge of their duties at the earliest practical date; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each member of both Houses of Congress."

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Philadelphia, Pa., February 21, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: I am greatly interested in the pending bill for the appointment of a commission to study the commercial situation in the Far East. When this matter came up during the last session of Congress my attention was drawn toward it and I took occasion at that time to express to President McKinley the interest of this association in the proposed commission.

I consider it a matter of much regret that no action was taken during the last session. Now that the matter is once more before Congress, I hope that there will be no failure of action by the present session.

Our trade in the Far East, already of great importance, is only in its early stages, comparatively speaking, and I think everyone who has given any attention to commercial conditions in the Far East recognizes that there are enormous possibilities in that part of the world for the extension of American commerce. The business centered in China, now just beginning to feel progressive influences, will furnish a market for millions upon millions of dollars' worth of American products, and I regard the step contemplated a most important move toward placing our merchants and manufacturers in a better position to understand the requirements and possibilities of trade in the Far East.

On behalf of the members of this association, numbering over 1,100 of the largest manufacturers of the United States, I take pleasure in recommending the proposed bill, and extend the hope that it will secure early passage.

Very truly, yours,

THEO. C. SEARCH,
President National Association of Manufacturers.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant approved and signed the act (S. 2114) to constitute South Manchester, Conn., a port of delivery.

CHARLES C. LEE.

Mr. ROSS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 3249) to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Charles C. Lee.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to correct the naval record of and grant an honorable discharge to Charles C. Lee, late ordinary seaman, U. S. tugboat Marigold, United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the bill (S. 2264) to provide a government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the bill named by him be recommitted to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the Senator explain the necessity for recommitting the bill?

Mr. FORAKER. There is, perhaps, no necessity, but in view of what occurred in the Senate Chamber a day or two ago, I have thought it probable that there may come a time when I shall want to separate the Senate substitute to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico from House bill 8245, temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes. If that should come to pass this would facilitate it; I would then have this bill in the committee and could report the civil government part of the bill back to the Senate without delay——

Mr. ALLEN. I ask if that change could not be made in the Senate Chamber without recommitting the bill to the committee?

Mr. FORAKER. It could be made, I suppose, in the Senate Chamber, but there might be objection to it. I am not asking to separate the two bills now.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator what he has in view by the recommittal of this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. I want this bill recommitted, so that in the committee we can adopt as a substitute for this bill No. 2264 what has already been agreed upon by the Senate, so far as the civil government part of the proposed substitute for H. R. 8245 is concerned.

Mr. ALLEN. What about the tariff features of the bill?

Mr. FORAKER. They would be voted on in the House bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Would you put the House bill on this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. No, sir; my idea was to separate the House bill entirely from the civil government bill. Senate bill 2264 has in it practically the same revenue provisions, though not in the same language, as are found in the House bill. If the House bill should be voted on separately, I would not want those provisions in Senate bill 2264.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator apprehend that this bill, when recommitted to the committee, will remain in the committee until the tariff bill is acted upon?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLEN. And this bill will sleep until that measure is determined?

Mr. FORAKER. It would sleep only a reasonable time, I would say to the Senator—three or four days.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply want to understand it.

Mr. FORAKER. It would sleep only three or four days, until there is an opportunity to vote on the House bill.

Mr. ALLEN. In the meantime this bill would remain in the committee unacted upon?

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I want to do; but if the House bill can not be brought to a vote, I shall report this bill back and press it to a vote.

Mr. ALLEN. When does the Senator expect to press the bill?

Mr. FORAKER. Within three or four days or a week, or something like that. I can not be more specific.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, what is the bill in regard to which the Senator from Ohio has made a motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 2264, to provide a government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. What was the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. It is not the bill which was the unfinished business when the arrangement was made about the Quay case, is it?

Mr. FORAKER. No; Senate bill 2264 has never been the unfinished business. Senate bill 2264 is the bill I introduced originally, providing a civil government for Puerto Rico. That bill was considered in the committee, amended in the committee, and reported back and placed on the Calendar. Later, when House bill 8245, providing revenue, came to the Senate, as a substitute for it the committee proposed the provisions, substantially, of Senate bill 2264, with some additional amendments, which have since been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator is he sure that he is accurate when he says that the bill he asks to have recommitted has never been the unfinished business? The Senator on yesterday asked that the unfinished business should be laid aside until Monday next. Was that not this bill?

Mr. FORAKER. No, sir. The bill which was laid aside yesterday was House bill 8245. That has been the unfinished business; but the committee amendment which was proposed as a substitute for House bill 8245 was substantially Senate bill 2264, which is on the Calendar, but has never been under consideration by the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, I will ask the Senator, so that we may have a perfect understanding about this matter, when the arrangement was made that the Quay resolution should be taken up one week from Tuesday next, it was specified that certain measures should have the right of way notwithstanding; and did I not understand correctly when I got the impression that the bill providing a civil government for the island of Puerto Rico was one of those measures?

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is mistaken only to this extent: House bill 8245, as the committee propose to amend it, embodies not only a revenue provision, but also a provision for a civil government in Puerto Rico. That will remain the unfinished business. What I ask now does not interfere with that at all. There are two bills here; one, House bill 8245, as it came from the House, amended by striking out all of the House provisions and substituting what I say is substantially Senate bill 2264. That is under consideration as the unfinished business, but Senate bill 2264 is only on the Calendar; it has never been under consideration, and I ask, without disturbing the unfinished business, that Senate bill 2264 may be recommitted to the committee, so that we may have it under consideration. It is probable that I shall at an early day ask, as I did the other day, the consent of the Senate to separate the House bill from the amendment proposed by the committee and take a vote on the House bill. I am not prepared to ask that now, and that question is not now before the Senate.

The reason I ask now that Senate bill 2264 may be recommitted is that we may have it in the committee preparatory to such action as we may see fit to take when the House bill has been disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. The unanimous-consent agreement which appears on the Calendar, and which I take it is correct, provides:

That on Tuesday, April 3, after the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 107, declaring "that the Hon. Matthew S. Quay is not entitled to take his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania," and continue its consideration from day to day until the final disposition of the same, subject to the consideration of appropriation bills, conference reports, the present unfinished business, and S. 2655, "In relation to the suppression of insurrection in, and to the government of, the Philippine Islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th day of September, 1898."

Mr. FORAKER. The present unfinished business is House bill 8245, and that remains the unfinished business. I do not interfere with that. I am simply asking that the Senate bill may be recommitted in order that we may have it in the committee where we can promptly act upon it, in the event of the House bill being brought to a vote and being disposed of, in accordance with such disposition. If the House bill is disposed of separately, it will be necessary to amend and recast the civil government bill, which now provides for revenue to be derived by tariff duties, as well as in other respects.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to know exactly what is going on, if I can ascertain it.

Mr. FORAKER. I will take great pleasure in telling the Senator as fully as he may wish to know, for there is nothing secret about it whatever.

Mr. MORGAN. The state of the record is what I am referring to, not to anything the Senator has in mind at all. I understand that the Senate bill which provides a government for Puerto Rico was reported back from the committee to the Senate, and that that bill has been substituted for the House bill by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator is mistaken in that statement. I can correct the Senator in a moment if he will allow me to interrupt him.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Senate bill 2264 was introduced and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico. In the committee certain amendments were proposed, and the bill was reported back with those amendments, and went upon the Calendar. Subsequently House bill 8245 came to the Senate, and when that came to the Senate it was referred to the same committee. That committee did not substitute Senate bill 2264 or bring the question of substitution before the Senate in any other way than to prepare an amendment which they offered as a substitute for House bill 8245, which is quite similar to and in some respects exactly the same as Senate bill 2264, but very different in many particulars. We did not disturb at all the parliamentary status of Senate bill 2264. It has ever since it was reported by the committee remained upon the Calendar, while House bill 8245, with a substitute proposed as an amendment, has been under consideration.

Now, all I ask is that that bill, which is on the Calendar, Senate bill 2264, may be recommitted to the committee, where it will have to go if there should be a separation from the House bill of the substitute offered by the committee, which has been under consideration for such changes as the passage of the House bill, in whatever form it may pass, shall make necessary. We do not want the same revenue provisions in both bills.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that Senate bill 2264 has not been under consideration by the Senate either as an independent measure or as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. FORAKER. No; in no way at all.

Mr. MORGAN. It has not been before the Senate at all; and that the recommittal of that bill to the committee will not in any way affect the House bill.

Mr. FORAKER. In no way whatever.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well; then the House bill is the regular order?

Mr. FORAKER. House bill 8245 remains the regular order.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I have no objection to the Senator's request.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I was unfortunately out of the Chamber when this colloquy began. I do not know really what may have been said by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] as to the purpose to bring the House bill to an early vote. I understood the suggestion made by the Senator a few days ago was that there might be unanimous consent by which the House bill could be separated from the amendments which had been proposed, and submitted to the Senate for early action. Speaking for myself, Mr. President, I very much favor that, and the purpose I have in now rising, before the matter at present pending in the Senate is finally disposed of, is to ask whether or not the learned Senator from Ohio can give any intimation as to the time within which he will be prepared to repeat the request which he made to the Senate a few days ago?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator replies, if he will pardon me a moment further, I desire to say that everyone must recognize that this is a matter of the greatest emergency. In evidence of that fact, I desire to have read from the desk a telegram which appeared in the newspapers of this morning from Ponce, in Puerto Rico, in which in a few sentences there is portrayed the very great distress in that island, growing out of the fact that business of all kinds is absolutely paralyzed there. Not simply the business of the merchant, not simply the business of the employer, but necessarily, in the paralysis of the business of the employer, there results the paralysis of the business of the employee.

Mr. President, it will not do to say that we have made provision by which this distress can be relieved, and that therefore we can take our time in determining what shall be the law with reference to the commercial relations between Puerto Rico and the balance of the United States, because, if the statements in this press dispatch are true—and we have no reason to doubt them—the amount of money which the Senate yesterday agreed to appropriate, in agreeing to the conference report, and thereby to that extent giving its assent to the appropriation of the amount of money which we appropriated, would not last three days if it is to be devoted to the relief of all of the people in the island. There are a million people in that island. If the statements of this dispatch are true, even people of wealth are absolutely penniless, not only not able to get the money to carry on their ordinary vocations, but to pay their daily expenses; and there are people there of means who are absolutely ready to work for their board if they can get it.

I say this not for the purpose of any extended discussion, but, sympathizing with the desire of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, as chairman of the committee charged with the responsibility of this legislation, to the extent of bringing about action by the Senate, I wish to express the entire sympathy I have with the desire expressed by the Senator a few days ago, and to ask him, after this dispatch shall have been read, if it is not practicable that he should renew that suggestion, that within not simply the near future, but the very near future we may not take action which shall to some extent restore confidence to business conditions in that island and which will enable the people to be at least protected from absolute suffering? I ask, before the Senator answers my question, that the paper which I have sent to the Secretary's desk may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PONCE, PUERTO RICO, March 23, 1900.

The situation here is now more serious than it had been at any time before since the terrible hurricane. In many places the poor are starving. The price of rice, beans, and codfish has increased from 50 to 100 per cent.

Demonstrations against the delay of the United States Government in settling open questions have recently been held at Mayaguez, Yauco, Arecibo, Aguadilla, Fajardo, Juan Diaz, Guayama, and many other towns. The people are unable to understand the delay, and they condemn all Americans indiscriminately.

Bad feeling is arising which it will take years to overcome. Even riots are threatened. Trouble is almost inevitable unless the tension is relieved. Even wealthy land owners can not command ready cash, and many Americans are penniless, being glad to work for their board.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I read in the morning papers the dispatch from Puerto Rico which the Senator from Georgia has just had read at the Secretary's desk, and I presume probably every Senator here has read it. It did not, however, convey to me any information. I was already familiar with the conditions existing in Puerto Rico as described in that telegram.

Mr. BACON. Possibly some other Senators may not have been so familiar with the conditions.

Mr. FORAKER. I referred to this when I was discussing the bill on the floor of the Chamber a few days ago. There is not anything in that dispatch in addition to what General Davis and other witnesses testified about when they were before our committee, except now, by reason of delay, those conditions have been possibly somewhat accentuated.

Mr. BACON. Of course.

Mr. FORAKER. General Davis told our committee that there were municipalities in Puerto Rico in which not one dollar could be raised for any kind of public purpose. It was because of that condition, which Senators are just now coming to appreciate, that the committee, in seeking to provide revenue necessary for the conduct of that government, thought proper to make the provision which they did make, seeking thereby to exempt those people from the burden of direct taxation, which it would have been impossible for that people to have borne. It is because I have been aware of that condition that I have been anxious to relieve it in so far as we could relieve it, and that I have been, in season and out of season, until I have felt at times that I was almost impolite about it, pressing this bill in order that we might reach a vote in the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that an indirect tax is an easier way of relieving those people than a direct tax?

Mr. FORAKER. I think it is far easier, especially when, ordinarily, it would go to somebody else than those who are paying it.

Mr. ALLEN. It costs quite as much money, does it not?

Mr. FORAKER. No, Mr. President, for these taxes they would have to pay anyhow. Senators lose sight of this fact. They are insisting that the tariff laws and all the other laws of the United States shall be applied in Puerto Rico and elsewhere. If so applied in Puerto Rico and elsewhere, the taxes so raised would be just as heavy, and they would come to Washington instead of going into the insular treasury for the relief of that people. We give that people not only all the tariff duties on goods imported from foreign countries, but we give them all the internal-revenue taxes which they would be required to pay, all of which would otherwise come here to Washington for the benefit of the whole country. We do not make them pay one iota until we come to the 15 per cent that they would not have to pay, if the contention of the other side were to be sustained——

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator——

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator will wait a moment, and I will let him ask me anything he wishes.

If the contention on the other side should be sustained, those people would have to pay full tariff duties. Nobody on the other side in opposition to this proposition contends otherwise. If the contention of those who claim that Puerto Rico is a part of the United States, as New Mexico and Arizona are parts of the United States, should be sustained, those people would have to pay full tariff duties just as they would have to be paid under this bill.

Mr. BACON. On what?

Mr. FORAKER. On everything imported from foreign countries.

Mr. BACON. Not from the United States?

Mr. FORAKER. No, sir. I am speaking now of importations from foreign countries. Not one cent of burden is added to them, I say in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], on account of the tariff duties paid on goods from foreign countries. But this indulgence to them is provided for by this bill, that when they pay those duties they pay only to themselves. Instead of bringing the money here to Washington we turn it over to them. And as to the internal-revenue taxes, they would have to pay the same as anybody else if your contention should be maintained; and it would come here instead of remaining with them. So that they pay no taxes whatever under this bill except only the 15 per cent, which is a very light tax, not at all burdensome, and which is imposed in their own interests, to relieve them from the deficiency that would have to be levied and raised by direct taxation on their property if we did not provide in this way.

The conditions to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has called attention, the conditions to which General Davis called attention, and the conditions that I commented upon here, as shown by that testimony, are such that that $3,000,000 needed for revenue could not by any possibility be raised by direct taxation on the property in Puerto Rico, and it was for that reason that this provision has been made.

But I do not want to consume time in discussing the merits of this proposition. I have made these statements only in answer to questions which have been put. I wish, however, to follow them with this statement——

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator passes from that point, when he speaks of revenue taxes on Puerto Rico of only 15 per cent of the Dingley law, if he will pardon me a moment, he of course means that there is that much in addition to the regular tax under the Dingley law or the regular tariff duties of the Dingley law on all goods from foreign countries. What I mean is that they are to pay the same tariff that any other part of the United States has to pay on imports from foreign countries, and, in addition to that, there would be——

Mr. FORAKER. The one has no relation to the other. What goes into Puerto Rico from the United States does not go in there from a foreign country, but on all that is sent into Puerto Rico from here they would pay simply 15 per cent of the Dingley rates. They would not have to pay anything in addition.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. FORAKER. It is only that which goes into Puerto Rico from foreign countries that pays this rate.

Mr. BACON. In addition to the Dingley rates?

Mr. FORAKER. They have to pay in any event everything they are required to pay by this bill, except that 15 per cent; and as an offset to that we give them that 15 per cent, and we give them the tariff duties on foreign imports and the internal-revenue taxes besides.

Mr. ALLEN. We make them pay under the war rates of the Dingley law.

Mr. FORAKER. I am speaking about the general law, whatever it may be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FORAKER. I want to conclude, Mr. President.

It is because of this condition of things, because of this great urgency, that I thought I would this morning take a step toward a separation of these bills, by asking that Senate bill 2264 might be recommitted in order to give the committee an opportunity to act in anticipation of what may be done as to the revenue part of this legislation. If I can get them separated, I can perfect the civil government bill and bring it back here without any delay, and, if possible, put it on its passage. I shall wait a reasonable time. I said to the Senator from Nebraska that I would wait some three or four days, or a week, possibly, until House bill 8245 can be disposed of; but if there shall be any unreasonable delay about it, I shall want the privilege of passing the civil government bill anyhow, because those people have got to proceed to raise revenue in some way.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the title of the bill which the Senator moves to recommit?

Mr. FORAKER. Senate bill 2264, to provide a government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes. It is a bill that not only provides a civil government, but it provides for some other matters that are of the greatest importance; for instance, the exchange of the Puerto Rican coins for United States coins. There can not be business transactions in Puerto Rico now without an exchange of coin, and that is burdensome.

Mr. DAVIS. I inquire if this is the same bill which was reported from the committee?

Mr. FORAKER. It is the first bill reported from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Puerto Rico.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the learned Senator from Ohio, while of course I am very much gratified to get the information which he has given the Senate, I have not had from him an answer to the inquiry which is in my mind. I may have been unhappy in its expression, or I may not have made it clear to the Senator.

As I understand, there is a reason why the Senate bill should be recommitted, in order that it may be recast in some features; but if there is this contemplated separation of House bill 8245 from the Senate bill which has been tentatively grafted upon it as a substitute; if there is, then, a separation, I do not understand that there is any desire that the House bill should be recommitted for any action on the part of the committee, and it is in recognition of that fact that the House bill is here, that no further action of the committee is desired thereon, that the suggestion was made by the Senator from Ohio a few days ago that we should vote upon that separately.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Recognizing the difficulty which confronts the Senator, and of which we are all aware, I simply desire to know, in view of the great emergency, whether or not the Senator can indicate to the Senate a very early date at which he will renew the propositions which he made two days ago?

Mr. FORAKER. I can say to the Senator, in answer to his question, as I have already intimated, that I thought perhaps on Monday, certainly not later than Tuesday, to get these two bills separated, if I find it necessary, so that the civil government bill and the House bill may be brought to a vote separately. I will say that I desire to do that at the very earliest day possible to which Senators will agree.

Mr. BACON. The question to which I want to direct the attention of the Senator is this: Whether or not it is the purpose to make the House bill await the return of the civil government bill from the committee?

Mr. FORAKER. Not at all.

Mr. BACON. Or whether it is the purpose of the Senator in charge of the bill to ask for the early action of the Senate independently of the time when the committee may act upon the civil government bill?

Mr. FORAKER. I mean, if Senate bill 2264 shall be recommitted, to let it remain in the committee until the House bill is disposed of; and I expect to ask the Senate to allow me to separate the House bill from the substitute which has been offered, and to take a vote on the House bill some time during next week—Wednesday, if Senators will agree; but I hope not later than Thursday in any event.

Mr. BACON. That is the information I desired to get, and I am much obliged to the Senator for it.

Mr. HALE. Let me call to the attention of the Senator that I think he is not dependent upon the leave of the Senate as to separating the propositions. He may withdraw any amendment he has proposed to the House bill, and at any time may bring up the House bill alone before the Senate or with any other amendment that he chooses to present to the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. This amendment has been amended time and again.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; the amendment has been amended, and I think, under Rule XXI, I would not have a right to withdraw the amendment. I would have to have the consent of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I do not think the Senator needs unanimous consent to do that.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not need unanimous consent, if a motion to that effect would prevail. It could be done in that manner. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] who objected to an early vote is not in his seat, and I have not been able to see him.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to say only a word respecting this matter, because the question was up before the Senate day before yesterday. I merely wish at this time to emphasize the fact that the Senator from Ohio has discovered that a 15 per cent indirect tax is lighter than a 15 per cent direct tax, and that the suffering Puerto Ricans will be relieved of their distress sooner by the passage of the House bill taxing them 15 per cent than by giving them an autonomous government; and if he believes that, I do not think I desire to object.

Mr. FORAKER. I perhaps did not make as full an answer to the Senator from Nebraska on that point as I should have made if I had not been interrupted. Of course the amount would be the same, and it would be the same cost to those who would have to pay it, for one amount as for the other. But what I want to say in answer to the Senator from Nebraska is that under all the circumstances a 15 per cent tariff duty would be a great deal lighter and more easily raised than a direct tax of an equal amount on property, because the property itself having to bear it equally, one piece alike with another, there would be many pieces on which they could not pay it at all.

There is no robbery of anybody. The people who do business, who have money transactions, and have goods to sell, and have money with which to buy, can bear a light tax of that kind in a case of emergency better than the poor plantation or property owners, who have no money and who are dying of hunger or taking three meals a day from the Government as a matter of charity.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator really believe that the imposition of a tax upon the Puerto Ricans will relieve their distress sooner than the passage of a bill giving them an autonomous government?

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know of any proposition of that kind. I should want to see it before I answered.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the bill is recommitted, I desire to offer an amendment to it to go to the committee, which I ask may be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama, without objection, offers an amendment to Senate bill 2264.

Mr. MORGAN. If that is the right number.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the bill which the Senator from Ohio asks to have recommitted. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as an additional section:

Any citizen of the United States who shall deposit for coinage at any mint of the United States silver bullion of the value of not less than $100, estimated at the rate of 371¼ grains of pure silver per dollar, and at the same time and as a part of the same deposit shall also deposit gold bullion for coinage of equal or greater value, estimated at the rate of 23.22 grains of pure gold per dollar, shall be entitled to have such gold and silver bullion coined in such lawful denominations of gold and silver coins of the United States as he shall designate, and after such deposit none of said bullion shall be withdrawn as bullion from such mint, but such gold and silver bullion shall be coined and the coin shall be delivered to the depositor, his or her assigns, or legal representatives, in discharge of the certificate of deposit issued for such deposit.

The superintendent of such mint shall issue to such depositors certificates of deposit, in accordance with this act, and shall refine and coin such bullion of gold and silver for and on account of such depositors in the same manner as if the same was owned by and was coined on account of the Government of the United States, and the charges for refining and coining such bullion shall be the same as are lawfully made in such cases.

No gold or silver bullion shall be deposited for coinage under this act that has been coined or manufactured as an article of commerce or that is not the product of mines in the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama desires to have the amendment printed and go to the committee if the bill be recommitted. It will be so ordered. Is there objection to the recommittal of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the bill is recommitted, I simply desire to say to the Senator from Ohio that I have three correspondents in Puerto Rico, one of them being a citizen of my own city, a practicing attorney, and my information is that the people of Puerto Rico are extremely anxious for the establishment of a civil government. They are chafing under the present form of government; and the gentlemen with whom I correspond say that this little matter of a 15 or 25 per cent tariff duty is of much less concern to them than a stable government; and I trust the Senator will report back the bill at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FORAKER. There will be a meeting of the committee called for 10 o'clock Monday morning, and the report will be made just as soon thereafter as the committee can agree. I am trying so to shape the bill as to have it ready for consideration by the committee. There will be no delay on my part.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BACON. Please repeat it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is simply a request to recommit the Senate bill.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The bill is recommitted, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will accompany the bill.

NATHAN S. JARVIS.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask leave for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3270) for the relief of Nathan S. Jarvis.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Nathan S. Jarvis, late captain and assistant surgeon, United States Army, a captain and assistant surgeon, and to place him on the retired list of the Army with that rank and pay.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY POST NEAR DES MOINES, IOWA.

Mr. GEAR. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 99) to establish a military post at or near Des Moines, Iowa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISBURSING OFFICERS, SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask present consideration for the bill (S. 2870) concerning disbursing officers of the Subsistence Department of the Army.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes officers intrusted with the disbursement of funds for the subsistence of the Army to keep, at their own risk, in their personal possession for disbursement, such restricted amounts of subsistence funds for facilitating payments of small amounts to public creditors as shall from time to time be authorized by the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 156) granting a pension to Lena E. Patterson;

A bill (H. R. 856) granting a pension to Mary McCarthy;

A bill (H. R. 857) granting an increase of pension to James Chapman;

A bill (H. R. 1768) granting an increase of pension to George J. Stealy;

A bill (H. R. 3085) granting an increase of pension to William Sheppard;

A bill (H. R. 4335) granting a pension to William H. Edmonds;

A bill (H. R. 4795) granting an increase of pension to John O'Conor;

A bill (H. R. 4886) granting an increase of pension to Wilbur F. Loveland;

A bill (H. R. 6356) granting an increase of pension to Lewis R. Armstrong;

A bill (H. R. 7323) granting an increase of pension to Harrison Canfield;

A bill (H. R. 7445) granting a pension to Emma B. Reed;

A bill (H. R. 7594) granting a pension to Amelia Taylor; and

A bill (H. R. 8397) granting an increase of pension to John White.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 8128) to establish light and fog signal at Browns Point in Puget Sound; and

A bill (H. R. 9824) authorizing the Secretary of War to make regulations governing the running of loose logs, steamboats, and rafts on certain rivers and streams.

LIGHT-SHIP NEAR CAPE ELIZABETH, MAINE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 9497) to amend an act providing for the construction of a light-ship to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Maine; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be put upon its passage.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 4, 1899, entitled "An act providing for the construction of a light-ship to be located near Cape Elizabeth, Maine," is hereby amended so that the limit of the cost for the said light-ship and fog signal shall be increased from $70,000 to $90,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to proceed with the construction of the said light-ship and fog signal, as directed by the original act as modified by this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the effect of the bill?

Mr. HALE. It was found on getting bids that the amount which we gave last year was not enough by $20,000, and this supplies that and enables the light-ship to be built.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT PEMBINA MILITARY RESERVATION, N. DAK.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 157) providing for the selection of the lands within Fort Pembina Military Reservation, N. Dak., by the State of North Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? It has heretofore been read twice.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read again in full.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to know from the Senator in charge of the bill whether this is an existing reservation from which the lands are to be selected?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is not; it is an abandoned military reservation. It has been abandoned quite a number of years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. An amendment was proposed to this bill when it was up some weeks ago by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. We had some discussion over the subject at the time. I suggested to the Senator that he submit his amendment to the Committee on Public Lands, which he did in the form of a general bill. The Committee on Public Lands sent the amendment in that form to the Secretary of the Interior, and we have a report from the Secretary against the proposed amendment. I ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah may be disagreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill if the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] did not have some connection with this bill and did not take interest in it in some way when it was spoken of before in the Senate?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I just explained that. The Senator from Utah offered an amendment to this bill providing that several States might select lands on any reservation. It was general legislation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think the matter ought not to be taken up in the absence of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Interior Department has reported against the proposition of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That does not prevent the Senator from Utah from insisting on his amendment, and I think he has a right to be heard by the Senate. He is not here, and it is a courtesy due him that he should be present when the matter is taken up.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. He has been heard twice on this subject, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas object?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I object.

DAVID BAGLEY.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 72) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint David Bagley as an additional cadet at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the close of the routine morning business on Monday the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3419, known as the Alaska bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Montana will not ask unanimous consent now to bind the Senate on Monday. I suggest that he give notice that he will call it up. The Senate is not in condition to make unanimous-consent agreements.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri objects.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. CARTER). Give notice that you will call it up. There will be no objection, so far as I know.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I should like at an early date to have some understanding with reference to the consideration of this bill. From day to day one Senator after another has suggested that the matter go over; that there is plenty of time to consider it; but the fact is that the bill, to be of value the coming season, must be passed in the near future. There are no objections to the bill as a piece of legislation, so far as I am advised. Senators have offered amendments going to the details of the bill, but there has been no general opposition to it.

I realize, Mr. President, that shortly after the close of this month or probably at the opening of next week, with the election cases to be disposed of, appropriation bills to be considered, the Puerto Rican measure to be debated, the Senate is quite likely to find its business so congested that the Alaskan bill will be put off from time to time to a point so near the close of the session that it will fail to pass at this session of Congress. Such failure would be a public calamity, involving not a few thousand, but a great many thousands, of people of the district of Alaska and very great interests being developed in that country. I feel justified—indeed, called upon—to state to the Senate the importance of the early consideration of the bill which the committee has had under consideration not only during the present session of Congress, but also at great length at the last session of Congress.

I trust that the Senator from Missouri, in view of the serious importance of the measure, will not object at this time to a unanimous-consent agreement that the bill be taken up on Monday after the close of the routine business, and I will supplement that request by asking that the unfinished business be laid aside on Monday to the end that we may complete the consideration of this bill. I think its consideration can be completed during Monday. The engrossing of the bill, its consideration elsewhere, and a conference which will doubtless result, will involve about all the time the Senate will have to devote to the bill, if we utilize every particle of time available.

The importance of the Puerto Rican matter no one pretends to minimize, but I submit that we should give consideration to the needs of our own citizens, concerning whose constitutional status and relations to the Government no question exists, through whose enterprise a mighty empire is being made to yield treasure to the current of commerce each and every year, a district which, in my opinion, will within the next twenty-four months outstrip the most extravagant stories of gold production the world has ever known. The Transvaal, Australian, Californian, and all the gold-producing fields known to the history of mankind pale into insignificance in comparison with the volume of the precious metals destined to flow from the Alaskan mines if half that is said of it by eyewitnesses proves to be realized in fact.

We will have in the district of Alaska during this coming season, if the transportation companies may be relied upon as giving a fair forecast of the passenger traffic to the Cape Nome country, not less than 100,000 miners actually engaged in work along a coast not exceeding 30 miles in extent. This does not take into consideration the number engaged upon the Yukon River, the vast enterprises that are being prosecuted in southeastern Alaska, and in the Prince William Sound country. Mr. President, the Senate can afford to devote night sessions to the consideration of a bill which provides a system of law to regulate and govern the people and conditions to which I refer.

The history of Alaska, so far as Congressional attention is concerned, is a pathetic one. Up to the last session of Congress a legal jury had never been impaneled in the district of Alaska. Men had been condemned to death and had been executed without regard to forms of law and without right of appeal. We established a court, hastily thrown together, receiving little consideration in either House of Congress, and from that court no appeal could be taken to any other court anywhere. We provided that a jury should be impaneled as provided by the laws of Oregon; yet the laws of Oregon prescribed qualifications for jurors which no man in Alaska could answer or qualify under.

Yet, Mr. President, the district of Alaska has yielded to the Treasury of the United States and to the people of this country a million dollars for every thousand invested in the purchase and is destined in the future to be the great, strong, unfailing source of gold supply for this country. I am very anxious to see the people of Puerto Rico and the Philippines taken care of and will devote as much time and attention to that work as the Senate may require, but the people in Alaska come home to us. They are of our own flesh and blood. They go forth from each and every State in the Union and from all the Territories and must protect themselves by the strong arm of mob law as best they can.

I make this statement to the end that the responsibility for this legislation may pass from my shoulders to the Senate. I have no more interest in the passage of this bill than any other Senator; but my interest and the interest of the Senate are profound. Indeed, it is the bounden duty of this body to pass this measure, and pass it without delay. If there existed any substantial reason why delay should occur I would stand mute and wait, but I renew my request for unanimous consent that upon Monday, at the close of the routine morning business, we proceed to the consideration of the Alaska bill, and that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside during that day for the purpose of considering the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It gives me very great pleasure to renew my objection, and to state that the Senator knows a reason for it. He has no right, with the Senate in the condition it is in now—a condition which I can not name—to ask unanimous consent that will bind, when he knows that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] is not here and many other Senators are absent. I suggested to the Senator what seemed to me the course to be pursued to secure the passage of the bill, and that was for the Senator to give notice that immediately after the routine morning business on Monday he would move to consider the bill, then be in his seat at that moment and move to consider the bill, and the Senate would take it up and dispose of it.

I am sure that every Senator here, and those who will be here on Monday, if the Senator gives the notice, will facilitate the disposition of the bill at the earliest possible time, and share with the distinguished Senator from Montana some of the responsibility for the passage of the bill. It is not fair nor right that the Senator should insist upon a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CARTER. I regret that the Senator takes great pleasure in objecting to the requested unanimous consent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, I do.

Mr. CARTER. I am sorry that he finds pleasure in sensations of that sort.

Now, Mr. President, for some reason or other, the opposition to the consideration of this bill has been interposed without any special reason at any time, as far as I have been able to hear or ascertain from anybody's explanation. Opposition to the formal reading of the bill occurred; something unheard of in this body in its history occurred with reference to this bill. We were compelled to sit here and go through the farce of reading each and every word in the bill from one end to the other, when the Revised Statutes of the United States were read pro forma in about thirty minutes. Why this has been required I know not.

The Senator from Missouri objects at the present time, I believe, because of the absence of the Senator from Tennessee. The request is not made because of the absence of the Senator from Tennessee. I have sent pages about the building to endeavor to find the Senator from Tennessee, who has been steadily objecting to the consideration of this bill. I do not wish the Senator from Tennessee to accomplish by his absence what I hope he will not be able to accomplish in the future by his presence. I think that Senator contemplates, as does the Senator from Missouri, giving attention to this bill at some time; but permit me to say that the way to dispose of the bill is not to continuously object to its consideration.

I shall renew the request on Monday, and hope that unanimous consent will then be granted, as indicated by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will give me a great deal of pleasure to join with the Senator and to stay by him, side by side, until he has had the bill passed—at a night session, if it is necessary.

Mr. CARTER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was not because of the absence of the Senator from Tennessee alone that I objected, but I had told the Senator that I objected to it and would object, and he made the second appeal. Therefore I expressed the pleasure I had in affirming what I had told him I would do and proving truthful to what I had said.

Now, I hope the Senator will move on Monday morning to take the bill up as a matter of business, in a business way, and we will sustain him and help him pass the bill.

But there was another reason why I could not give my consent. That reason I could not name, but that reason any Senator can see if he will just look around this Chamber and count the number of Senators present, and what might occur, if certain things might be said, to delay the regular business of the day.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I wish to say in this connection that, while the practice of asking unanimous consent in the Senate is a valuable right and one that is good and facilitates the public business on occasions, I believe it is getting to be a little too common to undertake to have times fixed for the votes and for the consideration of questions, especially when there is not a full Senate. It is not uncommon to have Senators come into the Chamber and complain that they were not present when a unanimous-consent agreement was made to consider a particular measure and that they did not want to have it done.

I believe that this right ought to be exercised sparingly and only upon occasions of importance and emergency, and I do not believe it ought to be indulged in so constantly. I believe it is a practice that ought to be broken up in the Senate except on extraordinary occasions. I think this is a good illustration of the unreasonableness of having this sort of thing done on all occasions.

STATUE OF OLIVER P. MORTON.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I ask that the communication from the governor of Indiana may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). If there is no objection, the communication will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, STATE OF INDIANA,
Indianapolis, Ind., December 14, 1899.

To the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: In pursuance of a provision of the Federal Statutes, section 1814, Revised Statutes of the United States, the general assembly of the State of Indiana enacted a law which was approved on the 27th of February, 1897, authorizing the governor of the State to appoint a commission to procure a statue of Oliver P. Morton, late governor of Indiana, to be placed in the National Statuary Hall at Washington, D. C.

In obedience to this statute the governor appointed Hon. Charles E. Shiveley, Hon. Oliver T. Morton, and Hon. Addison C. Harris to constitute such commission.

Upon the death of Hon. Oliver T. Morton and the appointment of Hon. Addison C. Harris as minister to Austria-Hungary, Judge Elijah B. Martindale and Hon. Henry C. Pettit were appointed to succeed them on said commission.

This commission having filed in my office its report showing that the members thereof have discharged their duties, I therefore, in behalf of the State of Indiana, and through the delegation in the National Congress from this State, convey to the care and custody of the United States Government this modest tribute of the everlasting esteem of this great State for the inestimable services rendered, not only to the State but to the National Government as well, by Indiana's great war governor, peerless statesman, and matchless Senator.

Respectfully,

JAMES A. MOUNT,
Governor of Indiana.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I offer the concurrent resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolutions will be read.

The concurrent resolutions were read by the Secretary, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of Oliver P. Morton, presented by the State of Indiana, to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of the most eminent citizens and illustrious statesmen of the Republic.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Indiana.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States pauses in the consideration of the important routine business of the country to accept a tribute from the State of Indiana—a statue of Oliver Perry Morton.

That statue is to stand in yonder venerable Hall of Representatives, now tenanted by the mute images of the chiefest jewels of the Republic. Assembled there are the marble figures of eminent and renowned citizens, soldiers, and statesmen, whose luminous deeds are a part of the familiar history of the country. In good time representatives of each of the sisterhood of States of the Union will be gathered there, and the number will equal the membership roll of the United States Senate. Parties may come and go, Administrations may rise and fall, but no change will occur in the members who join the select assemby in that exalted and historic Hall.

The State of Indiana has an ample roll of distinguished statesmen who have served her well; of soldiers who won imperishable renown upon the battlefields of their country; of those who have attained high place in the world of letters and have achieved eminence in other avenues of honorable distinction, but, without invidious discrimination, she makes her present, and first, contribution to Statuary Hall.

Oliver Perry Morton was one of the commanding figures of the United States during the most heroic period of her history. He impressed himself upon his State and nation by the force of his commanding genius, and the history of neither State nor nation would be complete without the story of his life and work.

He was born in the village of Salisbury, Wayne County, Ind., on the 4th day of August, 1823. His parents were natives of New Jersey, and of English ancestry. His father, James S. Throck Morton, was a man of worth and of more than ordinary force of character and intelligence. His admiration of military heroism led him to name his son Oliver Perry Hazard Throck Morton. Throckmorton is the original family name, to which a number of the descendants still adhere. When prepared to enter upon the practice of the law, the son was persuaded that so many baptismal names might impede his progress at the bar, so he subscribed himself and was thenceforth known as Oliver P. Morton.

His mother died shortly after his birth, and he was committed to the care of relatives, who bequeathed to him their small patrimony, which was of great assistance to him in obtaining an education.

His training was tempered with indulgence, but he repaid care with affectionate devotion. He was a precocious youth, and was inspired to personal ambition by his exceptionally fortunate surroundings.

The people of Wayne County, among whom Morton was born and reared, were and always have been characterized by a high order of intelligence. They have been a Christian people, exalting law and order and holding religion and knowledge as the chief instruments in the advancement of civilization. They have been intensely patriotic and liberty loving. The institution of human slavery was repugnant to them, and they were strongly antislavery prior to the civil war. The underground railroad had many stations in that portion of the State, where countless colored refugees found succor and asylum in their search for liberty.

The story of Morton's youth is familiar to those who have lived midst pioneer surroundings. It was the story of many of those who have achieved place and power in the history of the Republic. He did not have the disadvantage of rich birth and exalted parentage, which too often stunt ambition, but was born on a level with the great mass of his countrymen, and was inspired by their hopes and aspirations and impressed by their struggles and self-denials. The loftiest character is a flower which blooms among the stern realities of life.

He had an early passion for knowledge and bent all his energies to attain an education. The facilities offered the youth were meager at best, but he availed himself of them to the utmost. He early determined to become a lawyer and devoted his energies to that end. Upon his entrance to the bar he dedicated himself to the work of his chosen profession with diligence and determination.

He impressed himself upon the bar and the bench as a forceful lawyer and of more than ordinary promise. He was conscious from the beginning of the inadequacy of his preparation for a profession most exacting in its requirements. He was early called to the bench, and feeling the insufficiency of his equipment entered a law school, and after a term spent there assumed his judicial duties. He was too conscientious to sit in judgment in the causes of his neighbors without the amplest preparation. He was not deterred by any foolish sense of false pride from going back to acquire knowledge of which he felt himself deficient. In this instance was manifested his leading characteristic—loyal, conscientious preparation for the proper discharge of every trust.

After a brief period of service upon the bench he returned to the bar, which offered a wider and more congenial field for the display of his genius. His greatest powers were enlisted in the arena of combat.

Morton was born and reared a Democrat, but ceased to affiliate with the Democratic party after the adoption of the Kansas-Nebraska compromise. He became one of the founders of the Republican party, and was elected lieutenant-governor on the Republican ticket in 1860 with Henry S. Lane, and upon the elevation of the latter to the United States Senate, in January following, succeeded to the chief executive's chair. No governor ever assumed the reins of government under more embarrassing or discouraging circumstances.

The storm which was fast gathering over the country was soon to break with terrific fury. Threats of "secession" and "compromise" filled the air. The governor's position was at no time in doubt. He had expressed his views a few weeks prior to his inauguration in a speech of remarkable power. "If South Carolina gets out of the Union," said he, "I trust it will be at the point of the bayonet after our best efforts have failed to compel her submission to the laws. Better concede her independence to force, to revolution, than to right and principle. * * * Seven years is but a day in the life of a nation, and I would rather come out of a struggle at the end of that time defeated in arms and conceding independence to successful revolution than purchase present peace by the concession of a principle that must inevitably explode this nation into small and dishonored fragments."

To realize the full significance of this trenchant and brave utterance we must return to the time and circumstance in which it was uttered. These were the words of courageous statesmanship, uttered at the threshold of a mighty crisis, and were a trumpet call to heroic duty.

When Morton became governor the State was in financial straits; its credit was sorely impaired and a low sense of civic duty pervaded many of the departments of the State government. There was no militia worth the mentioning, and there was no serviceable equipment with which to supply volunteers, which were to be so soon and so greatly needed.

The fall of Sumter and the President's call for 75,000 troops stirred the patriotic ardor of the State. Before he was advised of the call, the governor tendered the President, on behalf of Indiana, 10,000 men "for the defense of the nation, and to uphold the authority of the Government." Within a week he had in the camp more than twice Indiana's quota of men. Within twelve days after the fall of Sumter he had convened the legislature in extra session, and $2,000,000 was appropriated for the organization and equipment of the militia necessary for the protection of the State.

We have passed—

Said he in his message to the legislature—

from the field of argument to the solemn fact of war. * * * It is the imperative duty of all men to rally to the support of the Government, and to extend in its behalf, if need be, their fortunes and their ability. * * * The struggle is one into which we enter with the deepest reluctance. We are bound to the people of the seceding States by the dearest ties of blood and institutions; they are our brothers and fellow-countrymen; but while we deplore the character of the contest in which we are engaged, nevertheless we should meet it as men.

He realized, and in advance of most others, the true and tremendous significance of the incipient secession movement; that it meant a mighty struggle and that it would involve the expenditure of blood and treasure he fully appreciated; that a grave emergency was at hand, and that the future of the Republic would tremble in the balance, he clearly foresaw. He did not doubt the result of the issue, but he favored energetic and speedy preparation to meet it. When others wavered he was firm and when others doubted he was certain. Compromise was impossible, for right and wrong opposed each other; freedom and slavery were engaged for the mastery; there could be no compromise.

The task he undertook was herculean. There were many who were not in sympathy with the Union cause. Strong men, possessing a large measure of public confidence, were either openly or secretly opposed to his course and plotting against him. For a time the unseen forces which permeated the State were more subtle and dangerous than those in open arms. The governor was not caught unprepared. By ceaseless vigilance he anticipated every attack which treason about him planned. His life was frequently in serious peril, but he was providentially spared for the great work for which he was so well suited.

When the governor was without funds to support the affairs of the State, through the failure of a hostile and disloyal legislature to perform its duty, he borrowed money upon his personal responsibility and preserved the faith and credit of the State. The emergency was great, and it required a man of commanding force and ability to meet it.

The governor always loyally supported President Lincoln, and was one of his wise and trusted counselors, a forceful coadjutor. The President knew that he had in him one whose aid was potential and at his constant command.

He promptly met every demand of the President as though it had been anticipated by him. He enlisted and equipped, from first to last, more than 200,000 soldiers. They were the pick and flower of the State, and with the sword wrote a high record among heroic men.

He was, indeed, the soldiers' friend. His duty to them was not done when they had enlisted and marched to the front; it was but begun. His watchful eye was over them wherever they went, and he constantly and in every manner possible ministered to their comfort. He furnished them supplies, organized an efficient sanitary commission, and his physicians and nurses were promptly upon the field wherever Indiana soldiers were engaged. Immediately after the terrific battle of Shiloh he went to the front to make sure that all that human agency could do was done for those who had suffered in that dreadful conflict.

His solicitude for the soldiers was realized by them as they marched away from home down to the battlefields of the Republic. They appreciated it in the storm of conflict, and at its close they saw it in his generous welcome upon their return; they felt it when he sat in the nation's chief council chamber.

The soldiers of Indiana observe each recurring anniversary of the death of Morton by some suitable and impressive ceremonial. They delight to honor his memory and recount his deeds and achievements.

Obstacles did not deter him; opposition did not dissuade or discourage him; they but added strength to his arm and determination to his will. Duty! duty! thundered in his soul, and he was loyal to its supreme mandates.

Having served his State through her crucial period, he was elected by his party a United States Senator. He had accomplished all that was required of him in the old field; his abilities were needed in the new, to which the numerous and serious questions growing out of the war were transferred.

He brought to the Senate in March, 1867, a national reputation, a record of conspicuous and honorable achievements. He had attained to the foremost rank among the group of illustrious war governors whose splendid services in a great crisis are indelibly impressed upon the history of their time. He entered this exalted Chamber a tried and trusted tribune.

For ten years this was the theater of his tremendous energies. They were years filled with momentous questions. No more weighty or complex problems have ever engaged the attention of the country than those which immediately followed the close of the civil war. There were in the Senate when Morton entered as profound statesmen as the country has produced. There have been none better or more suited to the hour in the nation's history. It is a happy circumstance in the history of our Government that the man and the hour always meet. Grave questions seem to beget the men to meet them.

Although when Mr. Morton entered the Senate he was within the grasp of cruel disease which might prove fatal at any moment, he assumed the weighty burdens of his great office with serenity and with undaunted courage. He held a commission from his State; he had a duty to perform, and nothing could stay his purpose. He worked unceasingly. When others faltered he kept on, resolved to give the best he had and all he had to the State. The world little knew the battle he had with an insidious disease, the fight he had with death.

He seemed to bid it defiance. A nation which had emerged from the fiery baptism of war must be put upon the highway of enduring peace; States must be restored to full fellowship in the Union; a race must be secured in the rights of citizenship; provision was to be made for the widow and the orphan by a grateful Republic; he had no time to parley with death.

There are colleagues of Mr. Morton in the Senate who remember as though it were but yesterday how the Senator was borne into this Chamber in his chair and how he delivered his great speeches seated there. He commanded the respectful attention of the Senate and of the country when he spoke. He was an antagonist not to be lightly engaged, for he always went into battle with a well-filled quiver; he never spoke flippantly nor in idle jest, but seriously and soberly in the cause where his conscience commanded; "he could no other." He possessed convictions, and convictions possessed him.

The labors of Senator Morton in the committee room and in the Senate were prodigious. Night and day he wrought on, regardless of his physical infirmities, manifesting to the world the sublimest moral heroism. He was made of the elements of which martyrs were made and would have gone to the stake for opinion's sake.

The records of the Senate bear the amplest testimony to the extent and merit of his work. He was neither a trimmer nor a timeserver and neither avoided nor evaded issues. No matter what the issue, he met it courageously, fearlessly. During his service in the Senate he participated in all the more important debates which engaged its attention. He was an aggressive and zealous advocate of the policy of reconstruction. It was largely due to his championship that the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution were adopted.

His final service marked, perhaps, his most conspicuous service in the Senate. The disputed result of the Presidential election in 1876 menaced the security of the Republic. Wise and able statesmen of the Republican and Democratic parties advocated the creation of a tribunal which should determine the serious questions in dispute. Senator Morton sharply differed with his leading party associates as to the necessity and wisdom of an electoral commission and enforced his views with his accustomed power and vigor; but when defeated, he loyally accepted the result and took a seat upon the commission, where he served with commanding ability under circumstances which verged upon the pathetic.

Stricken with remorseless disease and rapidly approaching the end of his illustrious life, he consecrated himself completely to the cause he regarded so vital to his country. His colleague, Senator McDonald, an upright citizen and able statesman, but sharply opposed to him politically, thus spoke of his services which really crown his career:

> His labors on the Electoral Commission during the eventful period when it seemed as if the very foundations of our Government were in danger of being uprooted are vividly remembered by all. Physically disabled, yet he was everywhere present; borne to his committee room, carried to this Chamber, lifted to his seat in the Electoral Commission by the strong arms of others, there remaining into the long, dreary hours of the night, tireless among the tired, pressing on where strong men gave way, he presents a picture that may well excite our wonder and challenge our admiration, and for which history furnishes no example.

Senator Morton died in November, 1877. Then closed "a life of great occasions greatly used." His work was, perhaps, complete, though his ambition had not been fully gratified. He had aspired to the Presidency of the United States. At the convention of his party held in Cincinnati in 1876 he was one of the leading candidates for that exalted office, and his candidacy commanded everywhere the most respectful consideration. His long service to his State and to the United States and his complete equipment for the high office spoke most strongly in his behalf, but his physical disabilities were recognized by the country as a serious if not insuperable obstacle to his nomination. His State gave him aggressive and loyal support, which he considered, using his own words, "a greater honor than the Presidency itself."

Morton possessed marked executive ability. He was an organizer of unusual power. He could have filled the important post of Secretary of War quite as acceptably to the country as the great Secretary, Mr. Stanton.

He could have set an army in the field and have led it to victory. He had the faculty of inspiring those about him with confidence in the integrity of his purpose and in his capacity to win success.

He was strong in his personal attachments; intensely loyal in his friendships. He surrounded himself with men of ability, to whom he was true. He had no treachery in his heart; he exacted only that which he gave, loyalty and fidelity, and these he demanded in full measure.

He was a total stranger in the arts of the demagogue. He was too great to descend to intrigue or to desire success otherwise than through the merit and force of his cause. He was frequently the object of the envy and the intrigue of men; but all efforts to strike him down were futile, and his character was rendered the more luminous by the harmless attempts to destroy it. No dishonorable act detracts from his fame. His hands were clean, his integrity incorruptible. He was a bold but chivalrous political antagonist, for his sense of honor was acute. His political adversaries, at the time of his death, paid tribute to his stainless and exalted purpose.

He was regarded and ranked as an intense partisan, and such he was. He had an abiding faith in the virtue of his party and of its beneficence as an instrument in promoting good government. He was its steadfast supporter in good and evil report, for he felt that it was the promise and fulfillment of the highest and most enduring good to the State.

Mr. Morton was a speaker of great power, though he made no pretense of being an orator. He was of commanding and agreeable presence and possessed a voice strong and resonant. He was singularly gifted in the faculty of cogent, lucid statement. He was given little to mere ornamentation, or to graceful flights of the imagination, or to the enrichment of what he said by drawing upon literature, in the best of which he was well versed.

His speeches were typical of his own character—dignified, direct, solid, massive. They were wrought out with almost infinite care and patience, and many of his utterances will endure among the best specimens of American oratory. His celebrated speech on reconstruction was perhaps his masterpiece, and fit complement of Webster's reply to Hayne. Webster spoke with uncommon power and with burning zeal against the heresy of disunion.

Said he:

> When my eyes shall be turned to behold for the last time the sun in heaven, may I not see him shining on the broken and dishonored fragments of a once glorious Union; on States dissevered, discordant, belligerent; on a land rent with civil feuds, or drenched, it may be, in fraternal blood! * * * Liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable.

The argument and passionate appeal of Webster were unavailing. The great and vital issue on which he spoke was transferred from the forum of the Senate to the battlefields of the Republic, and there the indestructibility of the Union for which he contended with a Titan's strength was forever determined.

The scene which Webster so much dreaded came to pass. Broken and bleeding States were to be restored to the Union. The task was one of uncommon gravity. The erection of republican State governments upon the ruins of the seceded States required comprehensive statesmanship. What were to be the terms and conditions of the complete restoration of the States to the Union? They must be dictated by an exalted sense of justice and equity. Morton whipped with scorn—

> The appeal of prejudice of race against race; the endeavor to excite the strong against the weak: the effort to deprive the weak of their right of protection against the strong.

The column of reconstruction—

Said he—> has risen slowly. It has not been hewn from a single stone. It is composed of many blocks painfully laid up and put together, and cemented by the tears and blood of the nation. * * * Our principles are those of humanity, they are those of justice, they are those of equal rights; they are those which appeal to the hearts and consciences of men. * * * We are standing upon the broad platform of the Declaration of Independence, "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." We say that these rights are not given by laws, are not given by the Constitution, but that they are the gift of God to every man born into the world.

When he indulged in figure of speech he added force and grace to his argument.

What the sun is in the heavens—

Said he—

> diffusing light and life and warmth, and by its subtle influence holding the planets in their orbits, and preserving the harmony of the universe, such is the sentiment of nationality in a people, diffusing life and protection in every direction, holding the faces of Americans always toward their homes, protecting the States in the exercise of their just powers, and preserving the harmony of all.

The supremacy of the nation is thus beautifully expressed:

The States are but subordinate parts of one great nation. * * * The nation is over all, even as God is over the universe.

He was always heard with attention whenever and wherever he spoke. He spoke to the consciences and judgments of men; he spoke from conviction to win converts to a cause which he deemed to be righteous. He was attended upon the hustings by vast assemblages of his countrymen, who were drawn not by mere tinsel, but by the solidity and strength of his argument and the force of his character. The people knew that back of the word was a heart, a conscience, a conviction, a man.

Mr. President, the State of Indiana commits to the keeping of the United States the statue of Oliver Perry Morton, to be kept and preserved so long as the fabric of our political institutions shall endure. She commits it with affectionate pride, believing that those who shall follow us in the stately procession of the years to come will preserve it in perpetual remembrance of one who gave his best years, yea, life itself, in unselfish, unceasing devotion to the mighty task of preserving the unity and honor of his country.

I can readily believe that were it possible for the statues of Samuel Adams, Ethan Allen, John Stark, and Roger Sherman to utter speech, yea, if George Washington, Daniel Webster, James A. Garfield, and the other occupants of our American pantheon, of patriots and immortals the greatest, could breathe through their marble forms, they would say: Hail, hail, thou brave and incorruptible patriot, thou loyal vicegerent of the people in the perilous hours of the Republic.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it was my fortune to serve for some years with Senator Morton in this Chamber and to know much of him before he became a member of this body. I was here during the last years of his life and was present at the impressive memorial services in his honor held in this Chamber, and now, when many years have passed away and when the antagonisms and prejudices which existed during the period of his active service are forgotten, it is a pleasure to me to speak briefly on the occasion when the Government of the United States, in pursuance of law, is to accept from the great State of Indiana a statue of this distinguished man.

These proceedings have their origin in section 1814 of the Revised Statutes, which is, in part, as follows:

* * * And the President is authorized to invite all the States to provide and furnish statues, in marble or bronze, not exceeding two in number for each State, of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof, and illustrious for their historic renown or for distinguished civic or military services, such as each State may deem to be worthy of this national commemoration; and when so furnished the same shall be placed in the Old Hall of the House of Representatives in the Capitol of the United States, which is set apart, or so much thereof as may be necessary, as a National Statuary Hall for the purpose herein indicated.

The law thus carried into the Revised Statutes was passed in 1864, a few years after the new Hall of the House of Representatives was ready for occupancy. Various projects were suggested for the use of the old Hall thus vacated. The late Senator Morrill, of Vermont, then a distinguished member of the House, who soon after became a member of this body and whose memory we still cherish, presented a plan for the use of the old Hall of the House, now embodied in the section of the Revised Statutes quoted by me, giving various reasons therefor, but stating that, above all these, it would afford an opportunity to all the States of the Union to select from their citizens the most distinguished in the service of their State or of the nation.

The law provides that the statue of no living person shall have a place in that Hall, and, although thirty-six years have passed away since its dedication, only ten States have thus far availed themselves of the opportunity to present here for our approval and acceptance statues of two of their citizens so distinguished as to be worthy of such an honor. Six other States have each provided one statue.

It was not difficult for the original thirteen States or for the States which came into the Union soon after the beginning of this century to select eminent men to be represented. The newer States are not so fortunate in having an opportunity to present eminent historical representatives of their States; and it is probable that many years will pass before this representation shall be completed within the spirit and purpose of the original dedication.

The statues already here from the older States are largely those of men distinguished for their eminent service to the country during and immediately following the Revolutionary period, thus recognizing that the spirit of the law requires that the selections shall be made at a period so remote from that in which those represented here lived that the antagonisms, the prejudices, and the contentions of the active period of their lives will have passed away, so that those making the selection could impartially pass upon their work as fitting them especially for this distinction. In this spirit Massachusetts has selected Winthrop and Adams; New York, Clinton and Livingston, and Wisconsin, Marquette, whose history is so familiar to us all.

Indiana, though not one of the original thirteen States, was early admitted into the Union, and its history furnishes the names of many men of great ability who achieved distinction in the annals of the State and of the nation. It has selected from among these Oliver P. Morton for this high honor, and his statue is now presented by the State for acceptance, thereby expressing as the judgment of the State that of all the departed sons of Indiana, Oliver P. Morton was the most distinguished and most worthy of a place in the National Statuary Hall, and those who will study the character and the story of his career, as found in the work he performed and his participation in the great events of the time in which he lived will approve the selection.

The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] has analyzed the character of Senator Morton and delineated with such fullness of detail his work and his participation in the great public questions in which he bore so conspicuous a part, as to leave but little to be said by those who follow him in these exercises. It is enough for me to say that, without having the advantages and opportunities of our modern life, he so devoted himself to the study of books and of men and affairs as to make him at an early age a marked character among all those with whom he came in contact.

Nominated as lieutenant-governor of Indiana in the fall of 1860 on a ticket with Henry S. Lane, who then deservedly had a great reputation in the State, both were elected. The legislature in the early winter electing Governor Lane to the Senate, he immediately resigned the office of governor. By this resignation Mr. Morton became governor of the State at a perilous period in the history of our country. This elevation to the governorship gave him an opportunity for the display of the highest executive ability and enabled him to win the distinction of being among the greatest, if not the greatest, war governor of that period.

Indiana was so located geographically as to make it necessary that she should prepare at once in the most vigorous way to play her part in the civil war, beginning early in the year 1861. In addition to the location of the State in the Union, because of the character of its population there was a wide difference of opinion as to the duty of its citizens respecting the part it should take in the civil war. The leaders of one party were opposed to the war and bitterly antagonized the aggressive and vigorous policy of the governor.

This hostility continued, so that in the middle of his term a legislature was elected which in its majority was hostile politically to all the measures which he deemed necessary for the preservation and protection of the State and for the preservation of the Union itself. That legislature absolutely refused to appropriate money to carry on the ordinary operations of the State; it left all of its public institutions without appropriations for their support, and it failed to make appropriations for the military establishment of the State, thus compelling Governor Morton, in addition to his duties respecting military operations, to take the responsibility of pledging the credit of the State and his own credit to raise money to provide the necessary means to carry on the State institutions. He did not hesitate to take the responsibility, but he instantly pledged the credit of the State, relying upon its people, when another election should occur, to vindicate his conduct and pay the obligations thus created by him.

He was not disappointed in this reliance, for he was triumphantly reelected governor of the State. At the same election a legislature was chosen which was in absolute sympathy with his policy and his purposes, and arrangements were made for the full discharge of every obligation, I am assured, with the approval of the vast majority of the people of the State. His energy, activity, and vigor during that period strongly attached him to President Lincoln and the great War Secretary, Stanton, and he had the full confidence and approval of both.

When he entered this Chamber on the 4th of March, 1867, he was no stranger. His personality and his achievements preceded him. He brought with him a national reputation as pronounced and distinguished as that of any other man who ever entered this Hall, a national reputation achieved by the universal knowledge of the important services he had rendered the country as governor of Indiana during the most trying and turbulent period in our history.

The civil war had ended two years before, but the States lately in rebellion were still under military control and authority, and there was a wide difference of opinion as to their true relation to the Union. One party insisted that when the war ended the States in rebellion were entitled to be restored to the Union with full representation in both Houses of Congress without condition or limitation, as though the war had not taken place. Another party insisted that the Government of the United States could impose such conditions and limitations upon the restoration of those States as Congress might deem wise for the protection of all the inhabitants in their civil and political rights, and as would also insure the preservation of the Union of all the States.

As then was true in respect to the attitude of the two political parties, there was a wide divergence among Republicans of that period as to what the conditions should be and what limitations should be placed upon the States as conditions of their restoration.

But there arose out of the war other pressing questions of great importance to our country. Our finances were in a disordered condition; our currency was such as to make business always a matter of doubt, requiring those who bought and those who sold to pay tribute and penalty to the money changers and to those who dealt in money. So during the period of Senator Morton's service these large questions were the subjects of continued discussion and debate.

Congress met on the 4th of March, 1867, when Senator Morton was sworn in as a member of this body. On the second day of the session Mr. Sumner, of Massachusetts, introduced a series of resolutions relating to the readmission of the Southern States into the Union, and made a speech in explanation of those resolutions. They were laid upon the table. One week after Senator Morton became a member of this body he called the resolutions from the table, and on the 12th of March made a speech upon the subject of reconstruction, which the Senator from Indiana in his speech just now characterized as second only to Webster's reply to Hayne. It was one of the most comprehensive discussions of the great question that was then pending as respects the restoration of the Union, and to my personal knowledge was listened to by a crowded Chamber of Senators and Representatives. It was after this speech that Mr. Sumner, I believe, stated that Governor Morton was the first Senator who ever entered this body and mounted the saddle and led his party from the beginning of his official career. While this was only partially true, because there were then here many of the most eminent men of our country, who had long service and who were justly entitled to the leadership of great parties and were leaders of men, it must be admitted that from that moment Oliver P. Morton was one of the Senators who had to be reckoned with in debate, and he became one of the most powerful of the leaders here.

He was an active participant in the debates from that time forward, and advocated, as the Senator from Indiana has already said, the imposition of what he regarded as just conditions preliminary to the admission to representation in Congress of the States lately in revolt, favoring the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments as necessary to accomplish that purpose. He also favored the reconstruction legislation then placed upon our statute books preliminary to the readmission of those States. He was certainly one of the most active in securing the adoption of the joint resolutions submitting to the States for their ratification the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. It was believed then that it was unfair to have the suffrage prohibited to the colored race and yet allow them to be counted as part of the basis of representation under the provisions of the Constitution. The fourteenth amendment was based upon the idea that representation and suffrage should go hand in hand, and where the one was denied a denial of the other should follow.

Governor Morton took an active part in every phase of the question of restoration, and it may be truly said, as I have already said, that he was one of the most conspicuous men who pressed upon the country the policy finally adopted. Although this policy has often been criticised, as distinguished from that which proposed the restoration of the States without restrictions or conditions (and it is criticised even to-day), it is not possible now to say, even on the part of those critics, what would have followed a restoration based upon the idea that the moment the rebellion ceased that moment the States lately in rebellion could come back without condition or limitation and participate in the government of the country as though no revolt had taken place. Governor Morton was soon made chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, always an important committee in this body, as we know it is now, but especially important then because of the questions arising upon the admission of Senators from the Southern States. That committee had charge practically of all the legislation relating to representation in this body following 1867.

Such was the activity of Mr. Morton's mind that, although absorbed in this work, he was equally active as respects the finances of the country; and though not a member of the Finance Committee, he was active in shaping the policy of the Senate on every question affecting the finances during the period of his Senatorial service. It was claimed by many, after the close of the war, that the first step in the restoration of our disordered finances should be the funding of the greenbacks, to be followed by their cancellation. Mr. Morton, early in his service here, vigorously antagonized this view, and held that they should be used as a part of our currency until the natural growth of the country in wealth would enable the Government to provide for their easy convertibility into gold; and he steadfastly adhered to this position during all of his service here.

In 1866 a law was passed providing for the gradual retirement and cancellation of the greenback circulation, which would have secured that cancellation in probably six or seven years. In 1868—Mr. Morton took an important part in the debate—it was proposed that so much of this law as provided for the retirement of the greenbacks should be repealed, and that further cancellation of them should be prohibited. Mr. Morton advocated this policy with vigor, as I have said, and urged that the true way to deal with the question of the currency was to continue the paper issues of the Government in circulation until such time as the country would be restored to a condition of prosperity, and they could be easily made convertible into gold at the will of the holder. The provision authorizing the cancellation was then repealed.

The question of the funding of the debt, so as to bear a lower rate of interest, was pressing. Mr. Sherman, of Ohio, brought forward from time to time measures looking to the refunding of the debt at a lower rate of interest, and also for the gradual retirement of the greenbacks as a necessary part of any plan looking to the restoration of specie payments. These measures were debated from year to year, Mr. Morton always participating in them and always insisting that specie payments could only come with the growth of the country and by gradual processes. In 1874 a new question arose because of the extraordinary issue of $27,000,000 of greenbacks during the panic of 1873. Mr. Morton contended that under the law this was a legal exercise of power by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that a law should be passed affirming its legality; and such a law was passed under his leadership and vetoed by President Grant.

As a result of the elections of 1874 for members of the House of Representatives, the body which is elected by the people of the United States, the Democrats secured for the first time since 1860 a majority. By that time all the States had been restored to full representation in the Union, and the Democratic party for the first time, I repeat, had a majority in the House of Representatives. It was deemed necessary after the elections of 1874 that the Republican party should take some measure during the brief interval between the elections of 1874 and the approaching Democratic House of March, 1875, to put our finances upon a basis of safety that would at least be satisfactory to the great body of the people of the United States. So when we came here in December, 1874, the Republicans held a caucus, and they resolved that during the short session an effort would be made to secure a financial measure looking to the restoration of specie payments. In order to accomplish that it was necessary that all shades of opinion in the Republican party should be consulted. A committee of eleven Senators was appointed for that purpose, and I suppose now, after the lapse of these long years, it is fair for me, in a sense at least, to disclose the secrets of the caucus, though I have known such secrets to be disclosed within two or three days after the meeting of a caucus.

That caucus resolved that an honest effort should be made to compose those differences. The leaders of public opinion, as respects the question of greenbacks, were the Hon. Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, who wanted none of them, and the Hon. Mr. Morton, of Indiana, who wanted to preserve them as a part of the currency of the United States. As I said, eleven men were selected. Finally, after two or three weeks, they prepared a plan of legislation looking to the restoration of specie payments, the phraseology of which was acceptable to Mr. Edmunds, who wanted to destroy the greenbacks, and to Mr. Morton, who wanted to continue them. That legislation was submitted to this conference of Republicans, and after full consideration its provisions were unanimously assented to, although there was a great variety of opinion as to the true construction of the phraseology, and some of the provisions were unsatisfactory to many. But the caucus adopted the plan, placing then, as it places now, no restraint upon the individual judgment of any Senator, each being left free to follow his own judgment and to vote for or against it. This bill became a law by a party vote in both Houses of Congress, and it is known as the resumption act of 1875.

Now, the marked difference between these two great minds was that each believed the Supreme Court would place upon the phraseology adopted the view which each entertained respecting that matter. Fortunately, however, or unfortunately as the case may be, early in 1878 Congress passed a law forbidding the further retirement of the greenbacks, which afterwards the Supreme Court declared that it had the power to do; and thus the mooted question between these two lawyers—I mention it now because it is interesting historically—never could become a question of legal construction or interpretation by the Supreme Court.

The campaign of 1876 was most active, and although Mr. Morton was in feeble health, he took a conspicuous part in it. When he returned here he found a contest impending as to the result of the election. The votes of South Carolina, Louisiana, and one vote from Oregon were in dispute, and as these votes were counted the result might be changed. There was no Vice-President to count the vote, that duty falling upon the President pro tempore, a Republican Senator from the State of Michigan. A joint committee was raised to deal with this question, embracing the ablest men of both political parties in the two Houses. My personal recollection is that Mr. Morton strongly favored the selection of this committee, a joint committee of the two Houses. Its mission was to devise a method whereby the votes could be counted in such way as to be satisfactory to the friends of the two candidates. There was evolved from the joint committee of seven members of each House what was known as the Electoral Commission bill.

Every member of that committee except the Senator from Indiana agreed to a favorable report upon that bill, and that alone is a sufficient illustration of the tenacity of his purpose and the resisting power he had, for there were upon that committee from both Houses the ablest and strongest men, including Senator Edmunds, of Vermont; Senator Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey; Senator Thurman, of Ohio, this being a committee composed of members of both political parties. But Senator Morton insisted that the scheme they had devised was a plan which would inaugurate Mr. Tilden as President, when he knew that Mr. Hayes had been elected President. Therefore, with vigor in this Chamber he afterwards resisted the passage of that bill, which, however, receiving, as it did, the support of every Democrat but one and of nearly all the Republicans, became a law and a part of the history of this country.

It having been provided that that body should be composed of five Senators, five Representatives, and five justices of the Supreme Court, Mr. Morton was selected as one of the representatives of the Senate upon the Electoral Commission to decide the question as to the disputed votes in the electoral college. The electoral votes as counted by the commission elected Mr. Hayes President, the vote on every sharply contested question being 8 for Mr. Hayes to 7 for Mr. Tilden. This action, I know, has often been criticised as partisan, but I never could quite understand how it was that the majority were partisan because they were Republicans, and the minority were patriots because they belonged to another party. The truth is, and I am only speaking historically, that the men who served upon that commission did so with a high sense of the duty they owed to their country and to the people of the country, and that their sole desire was to make a decision according to the right as they viewed the right.

Now, a moment of personal recollection. I think it was one of the saddest things to see Senator Morton physically impaired while in the full vigor of his intellect, for I have never witnessed in this Chamber any Senator who could so clearly in the hurry of debate analyze the principle that underlies the argument of his opponent and in a few short sentences antagonize that principle and dissipate it. For ten years he was a member of this body, and I do not believe there was a single day in those ten years when he walked into this Chamber unaided, or that he ever entered this Capitol without the assistance of one or two attendants; yet he toiled on day by day and hour by hour, and sat here during the long vigils of the night when great debates were going on, taking his part effectively upon each and all these great questions, and upon every phase of them. Although during all the years of his service in the Senate he had an incurable malady upon him which impeded his power of locomotion, I believe that but for the services he rendered during the short period following the election of 1876 he might have been spared much longer to his country. But it was the drain and stress upon his mind and upon his physical system that hastened his death in the fall of 1877. He always spoke from his seat. His physical condition did not permit him to rise to speak in this Chamber. He sat there [indicating], and for a time there [indicating], but when he spoke he was always listened to.

Now, Mr. President, I have detailed my observation respecting Governor Morton in this Chamber and his work here. I have merely attempted to briefly outline the career of this strong man, who played a conspicuous part in the great affairs of our country during sixteen years of its history, and who has left an imperishable monument of his power as a leader, his ability as a statesman, and his earnest patriotism during that period. Indiana honors itself when it honors his memory by placing in Statuary Hall his statue, but in all the years which are to follow in the history of Indiana, of all the great men she has produced or may produce hereafter, the statue of only one of them can be placed beside that of Oliver P. Morton.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, Oliver P. Morton was an elemental man. He had the sincerity and simplicity of nature. He was the personification of the people who are always natural, always elemental, and in the end necessarily always right. All great men are this. They have in them something of the oceans, the mountains, and the stars. In their presence the schemes of schemers seem illogical and absurd—seem like the houses of cards that children build. The road is always plain before them because they perceive with the large vision of the seer whither that road inevitably leads.

Such men have that courage which lesser men call folly, but which history always estimates aright, and to which the people in the end unfailingly respond. They do not hesitate to take their stand. They do not hesitate to act their thought. They do not hesitate to put their destiny to the touch. Indeed, their destiny, their personal fortunes, are the last items they consider. Their cause or their country alone is a thing of consequence to them. Such are all the inspired and inspiring characters of human history. Such was Leonidas, such Cæsar, such Cromwell, such Bismarck, such the greatest of all the great, our unapproached and unapproachable Washington. Men like these found states or save them. Men like these clear the rugged, and, to weaker men, the impossible way up the mountain, and, taking humanity by the hand, lead it upward to purer atmosphere and broader vision. And such a man was Indiana's titanic son, the elemental Morton.

Mr. President, to recount his services were superfluous. That my colleague has most eloquently done; how, when all was fear, confusion, even chaos, he set the bugle to his lips whose note of triumph called about his cause that minority which was the seed of the majority later on, because it was the seed of truth; how he spoke as well as thought, and acted as well as spoke, and sent regiments flying to Washington before other States had equipped a man; how he erected arsenals, bought uniforms, purchased medicines, borrowed vast sums on his personal responsibility, and, at the end, came to the accounting with hands unsoiled by the wealth that had poured through them; how he sent from Indiana alone more than a generation ago nearly a quarter of a million men—more than all our war with Spain required, nearly four times more than all our forces in our new possessions; how he came to this Senate and how he wrought here for justice and the right and how, at last, he died, "worn out," as he said, worn out by serving his country and working out the great purposes of God.

And to this I can not add. Of the few mighty names whose memory will increase is the name of Morton. It suggests the steadfast, the faithful, the eternal. It is one of those great rocks in a weary land in whose shadow humanity may abide. These vast characters attract the people by a sort of law of moral gravitation. The people trust them by an instinct that passes the wisdom of formal thought. The people know that these great characters are the agents of the eternal verities, even perhaps unconsciously to those characters themselves.

And the people remember them with an increasing memory, which, reacting, exalts the people ever in the memory. And so, Mr. President, do we remember Morton, and so is our remembrance a blessing.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the resolutions proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] be adopted?

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 26, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 24, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

PUERTO RICO APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of the order of yesterday, the conference report on the Puerto Rico appropriation bill comes up for consideration, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman under this order.

Mr. CANNON. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

Mr. MCRAE. Does not the gentleman from Illinois desire to occupy any time?

Mr. CANNON. I will say that I am quite ready for a vote, and I do not now anticipate that we shall use much if any time on this side. Of course I can not say we will not, because I do not know what my friend will say.

Mr. MCRAE. Does the gentleman think it is exactly fair to expect us to use thirty minutes without any explanation from that side?

Mr. CANNON. Well, we will let the matter proceed for twenty minutes; and then if it seems to be equitable that we shall use any time on this side, we will do it.

Mr. MCRAE. Well, so far as I am concerned, I can just as well say now what I have to say as later. I should be glad, Mr. Speaker, if I can be called in fifteen minutes, as I have promised some of my time to another gentleman. I have been yielded, I understand, thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty minutes.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, there is a sense of justice and fair play in the hearts and minds of the great body of American people that, when aroused, will on all proper occasions assert itself. On the Puerto Rican question the occasion has arisen and the people are expressing themselves in no uncertain manner. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The latest is from stalwart Republican Iowa. The legislature of that State passed day before yesterday the following resolution:

The people of Iowa are unalterably opposed to the establishment of any tariff duties between the United States and any territory acquired as a result of the Spanish-American war, the people of which accepted the sovereignty of this Government without resistance and voluntarily passed under the jurisdiction of its legislation and laws.

The newspapers say that Iowans here declare that their legislature knows nothing of Puerto Rico. I tell them they will find out that they know nothing of the people's sentiment. The New York Board of Trade and Transportation on the same day adopted the following, which I commend to the Representatives from that State:

We believe that in assuming the existing relations toward Puerto Rico this country accepted obligations which can not be honorably evaded; and that, apart from other considerations, due regard for pledges given demands the extension to that island of free commercial intercourse with the United States.

The Puerto Rico delegates to Washington have issued an appeal to the people of the United States, from which I desire to read some extracts. It begins with a quotation of the Golden Rule, with which the gentleman from Illinois ought to be familiar and ought to practice:

And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

These are grave moments in the history of your country as well as that of Puerto Rico. A solemn crisis is at hand, one that most intimately concerns the citizens of this free nation, and which means the salvation or the irremediable ruin "of the Gem of the Antilles," the survival or destruction of a loyal and trustful people, to the lasting credit or disgrace of the American Union and its governing powers.

In view of the signal events of the past few weeks and their critical effect upon the destinies of two countries which are, by virtue of authorized pledges, actual and implied, one and the same, it is expedient that the people of the United States should become aware of the memorable pledges made in their behalf at the time of the occupation of our island; what the National Legislature is doing regarding the fulfillment of those obligations; and, lastly, what the people of the island have a right to expect by way of civil rights and privileges—what they may equitably demand not only for the restoration of their former prosperity, but for the preservation of their very existence.

The American people and the press, who, thrusting aside all constitutional questions and all subterfuges or sophistries, have recently, almost with one voice, emphatically demanded for Puerto Rico, as her right, free commerce with the United States, will be startled and indignant beyond measure to learn that it is now proposed to fling the reduced tariff and a gift of $2,000,000 as a "sop" to the starving and prostrate island, and to suppress all legislation in Congress establishing stable government—its gravest need—and to relegate the island, for another year at least, to the ruinous conditions of military rule.

Compared with this enormity, which means inevitably the putting out of the last ray of hope in the stricken island and turning it over to the blackness of despair, the tariff outrage shrinks to nothing. While, as a matter of principle, we could never assent to the imposition of any tariff on commerce between the United States and Puerto Rico, the reduced schedules proposed (especially if improved, as promised, by the addition of a liberal "free list" of food supplies, etc.) will perhaps permit tolerable and somewhat bettered conditions; but to deny us stable civil government, and the essentials to our very existence, which can come only through it, is to strike down at a blow every hope, promise, and possibility of redemption. What have we done; what do we lack, that this last, cold-blooded refinement of oppression should be decreed against us by the voices that pledged us, only so little ago, every good thing under the folds of the American flag?

Taken by the war power of this Republic—the most enlightened, resourceful, and powerful of the nations—into its possession, with every pledge and promise of all the benefits of which it boasts itself the exponent, by what right or pretext that can stand the scrutiny of God or man is this little island made to suffer woes far greater than those she once endured (but was rapidly surmounting) under the tyranny of Spain, and coldly and indifferently thrust into vassalage—not being "citizens," they are hence either subjects or slaves—its former rights curtailed, its markets taken away, and only the barest husks of charity thrown to it to feed upon? Will some one tell why they who came trustingly, confidingly under the flag, and have loyally and devotedly given themselves to it, should be reduced to the condition of "white slaves" and bade be thankful for the pittance doled out to them?

Will some one tell why the people of Puerto Rico, a million strong, of Caucasian blood and of the Christian faith, with the refinement, culture, and intelligence of an ancient civilization strongly represented among them and influencing the masses; with a military, political, social, and financial history of which any people might well be proud; with a homogeneous population of exceptional individuality, intelligence, and commercial instinct; with one-quarter of its people able to read and write, and the percentage rapidly increasing; with more English-speaking residents than the whole Hawaiian Archipelago; tractable, loyal, and ambitious, with a wealth of tropical products lying at the very harbor gates of the United States; with their island—the furthest outpost of the nation—sure to be the first assailed in the event of war, and hence to be defended by their arms, should be thrust back under military dominion, while the hundred thousand people of the remote islands of the Hawaiian group should be erected into a Territory, the Constitution be extended to them, and free commerce unhesitatingly given them?

Can anyone give a good and sufficient reason why the people of this "Gem of the Antilles" should be treated worse than the heterogeneous, restless, and inchoate mass of Sandwich Islanders, to whom the simplest governmental proclamation must be issued in five languages; why this remote, much-mixed, and scattered people should be given full citizenship, full Territorial government, and all constitutional rights, and the same be denied to Puerto Rico?

Can anyone tell why the Kanaka Delegate from Hawaii should have a place and voice for this 100,000 ill-starred people on the floor of Congress while 1,000,000 souls of Puerto Rico—80 per cent of them white and 100 per cent Christian—who have had for years equal representation with any Spanish province in the assembly and senate of the Spanish Cortes, * * * is to be permitted only a "resident commissioner" at Washington?

* * * * * * *

Friends—brothers, if Puerto Ricans have the right to call you so—we appeal to your sense of right and honor, praying that you may lift your voices against this perpetration of a crime against your own established principles, this repudiation of a nation's solemn promises to a loyal people starving at your doorstep, and who ask no charity, only justice, at your hands. We do not ask paternalism, but fraternalism; no other bounty than the right to labor and to prosper; not the crumbs from your feast, but the privilege of toiling on an equal footing and proving ourselves worthy to sit at the same board under the same flag. Is it too much to ask of an honorable individual or nation to fulfill an obligation written in patriots' blood? Once taken into the household, is it too much to ask to be treated, not as an outcast, not even as a guest, but as one of the family, in all honor?

The Puerto Ricans, therefore, confidently make a last appeal to a people who, once beholding their bitter condition and knowing the reason thereof, can not fail to rise in solid ranks for the fulfillment of sacred pledges and for the conferral of Territorial rights on the little island of starving brothers under the flag, who ask only justice and the right to live.

* * * * * * *

Party prejudices should be laid aside, for with partisanship the Puerto Rican delegates, in their effort to bring Congress to recognize their rights, have nothing to do. As Americans, and Americans only, they wish to judge and be judged in turn. As American citizens they plead for a million others to be received as American citizens, not as crown-colony subjects; as free and protected members of the body politic, not as objects of pauperizing charity, paternalism, or imperialistic dependence. They call upon every patriotic American to raise his voice in their behalf, that the integrity of the soldier's promise may be maintained, that the honor of a nation may be preserved, that a starving people may be allowed to work out their own salvation; that, in a word, Puerto Rico may indeed be free.

[Applause.]

That is what they ask. What shall the answer be? Two million dollars charity money unjustly collected from them, and a tariff wall that will nearly destroy all trade between them and this country. Will the American people submit to any such outrage against these poor people, who only ask the proud privilege of earning their bread by their own labor? [Applause.]

If the Republicans think the people of the country do not understand this issue, they will find themselves woefully mistaken, and if they continue along the narrow, selfish, partisan lines on which they have commenced to legislate, they will not receive the approval of the people in any section. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McRAE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this measure, because I can see no good reason for it. I believe that Congress, as it has the power and authority, should at once pass some measure giving civil government to the Puerto Ricans and enable them in a legal and constitutional way to raise revenues in such manner as they may think right and proper. I believe that this measure is simply one to pull the Republicans out of a hole which they have got themselves into; and I do not believe that it should be passed by this House.

I notice in the Washington Post of this morning a cut applicable to gentlemen on the other side who have been changing their minds; and I want to read a little of the matter which accompanies this cut. Here is the sign: "Dr. Hanna, legislative specialist. Minds changed while you wait." [Laughter.]

It seems to me that this cartoon correctly represents the situation of the other side of the House. You are in a position where you do not know what to do. You voted under the crack of the leadership whip on that side in favor of what many of you now admit was against the sentiment of your constituents and against your own honest convictions. The Post gives the reason of some of the changes and how the changes were brought about.

In yesterday afternoon's Star we find a statement which corresponds with the notice in the Washington Post this morning. I will not take time to read it in my five minutes, but will ask permission to insert it in my printed remarks. The Star, a reputable paper, says that a prominent Republican member said to the Star reporter, or to the author of that article, that the reason the Republican party was taking the course that it has taken in this Puerto Rican matter was because certain concerns in this country had grappled you by the throat and told you, the leaders of the Republican party, that if you dared to refuse to follow the course that they pointed out they did not propose to put up any more money for the Republican campaign fund.

The article as published in the Star is as follows:

A MATTER OF MONEY—CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTION IN RETURN FOR PUERTO RICAN TARIFF—SERIOUS STATEMENT OF A REPUBLICAN—DESPERATE EFFORTS WILL BE MADE TO PASS THE BILL—PEACE COMMITTEE TO CONFER.

"The action of the Iowa legislature can not affect the situation in Congress. The deal has been made. It is a matter of money for the campaign, and the tariff measure will be carried through."

This statement was made by a Republican member of the House who supported the bill in the House by his vote.

"You may as well set it down that the deal will be carried out," he added. "The carrying out of the recommendation of the President for free trade with Puerto Rico would have deprived the party of a very considerable contribution; the adoption of the reverse policy insures a very large contribution.

"The possible unpopularity of the Puerto Rican tariff was balanced against the certainty of money to use in the campaign, and the decision was in favor of the campaign contribution. It was not expected that the storm of protest would be as strong as it is, but it is now too late for a change."

There is the reason as given here for the position which gentlemen on the other side have taken. Will they answer, Is that statement correct and true? Is not the Star a responsible paper? It is a Republican paper. No one doubts its fidelity to this Administration and to President McKinley. What has President McKinley done? Will any of you gentlemen on that side dare state what his position is to-day? Will any of you rise on that side and tell us? When the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee comes to use his time will he or any other gentleman on that side of the House tell us where the President of the United States stands on this Puerto Rican question? [Applause.]

Mr. MADDOX. They have not seen him since breakfast. [Laughter.]

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Why, sir, if we are to take this cut in the Post, there is no use in going up to the White House to find out what you think. All you need is to go to "Dr. HANNA" to find out what you on that side are in favor of; and you want to take these statements here, published in a strong and reputable paper, as to what your action and course are. Stand up and tell us why the change is—where your leader stands and where your President stands.

A MEMBER. And where they will stand to-morrow.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McRAE. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] now use some of his time?

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the report of the committee of conference as now presented, this bill, if the report be adopted, will stand substantially as it was when passed by the House a week or two ago. Along with 11 other Democrats, I then voted for this appropriation bill. I believed then and I believe now that it was the consistent position to take in accordance with the position we had taken in reference to the tariff which was proposed by the Ways and Means Committee as applied to Puerto Rican products. To my mind it is as inconsistent on our part to oppose the passage of this bill as it is inconsistent on the part of the majority of the House to offer and advocate it.

On the other side of the House it is admitted that the Puerto Ricans are entitled to relief from oppressive impositions. Upon this side we claim that not only should they be exempted from those impositions, but we claim that they are entitled to every possible relief that we can give them on account of the tariff. Under our construction the Constitution rests over Puerto Rico just as much as it does over every other American possession, and we have no more right to tax its products than those of any portion of this country. Under our view of the Constitution, as construed by the decisions of our courts, the people of Puerto Rico are protected from the imposition of any tariff, and in my humble judgment the Supreme Court will hold that such an imposition will be illegal.

Thus, under the law as it stands, inasmuch as there is no customs district in the island of Puerto Rico, the Executive of this nation must continue to collect tariff. Under the existing state of affairs the best we can do for those people in view of the present status is to refund to them the tariff taxes which have been thus forcibly and unavoidably taken from them under the law as it stands. Now, according to the position of our party, we would hold that we have no right to impose a 15 per cent tariff or any other tariff upon Puerto Rico. We would hold that a civil government should be established in the island at once.

We would hold that the further collection of import duties from the island should be stopped so soon as legislation could be enacted. We would hold that those taxes which had already been collected should be returned to them.

Now, if we can not get all that we wish, when the Republican party offer us this—not because they do it in the interest of Puerto Rico, but because of some political exigency—when they offer us this relief, or rather offer it to the Puerto Ricans, how can we consistently refuse to vote for it?

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this appropriation is presented by the Republican party simply as a sop to Cerberus. I realize that they are fleeing from the wrath to come. I believe that they have made, through their Ways and Means Committee, whom they have followed instead of the President, an egregious mistake, and they want to come down the tree as gracefully as possible. I believe the people of this country realize that while the voice is the voice of Jacob, still the hand is the hand of Esau. They believe that the real purpose of the Republican party is an imperial policy, to make subjects rather than citizens of the inhabitants of the island. You can not fool the people. Indiana, Iowa, and Illinois have been heard from, and, in my humble judgment, the rest of the great West, in fact, this whole country, will respond in November in a voice whose meaning can not be misunderstood.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I will pass the time back to the gentleman from Arkansas, as nobody seems to desire to use it over here.

Mr. McRAE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, when the proposition to fix the time within which to debate this measure was before the House, I was somewhat astonished at the close limitation imposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. When this subject was before us on a former occasion, after fixing a limitation upon the time allowed for discussion, it was found convenient afterwards to extend the debate.

At that time the subject was seemingly of great interest to gentlemen on the other side of the House. They found the task they have undertaken one of extreme difficulty. The coterie who do the thinking for the Republican majority in this Chamber, having proposed a new theory of constitutional construction which, followed to its legitimate conclusion, would revolutionize the Government, were amazed to find a few of their brethren in rebellion. The debate, as far as the friends of the Puerto Rico tax bill were concerned, resulted discreditably to their cause, but, strange to say, had the effect of quelling some of the mutineers. The bill passed the House and is now in the Senate. In its defense here its advocates garbled and mutilated the contents of one of the text-books—Kent, Cooley, Pomeroy—and the imposition was detected, exposed, and held up to public ridicule. The statesmen guilty of this misconduct regaled us with all sorts of oratory, from the ponderous, imperious, and oracular utterances of the gentleman from New York down to the rhythmic rhetoric of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. They succeeded; the bill was passed; and forth with this bill, a measure born of an impulse such as prompts the marauder to restore stolen goods, was brought forward.

Such conduct presents to the country a pitiable spectacle, which is rendered worse by the declaration of a Republican organ published in this city that the Republican leaders forced the passage of the Puerto Rican tariff bill in compliance with a direct bargain for a campaign fund. It is not strange that such conduct should provoke an outcry from one end of the country to the other, and that even party organs should denounce you as quacks, innovators, and iconoclasts. Gentlemen, you will never succeed in educating the bar and the people of this country into acceptance of a theory of constitutional interpretation which would lead to the subversion of the Government. The desperate expedients resorted to here will not last through a campaign. Not even the ponderous arguments attributed by the press to statesmen who addressed the Republican caucus when the Puerto Rican tax bill was under consideration will convince the people that under the Constitution of the United States you can establish a government republican here and imperial in Puerto Rico and the Philippines.

Not even the magnetic speech which closed the discussion at this Republican caucus, which dealt with the most important question of constitutional law which has arisen in this country since 1860, will save you from the people's wrath. And what a speech that was!—the newspapers tell us that after you had wrestled long and earnestly with the grave constitutional questions under consideration; when there was not a ray of light to illumine your pathway; when you were still in doubt as to your duty to your party and your country there loomed up among you a figure and was evolved a speech which made your duty plain: "Boys, rally around the flag." It was a Republican speech, a spell-binder, and it helped amazingly. Thenceforth a number of insurgents had no difficulty in casting a vote which their judgment condemned, and which has won the curses and contempt of the country.

This bill will not help you. By its enactment you will admit that you have wrongfully imposed a tax upon the commerce of a part of the United States, and that you want to give the money back to the victims of the wrong.

Are you going to give it back to the persons from whom it was taken? No; you are going to give it to the Puerto Ricans, to be used in paying the expense of their government. And what is the effect of such a law? It is to impose the burdens of municipal control in Puerto Rico upon the production and commerce of Puerto Rico, thereby crippling their export trade, without the freedom of which you know they will be impoverished. Why do you not impose a tax upon the products of Iowa, preventing the people of that State from having free access to the markets and then make restitution by returning the money to the State treasury of Iowa? Of all taxation, that which hampers trade, which prevents the exchange of commodities between neighboring communities, is the most unjust and the most unnatural. This you know, yet you unhesitatingly assail the commerce of Puerto Rico by its imposition.

There is an analogy between this case and another that happened many years ago. When Great Britain sought to impose taxes upon the colonies, there was a great outcry against it, and what was the answer of the British Government? They said, "We will make this tax low; we will cut it down to a merely nominal figure. We will put a very low tax upon tea; but we can not exonerate you from taxation without representation without giving up a principle for which we stand." And you stand to-day insisting upon this taxation because you want to establish this same accursed principle as permissible under a constitution framed by men who founded this Government upon the theory that it is infamous.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McRAE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not undertake to discuss this conference report in the time which has been allotted to me. I take it for granted that it will be adopted; but I arise to ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, with a view of placing in the RECORD some of the discussions of this measure by the public journals of this country. I ask leave to extend my remarks without now speaking.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent——

Mr. DOLLIVER. I would like to inquire what is the character of these publications?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They are editorials reviewing and criticising the policy of the Republican party in respect to the Puerto Rican legislation.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very ungracious thing. I believe this is the first time I have ever asked leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and if the gentleman desires——

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have no objection to the gentleman extending his own remarks, but I doubt the propriety of reprinting newspaper articles.

Mr. RICHARDSON. They decline to give time to discuss the measure, and now, when I get only one minute, and when I ask unanimous consent to extend, objection is made.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Before I take my seat I shall repeat my request. I would like to have the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have no objection to my friend extending, to any length, any remarks which he himself desires to submit; but I doubt the propriety of reprinting newspaper articles in our RECORD. That is the only thing I object to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman, however, objects. That is all right.

Mr. McRAE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, all I desire at present is to submit a plain, common-sense question. If Puerto Rico does not belong to the United States, to whom does it belong? If Puerto Rico is not under the Government of the United States, what government is it under? When you come to the Philippine Islands, you justify the war there upon the ground that the islands belong to the United States. Now, can any man cite me to an authority which holds that the Government of the United States has the right to impose a tax upon the citizens of the United States, or upon their commerce, or the people of the United States, or the people they govern, and after they have collected it give it back to them?

Now, there is but one question involved in this. Does it benefit the Puerto Ricans? It benefits two other classes. It protects the tobacco men in this country, and it protects the sugar men in this country; and I ask, as a common-sense proposition, why not let the Puerto Ricans retain their money at home without restriction and loss of collection and return, and let them use their money under their own direction or even under the direction of the United States, since we are administering the government there? I never heard of a proposition that to my mind seems to have as little reason in it as this. Suppose we should undertake to put a tax on one of our Territories for the purpose of building up schools, churches, etc. Is there a member of this House who would vote for it? Certainly not.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. I would like to finish my sentence.

Mr. McRAE. I have promised all my time.

Mr. COX. I simply ask permission to finish my sentence. If anybody objects, I will sit down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to speak in the time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. COX. All right; I will not take any more time. I will ask leave to finish it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McRAE. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS].

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to use my two minutes in reading an editorial of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, one of the leading Republican papers of the country.

[Inter-Ocean, March 21, 1900.]

The chief reason now given for forcing the Puerto Rico tariff through the Senate is that this course is necessary to "save the House organization." In other words, "plain duty" no longer is to control the great Republican organization.

The prestige of a few Republican Representatives, whether they be right or wrong, is to be the guiding influence of the party of Lincoln.

That sort of policy and politics may pass muster in Washington, but not among the voters of the middle West. Nor will it pass muster in the press or on the stump in the campaign of next fall.

Think of it! On the one side are "our plain duty," our plighted faith, honor, honesty, and fair play, the future of the nation, the expansion policy that became ours at the cost of an international war. On the other side are perfidy, broken pledges, naked imperialism, desertion of the Republican platform of the last two years, repudiation of a far-reaching and farseeing statesmanship. And the proposal in Washington now is that the disgraceful side of this alternative shall be chosen to spare the feelings of the Hon. SERENO PAYNE, with his policy of a "warning precedent," cheap rum, and an Oxnardized colonial administration.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Well may Republican voters throughout the land wonder at the amazing fatuity which thus reckons them as nothing in the balance, when the Hon. SERENO PAYNE and the sugar and tobacco lobby take possession of the other scale.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

And well may they ask their "leaders" in Washington to spare them such "reasons" as are being put forth from the Capitol to justify a breach of faith and a betrayal of trust planned against the people of this country and the people of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the article in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend the article which he is reading in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CAPRON. I object.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. Who objected?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. CAPRON. Objection is made because——

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object to any explantion of an objection. These objections will continue the balance of this session.

Mr. McRAE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY].

[Mr. RIDGELY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. McRAE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I can not vote in favor of the conference report. By it we practically agree to subsidize Puerto Rico indefinitely, or until otherwise provided for, and with this makeshift policy in force the continuation of the tax on Puerto Rican imports is forever assured.

By the donation of this bounty the present distress of the Puerto Ricans and the necessity for immediate relief is admitted, but, nevertheless, having taken away her markets, and in part having been responsibible for her present prostrate commercial condition, it is proposed to tax them, to make them feel that they are under our rule but not under our laws.

And I am certainly opposed to the continuation of this subsidy. If it be necessary to place $2,000,000 in the hands of the President to relieve Puerto Rico, I am satisfied that it should be done, but why should we pledge ourselves to continue this relief. As Puerto Rico's exports increase, as they surely will, the amount which we are asked to agree to return to them for their aid and relief and education will also increase, until in time it will reach a sum larger than any amount contemplated by this report.

If it be right to tax these Puerto Ricans, why not do it without pledging the return of the amount derived from the tax? If they must be supported, let us legislate from session to session for their support and appropriate whatever sum may be necessary for their relief, but do not let us pledge ourselves to their continual relief, which means a continuation of this unjust tax on their importations.

During the delivery of the above remarks the time of Mr. LEVY expired.

Mr. LEVY. I wish to have one-half minute more, in order to finish my remarks.

Mr. McRAE. I yield the gentleman one-half minute more.

Mr. LEVY resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time, two minutes and a half, I believe, to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, believing as I do that Puerto Rico is a part of the United States, as much so as the State of New York or the Territory of Oklahoma, and believing, as I do, that the Constitution of the United States prohibits absolutely the imposition of any tax or duty on goods exported or shipped from any part of the United States to any other part of the United States, whether the same be a State or a Territory, I must, to be consistent, vote against this bill.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question but that the Puerto Ricans are in the most deplorable condition of any people living under the flag of this country to-day.

Since Puerto Rico was ceded to the United States by Spain the island has been devastated by a cyclone, one of the most destructive in the history of the island. This storm destroyed, practically speaking, all crops in the island and the homes of many, and rendered the people destitute and helpless. Since that time recuperation, from an agricultural standpoint, has been slow, and many of the people are in want. In addition to this, the markets of the world have practically been closed to the Puerto Ricans by the unlawful action of the Administration in imposing the heavy burden of the Dingley tariff law upon all goods coming from Puerto Rico into the United States. Being unable to sell, they can not buy, and the markets of the world being practically closed to these people, their condition is deplorable indeed.

I am willing, however, to vote whatever appropriation may be necessary to relieve these people from immediate want, and until they can get on their feet, direct from the United States Treasury. We can very well afford to do this, Mr. Speaker, because since the island was ceded to us by Spain the Administration has unlawfully collected from these people on their goods coming into our ports the sum of $2,095,455.88. Had this tax not been collected this amount of money would to-day be in the pockets of the Puerto Rican people, and to this extent, in my judgment, we are the debtors of the Puerto Ricans.

I do not hesitate, however, to say that even if this were not the case I would vote an appropriation to place food in the mouths of the citizens of the United States who have been brought to starvation by a most devastating storm, as the Puerto Ricans have been, or by ruinous floods, as some of the people in the Mississippi Valley have been in past years.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have already, by my vote in this House, expressed my willingness that the Government of the United States should relieve the sufferings of the poor and destitute Puerto Ricans when, with the minority, I voted to concur in the Senate amendments to this bill.

The bill provides that the revenues hereafter to be collected on importations from Puerto Rico to the United States under existing law (the Dingley tariff law) shall be segregated and be expended by the President of the United States for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico.

This provision, in my opinion, renders the bill most objectionable, because it is a tacit, if not an explicit, avowal by Congress that the Dingley tariff rates are properly imposed upon all goods shipped from Puerto Rico to any of the States or Territories of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I am unwilling to concede this. If Puerto Rico is a part of the United States, then no tax on her products shipped to other parts of the United States can be imposed. If Puerto Rico is not a part of the United States, I do not understand by what authority our flag floats over that island and the jurisdiction of the United States is asserted there. As stated above, the provisions of this bill practically avow the right of Congress to levy and collect taxes on goods shipped from one part of the United States to another. Not only this, but the taxes are segregated for a particular purpose, to wit, for the sole benefit of the government and benefit of the island of Puerto Rico.

Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises, to pay the public debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

This provision of the Constitution gives to Congress an unlimited power of taxation for the purposes named, subject to the limitation that such taxes shall be uniform throughout the United States, and subject to the further limitation that the taxes levied must be either to pay the public debts or to provide for the common defense or general welfare of the United States.

In other words, the power of taxation is not unlimited in its character. First, the tax levied must be for purposes national in their object or character. Congress has no authority and no power under section 8, Article I, or under any other provision of the Constitution of the United States, to levy and collect taxes for any purpose other than a national purpose.

The provisions of this bill admit the legality of the taxes heretofore collected on goods coming from Puerto Rico into the United States and sanction a continuance of the tax, thus violating the section of the Constitution above quoted, which requires that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States, and by its provision providing that the tax thus collected shall be used for a particular purpose further violates the provisions of the Constitution which limit the authority of Congress to levying taxes for a national purpose.

Now, if Puerto Rico is not a part of the United States, as the Republican majority in this House hold, Congress has no authority to levy a tax for the people of the island of Puerto Rico and its government on goods coming into the ports of the United States. If it is a part of the United States, as we contend, then Congress has no right to place a tax upon goods shipped from that island to any port in the United States, because this violates the rule of uniformity required in taxation.

So, Mr. Speaker, my objections to this bill are, briefly summed up: First, that it is an admission or avowal by Congress that the tax hereafter to be levied and collected under the Dingley tariff law on Puerto Rican goods coming into our ports will be properly levied and collected when, in my judgment, the levy and collection of this tax is not warranted by the Constitution of the United States; and, second, because the levy and collection of this tax is a violation of section 8, Article I, providing uniformity in such tax; and, third, because the tax hereafter to be levied and collected on Puerto Rican goods coming into our ports is for a special purpose and is not national in its character.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized to control the time until 1 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. I supposed I had twenty-five minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. At 1 o'clock the vote is to be taken.

Mr. CANNON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I should not have said a word or noticed the statement made in the Evening Star if it had not been brought into this discussion by gentlemen on the other side. The statement, on its face reputed to have been made by some gentleman upon this side of the House, is manifestly false. If there is any party interested in this bill or interested in the tariff bill that is able to contribute to the campaign of either party, it must be either the sugar trust or the tobacco trust. The same "respectable" Evening Star, in an editorial two or three days since, said that Henry T. Oxnard, "the head of the sugar trust," had been here urging free trade for Puerto Rico; and yet there is not a printer's devil connected with the Evening Star that ought not to know that Henry T. Oxnard is interested only in a couple of beet-sugar factories, the whole annual output of which does not exceed 15,000 tons, against a million and a half tons of sugar refined by the American Sugar Refining Company.

One or two gentlemen on that side of the House to-day propose to return this $2,000,000 to the men that paid it into the Treasury. The papers inform us that Mr. JONES of Arkansas, the head of the Democratic national committee, makes the proposition to return this money to the men who paid the tariff. And who are the men? Why, it appears that $1,800,000 of the money was paid in as tariff on sugar. By whom? By the American Sugar Refining Company, either directly or through their brokers in the city of New York. Those are the men who paid the money. Are you gentlemen willing to vote it back to them? Who will get the benefit of it? They bought the sugar of Puerto Rico, presumably at the market price, about 2 cents a pound; they refine it here, for every pound is raw sugar and must be refined before it enters into commerce; they paid the duty; and when this comes before the House, the only proposition by the other side is what? Not to give the money to the Puerto Ricans, not to give it to the men who received this small price for the sugar, less the tariff, when they sold it to the American Sugar Refining Company, but to give the money back to the sugar trust; and your whole effort has been to remove all tariff from articles coming from Puerto Rico to the American Tobacco Company and the American Sugar Refining Company and benefit these two gigantic trusts in the United States, to help the tobacco company to place their cigarettes, which they are now making in the factory in Puerto Rico, entirely on the free list and unhampered by any tariff, and you dare to come in here and insinuate that Mr. Oxnard, who in his small way is a competitor of the sugar trust, or some other gentleman in the beet-sugar business, is buying up this side of the House by an agreement to contribute to campaign funds, when the boodle, if there is a dollar of it, is against the proposition of any tariff on sugar or tobacco coming from the island of Puerto Rico. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I shall talk about this conference report. It is founded upon a bill that I had the honor to introduce in the House and passed by unanimous consent so far as its consideration was concerned, when any one man on that side of the House could have stopped its consideration. You did not do it. We discussed it and passed it. One hundred and eight of you voted against it. It went to the Senate, and the Senate amended it. It came back to the House, and the House nonconcurred in the Senate amendment. It went to a conference, and the bill now, by the conference report, is in substance the bill that the House passed in the first instance. One hundred and eight of you voted against it then, and no doubt that 108, possibly more, will vote against it now.

But you seek this morning to play the cuttlefish; you come in here and talk about campaign funds; you come in here and talk about free trade and about American citizenship, and in talking misrepresent the political history of the country. In talking you seek to divert attention from the material matter before the House, hoping that the attention of the country will be diverted from your votes by your talk.

This bill gives for the benefit of Puerto Rico every dollar heretofore collected. Aye, more; it gives for the benefit of Puerto Rico every dollar that shall be collected upon imports under existing law in the future. And it ought to. You are sorry for "poor Puerto Rico;" and yet, when the practical relief comes, your voices say "no." Speaking respectfully, and measuring my words, for a real or supposed political advantage, in my judgment, you would hold up the million of people in Puerto Rico to such starvation that the sun would shine through their bodies, if you thought you could get a little political advantage by it.

Now, you pity us poor Republicans, you say, for the terrible condition that we are in, and you say what this paper said, and what that paper said, and what this person and that person said. None of these things move me. I believe, as I stand here, that Puerto Rico and the Philippines and all newly acquired territory belong to the United States, and through the decades and centuries to come they will continue to belong to the United States, the United States making such legislation and administration as to take care that they do not damage us and that we do the best thing possible for them. [Applause on the Republican side.] You believe to the contrary. After voting the twenty millions, after voting to ratify the treaty, you believe that the United States should wash its hands of the Philippines, and for that purpose you beget strange doctrines. You go back on the record of Jefferson and Jackson; you go back on the legislation and decisions touching the Louisiana purchase and Florida, and you go back on the decision of the courts. You are good Lord and good devil for anything and everything. [Laughter.]

I had rather stand here now advocating correct legislation, and practically meet the present conditions and the future conditions, and take my chances for success upon the very right than to contest with you in racing along the line of error and false principle. [Applause on the Republican side.] For one, I will not follow your counsel. If for half a century your counsel at any and all times had been followed, it would have resulted in anarchy and destruction of the Constitution and the Government. Aye, no man can point to any action upon the part of the Democratic party here and now and for fifty years but, in seeking assent to the propriety of its action, would have to bow his head in shame when he asked it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And here you are posturing and asking for power under false pretenses. Thank God, the intelligence of this country is sufficient, as I believe, to perceive the right and weigh you in the balance; and I trust when it casts you all into the abyss of defeat, as it will in November next, as surely as to-morrow's sun rises, that you will fall this time down to everlasting perdition politically, where you belong. [Great applause on the Republican side and laughter on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. Under the order made yesterday, the time for debate has expired, and the vote must now be taken on the conference report. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER. The ayes appear to have it.

Several members called for a division.

Mr. McRAE and Mr. CANNON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 87, answered "present" 21, not voting 107; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OPEN DOOR IN CHINA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I desire to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] submits the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the commercial community of the United States is deeply interested in ascertaining the conditions which are to govern trade in such parts of the Chinese Empire as are claimed by various foreign powers to be within their "areas of interest;" and

Whereas bills are now pending before both Houses of Congress for the dispatch of a mission to China to study its economic condition: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit to the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public service, such correspondence as may have passed between the Department of State and various foreign governments concerning the maintenance of the "open-door" policy in China.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the report of the committee is unanimous, and I trust the House will adopt the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE MERCHANDISE.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7939) to amend an act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the ports of Laredo, Eagle Pass, and Laredo, Tex., and Nogales, Ariz.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means, was read:

In line 7, after the word "and," strike out the word "Laredo" and insert in lieu thereof the words "El Paso."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SLAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MEMORIAL OF GEN. ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Library, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6240) for the preparation of plans or designs for a memorial or statue of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant on ground belonging to the United States Government in the city of Washington, D. C.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, appointed a commission to secure plans and designs for a statue or memorial of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, late President of the United States and General of the Armies thereof, to be erected on ground belonging to the United States in the city of Washington, D. C.; and said commission shall, by advertisement or otherwise, as they may deem proper, request from leading artists or architects competitive plans or designs of such a statue or memorial, and the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated for expenses attending the securing of such designs and for the payment to the five artists or architects whose plans may be favorably considered by said commission, which shall be reported to Congress with a careful estimate of the cost of such memorials or statues.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let us have some explanation, Mr. Speaker, of the object of the resolution.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, this bill looks toward the erection in this city, on ground belonging to the United States Government, of a memorial or statue of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant. The bill appropriates the sum of $10,000 for the preparation of plans or designs.

Thirty-five years have passed since General Grant's active military career was crowned with victory, twenty-four years since his civil career came to a close, and fifteen years since he breathed out his life on Mount McGregor. It seems strange that we have waited so long before erecting in this capital city of the country he served so well a memorial worthy of the man and of the nation.

He is honored and loved North and South. The North remembers and honors him for his fortitude in the hour of danger; the South remembers and loves him for his kindness in the hour of triumph. The South does not forget that the same voice which at Donelson thundered out "Immediate and unconditional surrender," also spoke at Appomattox the words of a brother, "Let them take their horses. They will need them on their farms." [Applause.] The South has not forgotten that the stern purpose expressed in the sentiment, "We will fight it out on this line if it takes all summer," was softened, after the war was over, in the all-comprehending love of the man, into the sentiment, "Let us have peace." While the conflict raged he was the incarnation of "grim-visaged war," stern, resolute, resistless. But when the fratricidal strife was over, the sternness of his features relaxed, his eyes grew kindly, and the knightly soul of the great commander exhibited itself in serving and saving those who had laid down their arms.

I believe, sir, that all of his countrymen, North and South, unite in admiration for his genius and affection for his character. It seems right and proper, therefore, that we should, since it has not been sooner done, take the action contemplated by the bill, which the committee unanimously reports. I accept as my own the language of the report, written by my colleague on the committee, Mr. CUMMINGS, of New York:

The Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6240) for the preparation of plans or designs for a memorial or statue of Gen. Ulysses S Grant on ground belonging to the United States Government in the city of Washington, D. C., have examined the same and submit the following report:

Fifteen years have passed since Gen. Ulysses S. Grant died.

No man in this country was ever more deeply loved or more sincerely mourned than he.

Scanning his life—following it year by year from infancy to the last day at Mount McGregor—it aptly illustrates individual opportunities and achievements in the American Republic. His errors of judgment, his failures, and his afflictions only mark him as human. His great work shows the touch of Divine inspiration.

Of humble lineage, he was ever in sympathy with the common people. In the height of his glory, whether at home or abroad, receiving the homage due to the Chief Magistrate of the nation, or being entertained by the courts of Europe and of the Orient, he represented the citizenship of the United States.

It is not necessary in this report to review the services which General Grant rendered his country. They are written on the pages of history. They are known to all his countrymen. To the statesmen; to the soldier on the land and the sailor on the sea; to the rich and the poor; to the capitalist and the laborer; to the million of aging veterans who served under him and to the boy just learning to read, his is a household name dear as that of Washington and Lincoln. The heart of every patriotic American thrills as he recalls the great victories from Donelson to Appomattox, and is filled with gratitude for the man who, under Providence, was so instrumental in preserving the integrity and perpetuity of the Union.

With all his strength of character and tenacity of purpose, with all his wonderful endowments, and with all his triumphs as a soldier and as a President, he was possessed of such gentleness of soul, such simplicity of heart, such purity of character, such unselfish devotion, that he not only commanded the respect and admiration of the world, but won the love and affection of all his countrymen.

From time immemorial grateful people have erected monuments to the memory of their illustrious dead. It is wise and proper thus to do, but it is not wise and proper to so long delay the expression of gratitude as to excite the remark and wonder of visitors from foreign shores at our seeming indifference.

That no monument or memorial has ever been erected at the national capital to the memory of this great man seems almost incredible.

The parks and reservations of Washington everywhere reveal the sculptor's art, commemorating the memory of our noble and heroic dead. Sherman, Hancock, Sheridan, Logan, Rawlins, Thomas, and McPherson, who all served under him, have been reproduced in bronze. Why, then, should the greatest of them all be not thus remembered?

Your committee believe the action required should be delayed no longer, lest Congress and the people of the national capital be charged with ingratitude and forgetfulness.

The accompanying bill, which simply makes an appropriation of $5,000 for the preparation of plans or designs for a memorial or statue of General Grant on ground belonging to the United States Government in this city, receives the unanimous support of the committee, and its passage is recommended.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does the bill provide for a commission?

Mr. McCLEARY. Yes. It is to consist of the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota propose an amendment?

Mr. McCLEARY. There is an amendment proposed by the committee, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, by direction of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 2, page 2, after the word "of," the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten;" so that it will read: "The sum of $10,000."

Mr. MERCER. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield for a minute?

Mr. McCLEARY. Certainly.

Mr. MERCER. Since introducing this resolution, Mr. Speaker, I have received letters from all parts of the United States urging the immediate action of Congress upon it. I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

The amendment of Mr. McCLEARY was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BOARDING OF VESSELS.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5067) concerning the boarding of vessels.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe and enforce regulations governing the boarding of vessels at the seaports of the United States, and for that purpose to employ any of the officers of that Department.

SEC. 2. That each person violating such regulations shall be subject to a penalty of $100.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be construed as supplementary to section 9 of chapter 374 of the statutes of 1882, and section 4606 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect thirty days after its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, were read:

In line 4, after the word "prescribe," insert the words "from time to time."

In line 9, after the word "of," insert the words "not more than."

And in line 10, after the word "dollars," insert "or imprisonment not to exceed six months, or both, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. SMALL. I also offer two other amendments by direction of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the other amendments offered by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the word "vessels," insert the word "arriving."

In line 6, after the word "States," insert the words "before such vessels have been properly inspected and placed in security."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMALL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 477) granting a pension to Levi C. Faught.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3106. An act relating to the accounts of United States marshals and the clerks of the district courts for the Territory of Utah—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 3254. An act to amend section 953 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the signing of a bill of exceptions—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 733. An act concerning the boarding of vessels—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9080. An act appropriating, for the benefit and government of Puerto Rico, revenues collected on importations therefrom since its evacuation by Spain, and revenues hereafter collected on such importations under existing law;

H. R. 5390. An act granting a pension to Maria E. Mailley; and

H. R. 4686. An act for the relief of J. A. Ware.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CHARLES RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I call up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2883) to authorize the Cambridge Bridge Commission to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Cambridge Bridge Commission be, and hereby is, authorized to construct a drawless bridge across the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts, between the cities of Boston and Cambridge, as provided for by chapter 467 of the acts of 1898, and chapter 180 of the acts of 1899, of the legislature of the State of Massachusetts; said bridge to be at least 26 feet above mean high water over the main ship channel, and the piers and other obstructions to the flow of the tide to be constructed in such form and in such places as the Secretary of War shall approve: Provided, That the State of Massachusetts, within a reasonable time after the completion of said bridge, by legislative enactment, shall provide for adequate compensation to the owner or owners of wharf property now used as such on said river above said bridge, for damages, if any, sustained by said property by reason of interference with access by water to said property now and hitherto enjoyed, because of the construction of said bridge without a draw.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, this bill is identical with a bill which has been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill. The question is on the third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOVERING, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. LOVERING, the bill H. R. 2542 was ordered to lie on the table.

NORTHRUP & CHICK AND THOMAS N. STINSON.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5552) for the relief of Northrup & Chick, and also of Thomas N. Stinson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to examine and adjudicate the claims of Northrup & Chick, and also of Thomas N. Stinson, late licensed Indian traders with the Pottawatomie Indians in Kansas, for supplies furnished said Indian band for their subsistence, and to determine whether anything is justly due said Northrup & Chick, and also Thomas N. Stinson, and if so, the amount thereof, and whether there is any fund belonging to said Indians which can be applied to the payment of such claims; and if so determined, then to report and certify the amount found due to said Northrup & Chick, and also to Thomas N. Stinson, without interest, to be paid from the funds of said Indians to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be so paid by him; and the receipt by said Northrup & Chick, and also by Thomas N. Stinson, or their representatives, of any amount found due them shall operate as a waiver and relinquishment of any claim for interest.

With the following amendment, recommended by the committee:

After the word "interest," in line 5, page 2, add the following:

"It is further provided that the reward by the Secretary of the Interior to Northrup and Chick shall not exceed the sum of $3,529.98, and that to Thomas N. Stinson shall not exceed $2,694.06."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COWHERD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REINDEER IN THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Printing to offer the following privileged report and ask for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 23.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on Printing, offers for immediate consideration the following concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, etc., That there be printed 2,000 copies additional to the usual number of the report of Dr. Sheldon Jackson upon "The introduction of domestic reindeer into the district of Alaska for 1899," of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEATWOLE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

STATUE OF OLIVER P. MORTON.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew my request made last evening that on Saturday after 1 o'clock, the 14th day of April, be devoted to resolutions accepting the statue of the Hon. Oliver P. Morton.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that Saturday, April 14, commencing at 1 o'clock, be set apart for addresses on the receipt of the statue from the State of Indiana of the Hon. Oliver P. Morton. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I objected to the resolution yesterday, not to show any discourtesy to the gentleman from Indiana or to the great man whose memory is sought to be praised by the resolution presented by the gentleman from Indiana. But there is a statue now in Statuary Hall of Father Marquette to which, through the narrowness of the members of a Committee on Library in the Fifty-fourth Congress, proper respect has never been shown. Yesterday was the first occasion that I was present in the House of Representatives when unanimous consent was asked on a question of this kind, and I thought I would take advantage of the opportunity to call the attention of the House and the people of the country to the narrow feeling of bigotry which existed at that time in regard to that statue.

The resolutions unanimously adopted by the Senate calling the attention of Congress to the virtues of this great explorer were presented to the House, referred under the rules to the Committee on Library, and slumbered there. I endeavored at various times to call them up, but owing to the rigid rules of this House, which prevented consideration without a report from this committee, no action was ever taken upon the matter.

Father Marquette is the recognized discoverer of the great Mississippi, and his memory has been denied proper recognition by this House, because of the narrow spirit of bigotry and prejudice against the Catholic Church prevailing among some of its members. I intend at some later date to ask that a special time be set apart in which the members of this House may have the chance to pay proper respect to the great work accomplished by this explorer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

RETURN OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House Senate resolution requesting the House of Represenatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 477) granting a pension to Levi C. Faught. Without objection this order will be made and the committee discharged.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. COWHERD, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. TERRY, for this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. SCUDDER, for one week, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GRIFFITH, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROWN, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ALLEN of Maine, indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. LATIMER, for one week, on account of important business.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SYDNEY P. EPES.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now proceed to the execution of the special order fixed for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the special order for to-day, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY offered the following resolutions; which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. SYDNEY P. EPES, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Virginia.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. HAY. SYDNEY P. EPES had for years past occupied a prominent place in the public eye. He served a term in the legislature of Virginia, was elected to the responsible position of register of the land office of the State, and was twice elected to this House by the people of the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia. Though young in years, his counsel was sought for and taken by the wisest men in Virginia, and his influence was just beginning to be felt in the national councils of his country when he was stricken down. He had in an unusual degree that distinguishing characteristic of Virginians, intense love for his State and admiration for the magnificent record which Virginia has made among her sister Commonwealths. In his brief but brilliant career he always worked to advance the interests of his State and people, and his people returned generously and without stint the love he bore them. No man had so many friends; no man deserved them more.

He combined with a gentle and lovable disposition a stern sense of duty and a loyalty of friendship rarely equaled. He had in him all the elements which go to make up a man. His worth, his character, his integrity were recognized by all; and when he died, it was felt that his loss was irreparable. His people will send another to take his place here, the places which knew him will know him no more, his familiar form will never be among us again, we will never feel the cordial grasp of his hand nor see his genial smile nor hear his pleasant voice, but his memory will live forever in the hearts of those who loved him.

These ceremonies to-day serve but too well to remind us, if to forget were possible, that our friend and colleague is gone from us, and forever. We remember, too, the happy hours spent with him, his quiet flow of humor, his ever-ready friendship, his unfailing sympathy, his generous help in time of trouble, and we realize but too well that—

A sorrow's crown of sorrow is remembering happier things.

Words can not express my feelings and my sense of loss. He was my friend, a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. We leaned mutually upon each other; and from the hour when we first knew each other to the hour of his death we loved each other. His death is to me a grief unspeakable, and words are all too poor to express what I feel. Loyalty was the keynote of his character. He was the most loyal friend, the truest gentleman, the manliest man it has ever been my lot to meet. As I walk about this House, as I wander through these corridors, as I tread the stones which have so often reechoed to his footsteps, I say to myself over and over again:

But oh for the touch of a vanish'd hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I will only ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments, not but what considerable time could be profitably spent in speaking favorably of our deceased colleague, but my acquaintance with him was brief, and I will yield the time to those who knew him better and longer than I did, yet who can not entertain a higher regard for his memory than I do. I first met the late Mr. SYDNEY P. EPES as a member of the Fifty-fifth Congress, and thereafter until the day he was forced by illness to leave this Hall for the chamber of death we were thrown much together.

Many little things occurred in common between us contributing to a close acquaintance, and our friendship was strengthened by the high regard I formed of him as a man. Knowing full well that the stern duties of the civil war compelled me to traverse as a hostile soldier his place of birth and home, it seemed to lead him to be extremely kind and attentive to me, going out of his way to do several acts of kindness for people of my district, which he never permitted me to repay.

To me he appeared to be of a cheerful and happy disposition, and no matter when or where I met him he greeted me so warmly that it was a pleasure to meet him.

I regarded him as a gentleman of great promise and bright future. While politically opposed to each other, I respected him for the fearless and straightforward manner he carried out and maintained the principles of his party, and I should feel as though at this time I was not discharging my duty if I did not publicly testify to his ability, integrity, and many virtues. To me he appeared to be the soul of honor, and notwithstanding he was a strong political disciplinarian, it was impossible to know him and not honor and respect him.

I felt honored to be selected as one of his friends to accompany his remains to his last resting place. To me it was a solemn and thoughtful occasion. Young, brainy, and energetic, apparently with a long and useful life before him, sitting here in the discharge of his public duties, and the day stricken with death—called upon without warning to leave this world and part with all that was dear to him—makes the thought of his early and untimely death solemn indeed. To me the sad journey was thoughtful because his funeral train went the entire distance over a country that I traveled as a soldier from 1861 to 1865, during the great struggle for the supremacy of power; every mile of the territory easily recognized, bringing so vividly to my mind the painful memories of that terrible struggle between the bravest and most intellectual people of the world.

Around his open grave I joined with many of the brave men who opposed the progress of the Union armies in paying respect to the worth, character, and ability of their political leader they had so long honored and followed.

The great throng present, so respectable in appearance and numbers, with heavy hearts and weeping eyes, was a beautiful tribute of respect, and testified in the strongest possible manner to the high regard our dead colleague was held by those who had surrounded him from birth to death.

No more beautiful tribute of respect and affection could be paid anyone than was paid the memory of deceased by the brave and generous people of his home.

In the church, resting on the ground I had camped upon as a soldier of Warren's corps, we listened to prayers for his soul and relief and comfort for his sorrowing and afflicted family and mournful friends.

In the cemetery over which a part of the two great armies of Grant and Lee passed in 1865, and over which many a deathly hostile bullet was fired, we laid to rest all that was mortal of our respected friend, realizing that his life's work was done, his record made. His work was approved of by his constituents he had so ably represented.

No one will be found to criticise his record, which we all trust has been approved of by that invisible hand that guided our much-loved and highly respected friend through life.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, my affection and respect for the person and character of SYDNEY EPES will not permit me to indulge in mere words of praise. I knew him and I loved him. It was my fortune to know him in his youth—before he reached manhood's estate. He was a self-reliant, self-respecting, manly boy.

He early realized the responsibilities of life, and he met them bravely.

Tried in many and important public and private stations, he was faithful in all. Courteous and gentle in manner and conversation, he was determined and persistent in purpose and action. Tolerant and conservative, he had fixed principles to guide himself and positive convictions touching all public questions. He made no pretensions to oratory or speech-making. He was a worker, systematic and methodical. Possessed of rare judgment and great good sense, he was a safe counselor. He made friends because people had faith in him. He convinced others because he himself was convinced.

Men followed his lead because his leadership was ever marked by courage and honesty of purpose. He had the respect of those who knew him because he deserved it.

He was a devoted son, who honored his father and his mother.

He was an affectionate brother, about whom the love of his family was centered.

He was a loving, tender husband and father, leaving to wife and children a heritage more precious than the wealth of this world, because he was in "honor impregnable, in simplicity sublime."

He was a loyal, faithful friend.

He was an intense Virginian, bound in heart and memory to the history and tradition, the honor and good repute, of the "Old Commonwealth," and he honored Virginia, as Virginia had honored him. For great as is the history of Virginia and her sons, past and present, there never trod on Virginia soil a knightlier gentleman than SYDNEY EPES, and there sleeps not beneath Virginia sod a more loyal, a gentler, braver son than her late Representative.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, we are assembled here to-day in discharge of a mournful duty. We are here to pay tribute to the memory, to commemorate the virtues, and to mourn the loss of one of the most loved and promising young members of this House.

Less than one month ago SYDNEY P. EPES, in the prime of his young manhood, already crowned with honors, and with greater awaiting him in the future, was suddenly, without warning, stricken down.

In his sudden death not only have his own people and his own State sustained a great loss, but also the whole country. To me his loss is a deep personal bereavement. He was one of my best, warmest, and most intimate friends. There was no one save my near relations whom I loved and admired more than I did SYDNEY EPES. He was the very highest type of that character so well known as the "Virginia gentleman." He was descended from distinguished lineage, and thus was endowed with a proper ancestral pride which has contributed so much to give refinement and dignity and confidence to so many of Virginia's most illustrious sons. He was the soul of chivalry. No gentlemen of the old school could surpass him in this respect.

He possessed as loving, as tender, as gentle, as generous a heart as ever pulsated in human breast. He had a fascination of address, a witchery of manner, a pleasing smile, a warm grasp of the hand that captivated and held fast all with whom he was brought in contact. He had a courtesy of demeanor which was rare and could not fail to bespeak favor alike from friend or foe. He scorned to be a trimmer upon any question or upon any matter.

No one ever surpassed him in loyalty and in devotion to his friends. He made the battles of his friends his battles. Their failures he shared without complaint and without regret.

In his whole career, with all of its vicissitudes, with all of its temptations, with all of its fierce political fights, no one can be found to reproach him for ingratitude or who can say that he ever failed courageously to discharge any obligation. He never in his whole life failed a friend. This speaks volumes.

This is one reason why wherever he went he gathered around himself many warm, loving, and devoted friends.

Last year I had the pleasure of speaking on a county court day in his native county, and I was forcibly impressed by the confidence, love, devotion, and friendship exhibited toward him by all of his people. Every citizen on the court green seemed to have a personal pride in him, a personal affection for him. One could not fail to see that he was deeply, lastingly in the hearts of these people.

The next time that I visited his native county was when I went there to accompany his remains for interment. Again I saw manifestations of affection and of love which were touching and which proved stronger than before how he had entwined himself around the hearts of his people. A vast concourse of people were there to pay tribute to his memory and to evince their sorrow at his death. The distress was such as if each person had lost his best and most devoted friend. Everything was hushed, silent, and sad, as if a great public calamity had happened.

Mr. Speaker, the highest tribute to a man's character is the love, affection, and reverence of his neighbors. These evidence a man's true worth. No person ever possessed to a greater degree the high regard and deep love of his neighbors and friends than did SYDNEY EPES.

In his private life he was pure, honest, manly, and worthy of the highest commendation. His public career was one of much achievement and gave promise of great possibilities and eminence. His whole life was one of growth, development, and progress.

Without money, without pecuniary aid from any source, he had to fight the battle of life aided only by his own dauntless courage and energy.

We first find him as a clerk in a drug store, courteous, polite, attentive, and doing well. Tiring of this narrow sphere, we next see him, as a mere boy, starting a newspaper, which he conducted with success and with profit.

Ere long the people of his county recognize his worth and his ability and send him to the general assembly of Virginia. He served there, surrounding himself with innumerable friends and attaining a reputation as a wise, sensible, and conservative legislator.

We next find him as the register of the land office of the State of Virginia, a position of much honor and responsibility. In the meantime he had become active in politics in the Fourth district of Virginia and one of the most potential factors therein. He had been promoted on account of his energy, intelligence, and success from precinct chairman to county chairman, and from county chairman to chairman of his Congressional district. Every campaign that he conducted was crowned with success. He combined in a rare and in an unusual degree courage, diplomacy, secrecy, and industry that few political antagonists could successfully encounter. Under his leadership and guidance the Fourth district, which theretofore had been a stronghold of the enemy, became a stronghold for Democracy.

The Democrats of the Fourth district, recognizing that there would be a terrific fight in the Presidential election of 1896, with practical unanimity nominated him as their standard bearer in this memorable campaign. He achieved a great victory, but he was deprived of the fruits of this justly won victory by the Republican majority of the House, who unjustly deprived him of his seat in Congress. His people responded to this outrage by immediately renominating him by acclamation and reelecting him by such a decisive majority that his opponent would not even dare to again contest.

In Congress he was most attentive to his duties. He was a most intelligent, capable, and efficient Representative. Everything that affected his constituency received his most earnest and careful attention. He was broad-minded, conservative, and rarely, if ever, made a mistake as to either the justice or the wisdom of a proposition. There was not a member of Congress who possessed in the House as many warm, devoted, and loyal friends as did SYDNEY EPES. Having surrounded himself with these, it would have been but a short while before he would have been one of the most successful and most potential members of this House.

His Virginia colleagues, recognizing his ability as a political organizer, his industry as a worker, and his wisdom as an adviser, elected him as a member of the Congressional campaign committee. The bestowal of this honor bespeaks the high esteem in which he was held by his colleagues. Mr. RICHARDSON, the chairman of this committee and the Democratic leader of this House, had selected him for the honorable and important position of first vice-president of the Congressional campaign committee. Few new members have in so short a while attained so many honors, inspired so much confidence, and possessed so many possibilities for the future.

With a devoted constituency behind him, he had the promise of a long and a distinguished career in Congress. He was known and loved all over the State of Virginia, and it was but a question of time as to when his State would have shown him greater honor.

Mr. Speaker, we can not understand, but we must bow with devout submission to the inscrutable decrees of Providence which closed so suddenly the career of this distinguished and brilliant statesman.

The blow, Mr. Speaker, falls heavily upon me. None shall miss him more than I. I knew him well. I loved him deeply. All through life I shall cherish the memory of his sweet friendship, of his loving, fascinating personality, of his splendid qualities of mind and of heart.

Mr. BALL. Mr. Speaker, SYDNEY EPES and I began our Congressional service together in the Fifty-fifth Congress. He was one of the first members of the House with whom I became acquainted. That acquaintance soon ripened into a warm and enduring friendship, broken only by the grim messenger, Death. In the full flower of his young manhood, his end came suddenly and unexpectedly to us all. Present and voting in the House of Representatives on Wednesday, under the surgeon's knife Friday, on the next day his family and friends looked upon his lifeless form. When death comes to ripe old age, our sorrows are in a measure tempered by the knowledge that threescore years and ten are the full measure of days reasonably to be expected by the most useful of mankind. When childhood answers the reaper's call, we are wont to draw some consolation from the reflection that trials, hardships, and disappointments have been evaded upon the threshold of life's journey. When, however, the end comes to one in the zenith of his usefulness, as it did to our departed friend before one-half man's allotted years had passed away, our hearts grow rebellious and we are tempted to question the wisdom, nay, even the justice, of such a dispensation. With such a test of our faith, we can only school our hearts to the knowledge that "He doeth all things well." Let us not "sorrow as those without hope," but find comfort in the thought—

> The death change comes.
> Death is another life. We bow our heads,
> And going out, we think, and enter straight
> Another golden chamber of the King's,
> Larger than this we leave, and lovelier.

By resolution of this House, of which SYDNEY P. EPES was a universally respected member, the day has been set apart to honor his memory, by appropriate expressions from his colleagues. In the presence of the great loss which has come to family, friends, and country by his death, I deeply feel—

> Words are the weakest things
> That man as tribute brings, and yet it is our simple duty to voice in a measure the esteem, respect, and affection of his brother-members for our late associate. Therefore, however inadequate they may be, we recognize—

> That words have their grace,
> Their golden time and place.

Mr. Speaker, I would be untrue to my friend's memory were I to in the slightest degree indulge in fulsome eulogy. The two qualities which were perhaps his most distinguishing characteristics were gentle manners and modest worth. 'Tis true that beneath these traits, which so well became him, dwelt a heart which knew not fear. Of such as him was it written, "The bravest are the tenderest." When I say of him that he was a lovable man, I do so with full appreciation of all the term implies. One who knew him well felt gently drawn to him, and he wound his way in an unobtrusive but forceful manner into your affections. "Once his friend, always his friend" could be as truly said of him as of any living man. No one answered the demands of friendship more willingly than he. No one was more ready to be tried by the only true tests of friendship—service and sacrifice. In his quiet way he went through life, extending—

> An arm of aid to the weak,
> A friendly hand to the friendless,
> Kind words so short to speak,
> But whose echo is endless.

No wonder, therefore, when his body was borne to its last sepulchre, that distinguished citizens of the grand old Commonwealth of Virginia came from a distance to evidence their appreciation of the honored dead. No wonder that in his home town, Blackstone, the entire population, men, women, and children, became a congregation, filling the largest church and standing without while services were being conducted. That congregation transformed itself into a long and sorrowful procession as all that was mortal of our friend was slowly borne to the gentle eminence where the silent city of the dead looks down upon the town of Blackstone. Coming from every walk in life, all seemed to share a common grief. Tears came not alone to the eyes of childhood and gentle womanhood, but strong men shook with ill-concealed emotion and wiped away the messengers of grief from eyes that seldom wept.

The five orphaned children who survive him are too young now to draw consolation from the universal love and respect which their father inspired. It must, however, be a source of comfort to his devoted and grief-stricken wife, his aged mother and father, and to a large circle of relatives to know that he had accomplished so much before quite 35 years of age; that while yet in his young manhood he had attained high position among his fellows, and gained the love and confidence of so many not related by ties of blood. His good name will yet come as a blessed heritage to his children, when their young minds shall have unfolded to the knowledge that no other legacy could be so precious. To his beloved family, in the modest but comfortable home which his thoughtfulness had provided just before his untimely death, to his numerous sorrowing relatives, to his large circle of friends, and to his colleagues in Congress may the thought come as a benediction:

Let us not doubt that God has a father's pity toward us, and that in the removal of that which is dearest to us He is still loving and kind. Death separates, but it also unites. It reunites whom it separates.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in paying this last tribute to my dead friend I shall say nothing that I would not gladly say were he still in his place in the House. SYDNEY EPES, with possibly one exception, was the youngest man elected to the Fifty-fifth Congress. Modest, unassuming, and taciturn, he yet won a distinction at 31 many men spend the better part of life in striving for. Those who knew him well were at no loss to account for his success. I never knew a finer sense of honor, greater devotion to principle, truer loyalty to friends; in fact, if Mr. EPES had an unfortunate fault, it was that he could never see a shortcoming in one he loved nor tolerate a compromise with questions of principle. With a modesty that would grace a girl, linked with a genial frankness, the product of manly truthfulness and gentle courtesy, he was loved by many and admired by all his colleagues.

I never heard an evil word spoken of him. I never heard him speak evil of another. He found something to admire or speak pleasantly of in everyone. I would not have you think, however, he was lacking in convictions; seldom have I known a man of firmer purpose. Life to him was sunshine, not shadow; he saw good in everyone; his belief in mankind, his conviction that the nobler impulses controlled man's action, were so contagious it stimulated like a tonic. It was this determination to see only the best in man that won for him so many friends. He was a typical Southerner in manner, habits, and thought. An unyielding Democrat, he was yet tolerant of different political creeds; indeed, his admiration for some of those opposed to him politically amounted to affection. There was, however, always a qualifying element in his political toleration, for if an institution or custom peculiarly Southern was sharply criticised it was met with the sternest opposition.

Mr. EPES loved the very weaknesses of the South; her sons were to him all princes, and an unmanly action by a Southerner distressed him greatly, although the person offending was but a chance acquaintance. He dwelt with delight and unflagging interest on the great achievements of its sons. He related with the keen zest of a warm friend the triumph, military or civic, of some son of the South he never knew or that flourished before he was born. But if he loved the South as a whole with generous admiration, his affection for Virginia was intense beyond measure. It has been said the sons of countries of great geographical limits are seldom intensely patriotic; but, sir, if there be any truth in the statement, Mr. EPES was certainly an exception. Rarely have I known a man so ardently attached to his country. He could see absolutely no defect in Virginia or its people; his very pronunciation of its name was alluring; he looked with the partial eye of a lover on every defect; in his indulgent eye the cottage became a mansion and untilled fields a smiling garden. Sir, as I stood by the open grave of my friend I thought how well he would sleep. Never went a more loyal son to the bosom of our common mother.

When we reached his home long troops of loving friends stood uncovered as their friend and ours was carried by, on through a little village across a sunlit plain into the waving plumes of pine. We buried him on a gentle hill wrapped in Virginia oak and pine, that from his shady resting place his brave spirit might stand forever sentinel over those he loved.

Mr. Speaker, death is always appalling, and if the unsolved mystery of death can take an added gloom, it is when the young and strong are blighted in their youth and withered in their strength. Man strives with feverish energy to dispel the shadows of the grave—genius, learning, and thought are impotent before it. Mr. EPES held the one lamp that throws a column of light across the dark stream. Reason as we will, strive as we may, doubt as we please, Christianity only robs death of its ghastly horrors. To the Christian we are not "imprisoned in the viewless winds and blown with restless violence round about the pendant world," but we have gone to that great court where conscience sits as judge and our life here writes the verdict there. He was not in its strictest sense an orthodox Christian, but in the truer, broader sense he was deeply religious—his faith was deep-seated and profound. He made no boast of his religious belief; in fact, seldom mentioned it; but his close friends knew how earnestly he believed and sought to follow the great Master.

Sir, the onerous side of Congressional life is known to but few besides the members—the innumerable little things a Congressman is called upon to do for some constituent. Generally but one man is interested, and quite often much time and labor must be expended to serve your constituent. I have always thought the best test of a Representative's efficiency was the way he attended to these matters for individuals, and it was in such duties that Mr. EPES excelled. He never tired in going from one Department to another for some person from his district. Often when the day was done I have met him worn out from the hours spent in trying to accomplish something for a friend before some Department. The most commendable feature of this was that he served the humblest as gladly as he did the most influential, and knew the probabilities were his efforts, however earnest or successful, would never be heard of nor do him any good as a Representative.

Representing a district almost contiguous to the capital, he was called upon much more frequently than most Representatives for some service in behalf of an individual constituent. These innumerable calls were cheerfully responded to, and failures before hostile bureau chiefs did not seem to dampen his ardor. He made no effort at display, and was content to allow others to gather what credit was to be had from forensic tilts. While the great body of the House was engaged in some wordy battle, he could generally be found quietly urging the claims of some friend before a Department or writing to his people of matters of interest to them. Brilliant or showy he did not care to be; his one aim was to serve his people loyally, and he did so.

One other view of the man, Mr. Speaker, I can not refrain from mentioning. His devotion to his family was beautiful. Thank God, in this land of ours there are many, many happy homes, and contentment and happiness of homes is not matter for comment; but Mr. EPES's devotion to his family was something beyond the ordinary. Endowed by nature with an exceedingly musical voice and a temperament capable of intense emotion, I have heard him linger over the two most sacred words of our language—"wife," "mother"—in a way that was absolutely seductive. It was only to his intimates he spoke of his dear ones; but when he did, it was with an honest pride and deep affection. In a word, sir, he was the finest product of modern civilization, a Christian gentleman, an honest man, a faithful Representative. His monument is in the hearts of his people, and his epitaph is on their lips.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, had I been asked, any day previous to the 28th of last February, who of the Virginia Representatives in Congress would likely survive his colleagues and live to a green old age, I would have named SYDNEY P. EPES, of the Fourth Virginia district.

On Wednesday, the 28th day of February, when the vote on an important measure was being taken in this House, I saw him lying on one of the lounges in the cloakroom, and, making a pleasant remark to him, I passed on, supposing that he was only resting until the vote was announced. That evening I was informed that he was ill. The next day I visited him at the hospital and conversed with him a short time. The day after he suffered a delicate operation, and the next he had passed from earth to the world unknown.

Can we wonder that men shrink from an enemy that strikes indiscriminately and often selects the youngest and most vigorous? The numerous deaths of our colleagues in the Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Congresses, not a few of them sudden, must impress us with solemnity and awe as we contemplate the sad havoc made by our last enemy.

A few of us have seen death in its most ghastly forms; have stood side by side where it held high carnival; have seen brave men in the vigor of youth and strength mowed down like grass by the reaper's scythe; have seen men's bodies, like sheaves of mown grain, lying thick on fields where contending hosts rushed to the conflict. But this seemed the result of cause and effect, and what we only looked for and expected. Under these circumstances many deaths in my immediate command impressed me not so much as the sudden and unnatural and melancholy taking off of our young and active and promising colleague. Had this blow fallen to one of the older members of our delegation, we would have said: "This is but nature's law. The machinery that sustains the mystery we call life has failed to perform its appointed task, and the no less mystery of death is the natural consequence."

In either case we stand weak, powerless, and appalled before the last enemy, our very souls echoing the thoughts that thrilled the heart of the poet who described the last hours of the brave Greek:

Come to the bridal chamber, Death!
Come to the mother's, when she feels
For the first time her first-born's breath!
Come when the blessed seals
That close the pestilence are broke,
And crowded cities wail its stroke!
Come in consumption's ghastly form,
The earthquake shock, the ocean storm!
Come when the heart beats high and warm,
With banquet song, and dance, and wine!
And thou art terrible!—the tear,
The groan, the knell, the pall, the bier,
And all we know or dream or fear
Of agony are thine.

Death does not always wait until its victim is enfeebled by years, until the locks are whitened, the eyes dim, and the step feeble. Without warning, often as sudden as the lightning flash, it strikes robust youth and vigorous manhood.

So the message came to our friend whose untimely death we this day commemorate. Apparently years of great usefulness lay before him; years in which to lay up knowledge and render efficient service to those who honored and trusted him; years in which to study the science of government and apply its principles; years in which to study human nature and work out plans for the betterment of his fellows; yea more, even for him personally, years in which to rear the young and tender plants that gathered around his hearthstone, years of love and tender care for the one who brought life to his life and peace to his home.

In the midst of all of this promise—hope and ambition cheered by warm friendship and stimulated by the high resolve to accomplish life's task; a brave and confiding constituency, ready to hold up his hands and continue the trust imposed, so that years might add to his judgment and experience increase his usefulness—he is stricken down. Death claims another shining mark. While others from closer association may have known our colleague better, not one took a deeper interest in his welfare or watched his course more intently. His district touched my own. His friends were mine. In two or three of his counties I have a large acquaintance. In all of them the strong tie between old comrades binds me with hooks of steel to those who contributed no little to his success. It is with pleasure that I recall the fact that on more than one occasion, at the request of those people, I left my own appointments to be filled by others and spoke for him.

In one of the last conversations held with him on this floor he thanked me cordially for some little service I had been able to render him.

His uniform courtesy to his fellow-members was as apparent to all as was his great modesty. This latter characteristic was striking, and contributed largely to making and holding the many friends he had in this House. In return his loyalty to these was beautiful. His large political experience, for one of his years, had given him a knowledge of character, and he preceived quickly the motives that influenced and controlled those by whom he was surrounded.

He was for years chairman of the Democratic county committee of his county and member of the State committee, and was also chairman of the district committee. He served as a member of the Virginia legislature in 1891, and was register of the land office at the time of his nomination for Congress in 1896. These various positions, filled with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his party and State, inspired confidence, and helped to equip him for the duties of a Representative in the Federal Congress.

Possessing these qualifications, he had just attained the opportunity to render valuable service to the people of his district. Without the showy qualities of the orator, he possessed what we all know is more valuable in a Representative—sound judgment and patient attention to the details of the work. Had his life been prolonged he would have given the people of his district, who loved and trusted him, an efficient and valuable service. They fully appreciated the brave and heroic part he had taken in the redemption of that district and counted him truly a civic hero, a worthy descendent of the brave men who gave their lives and surrendered their fortunes at the call of their native State.

Born of an honored family in the good old county of Nottoway, situated in that section of Virginia that was for many months the storm center of relentless and desolating warfare, his childhood was spent amidst the smouldering ruins of ancestral homes, and there he listened to stories of wrong and outrage, while he saw a crushed and ruined people start life anew amidst discouragements and difficulties that would have appalled those who had not been tried in the very forefront of battle, and who did not believe that human endurance should be equal to any misfortune and adversity.

It is no wonder then that he grew up brave, resolute, and self-reliant; and that a temporary sojourn with friends and relatives in Kentucky during the formative period of life strengthened and developed these traits, so that upon his return in the vigor of young manhood, he was enabled as editor, and speaker, and organizer, to render valuable assistance to those men of South-side Virginia who were determined that intelligence and virtue should rule in the land that their own sires had redeemed, and where they had themselves made a most heroic struggle in defense of constitutional liberty.

It was my sad duty to attend his funeral services. The large assembly of citizens from Blackstone and all the surrounding country evidenced the esteem in which he was held, and their sorrowful faces bore silent and eloquent testimony of the emotions that stirred their hearts. Every walk and station in life was represented. Ministers of all denominations participated in the services. A large church edifice could not hold the people. One of the most affecting scenes I ever witnessed was this mourning assembly of people, from the gray-haired veterans to the children of all ages, passing by the remains of their dead friend, and beholding for the last time his lifeless features.

The procession to the cemetery was the longest ever seen in that county. The evidence of respect and appreciation were shown by public resolutions through the Fourth and Third districts of the State, and the editorials in country and city papers voiced the sentiment of a sympathetic and grief-stricken people.

On an occasion like this our thoughts turn to those who are the greatest sufferers, and our hearts beat with sympathy for the widow and the fatherless, for the aged parents, now passed three score and ten, and for all bound to him by the ties of consanguinity. Near the beautiful home he had erected on the borders of the town where he was so well known all that is mortal of our colleague sleeps beneath the soil of the State he loved so well and served so faithfully. We are again reminded "that it is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die." We know that there is another life beyond, and that we shall meet those who have gone before us.

When the mists have risen above us,
As the Father knows His own;
Face to face with those who love us,
We shall know as we are known.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, it has been truly said that the crown and glory of life is character. It is the noblest possession of man, constituting a rank in itself and an estate in the general good will, dignifying every station and exalting every position in society, wielding greater power than wealth, and achieving honor without the petty bickering and jealousies attending fame.

SYDNEY P. EPES possessed character which carried with it irresistible power. Strong to do good, no less strong to resist evil. Integrity of word and deed was its backbone, and truth and sincerity formed the essence of his manly nature that gave a loyalty to "virtue which served her without livery."

He cultivated the habit of happy thought, and his genial spirit and charming temper were as "timid violets with their richest fragrance unaware," yet filling the surroundings with wonderful sweetness. His graceful demeanor toward all was a constant source of pleasure, and his gentleness was like the silent influence of light, giving color to the environments. His bearing toward superiors or inferiors, high or low, the humble or the lofty, was marked in his respect alike for all.

Good manners gilded his every action, and in speaking a kind word and doing a kind thing he always enhanced their value.

He was a gentleman in its largest sense, a dignity, in itself, commanding the homage and respect of every generous mind.

He adorned every station in life to which he was called, depending not on fashion, but on moral worth; not on personal possessions, but on personal qualities.

His law was rectitude of purpose; his standard, probity of word and deed; his motto, virtue.

He was a poor man in this world's goods, but rich in all the elements that go to fashion the most elevated models of human kind. The words "nature's nobleman" were stamped on the mold which formed him.

Frank and open, he despised deceit, and he held honor and virtue as beloved twin sisters, not to be hurt if assailed, not to be enthralled if surprised.

He was a friend; yes, a true friend; whose counsel was not based on flattery; neither was it crooked by selfish ends.

His friendship, perfectly sincere, unselfish, and pure, was a treasure to those possessing it. It was in no sense an obligation to be met; it had no day of maturity, no days of grace; it bore no interest. No demand for payment, no value received, was written across its face. It was payable never. It was the possessor's to use when and where deemed proper. It was too lofty to serve an ignoble purpose, and, like the forest oak, it grew more and more deeply rooted as time wore on.

His benevolence and charity were the children of his generosity, and his candle threw its penetrating beams into the dark recesses of the countless homes of the poor, whose tears mingle with ours at his untimely end. The "prayer of want and the plaint of woe" always touched his generous heart. We are all better for having known SYDNEY P. EPES, and the world is better for his having lived in it.

Truth was to him as a pearl, that showed best in the light of open day and needed no artifice to disclose its purity. He had no patience with the semblance of delusion that tampered with it. He had lofty ambition and achieved distinguished honor, but was ever free from the canker, envy, in his efforts to excel.

In his death he exemplified the life described by the Psalmist as one—

That walketh uprightly, and worketh righteously, and speaketh the truth in his heart.

It is my sad privilege to plant a flower on his grave, watered with the tears of memory, and thus to pay my last tribute to him whose death was the crown of a useful life.

Mr. CLAYTON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, again, and for the tenth time, I believe, since the election of the Fifty-sixth Congress, the proceedings of this House record the death of one of its members. Neither old age nor youth have been exempted from answering the summons so dreadful to living men.

Those of us who have been intimately associated with SYDNEY

P. EPES for the last three years can hardly yet realize that he has gone from among us forever. A few weeks ago he was with us and of us, apparently in the full enjoyment of health. With fondness do we remember his genial manners, pleasant words, and manly deportment. With sorrow do we recollect his short and intense suffering, and then the sheeted form and coffined dead.

Yes, this useful member, upright man, and my dear friend has taken his last part in legislation and has gone hence in obedience to immutable law. The lofty soul has fled its tenement, and the youthful and once vigorous form now sleeps the dreamless sleep, in the bosom of his beloved Virginia. We can do no more than lament his death, and we can do no less than pay just tribute to his memory.

Mr. EPES was a man of decided convictions and strong sentiments, sincere in all his acts and utterances. He never willingly gave cause for offense, and he taught and exemplified the gospel of cheerfulness. He knew that the tragedies of life were manifold and unavoidable, and that complaints and tears are not as blessed to his fellow-man as the sunlight of smiles.

He was born at Sunnyside, Va., in 1865, and he crowded into his short career the honors of having been a member of the house of delegates of that State, register of lands, and twice a member of the Congress.

Standing with uncovered heads by the newly made grave and by his inanimate body, we asked why Death selected so shining a mark. We do not know. Just as he had reached mature manhood, why was he stricken down, while others who have seen "the three score and ten" were spared? We do not know. Why, just as he had become, by service and experience, fortified by youth and vigor of mind and body, most useful to the good people who elected him to Congress, was he called hence? We do not know. Why was he taken so soon from the dear young wife and the sweet little children? And again we do not know.

It is vain to speculate upon the mysteries of death.

Behold, thou hast made my days as it were a span long, and mine age is even as nothing in respect of thee; and verily every man living is altogether vanity.

For man walketh in a vain shadow, and disquieteth himself in vain; he heapeth up riches, and can not tell who shall gather them.

And now, Lord, what is my hope? Truly my hope is even in thee.

Our hope is voiced by the man of afflictions and patience.

I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another.

This is the philosophy of the Christian religion. This is the truth that was taught by the blessed Master. This is the hope that sustains and comforts us in our severest afflictions.

In "God's acre," beneath the spreading limbs of sturdy oaks, we laid to rest all that was mortal of our dead friend, and loving hands hid the newly made grave beneath a wilderness of flowers. His family and friends mourn his death, his State and country lament the loss of his services, and we, his associates, have come to read from the volume of his life, and in honest friendship to write the last page; for there can be nothing more added to the career of SYDNEY P. EPES.

Let bruised hearts be bound up and the widow and the orphans comforted, for some sweet day will come when those who now grieve most will rejoice with him in the glory everlasting.

[Mr. JONES of Virginia addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, death has made frequent visits to this Chamber within a very brief period. More than once upon this side and upon that a desk draped in mourning and covered with flowers has caused us to ask who is dead and suppress for the moment at least political differences in the presence of the Grim Reaper. Now one from Pennsylvania; again one from Kentucky; now from Massachusetts, and again from Virginia.

To-day the aged are summoned; to-morrow the young and strong are stricken down.

It seems but yesterday that SYDNEY P. EPES was strolling about the lobby full of life, the genial, warm-hearted Virginian. To-day he sleeps in his grave near Blackstone, among the people he loved and who loved and honored him.

I first met him in the Fifty-fifth Congress, to which he was elected by 2,500 majority, and saw him unseated for partisan reasons. He accepted the decision, went back to his district, and when the people again had a chance to right the wrong that was done, he was returned by an increased majority to the Fifty-sixth Congress.

He was the very soul of honor, and the future looked bright to and for him.

It seems but in the course of nature when man has attained his three-score and ten that he should be gathered to his fathers, but that the young and vigorous should seems unnatural. Mr. EPES was devoted to his work in Congress and was familiar with the great measures presented for consideration and always alive to every interest of his constituents. A Democrat and a partisan, yet he always respected the opinions of those who honestly differed with him.

It was always pleasant to meet him, with his cultivated, courtly bearing. His cordial manner and gentle nature made him courted socially, and no one in Congress had more devoted friends than SYDNEY EPES.

I am glad to say a word in his memory to-day.

To the heartbroken and disconsolate widow and children I extend my warmest sympathies in their affliction.

He leaves a reputation of which they can justly feel proud. Those who knew him best appreciated him most.

He was brave, courageous, and noble in his nature. Such a reputation, merited as it was, is a valuable heritage to his children.

The purest treasure mortal times afford
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam, or painted clay.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, there are two or three gentlemen who desire to submit remarks, but who are not present. I ask unanimous consent that they be allowed to print remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRIGGS). The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that members may be permitted to print remarks in the RECORD. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (at 3 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.). In accordance with the resolutions already adopted, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the House will now stand adjourned until Monday next, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of law and fact in the case of the sloop Betsey, Peleg Blankinship, master, against the United States, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. KLEBERG, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9285) to grant lands to the State of Alabama for the purpose of education of colored students at Montgomery, Ala., and for the use of the State Normal College at Troy, Ala., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 767); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9202) granting a pension to Alvin Seagroves, late private in Company L, Second Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 761); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8888) granting a pension to Henry O'Connor, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 762); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 26, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

LETTER OF EMILIO AGUINALDO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of the 16th instant, stating that the letter of Emilio Aguinaldo called for in the resolution is not in the possession of the War Department, and the only knowledge that the Department has of the letter is contained in the inclosures accompanying the letter of the commanding general, Department of the Pacific and Eighth Army Corps, etc., and also that the Department has made diligent search and careful inquiry for the papers and documents referred to but not inclosed in the communication, as shown by copies of correspondence appended hereto; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 22d instant, a report and accompanying tables from the Comptroller of the Currency relative to the number of applications for charters of national banks received since July 1, 1899; their capitalization; the number and capitalization of banks whose charters have terminated during that time; the applications for the same period of the previous year, the capitalization; and the number and capital of national banks the charters of which have expired during that time, etc.

The Chair thinks this is in response to a resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. It is in response to a resolution offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication and accompanying papers will be printed and lie on the table, if there be no objection.

ELECTION IN CUBA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 21st instant, certain information relative to the qualifications required to entitle a person to vote at the coming election in the island of Cuba; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

TRANSPORT SHIPS.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ALLEN. On the 8th of January I introduced a resolution, directed to the War Department, calling for information respecting the boats and transports in use by the War Department or used in the Spanish-American war, the price paid for their purchase, and also a list of those that have been sold and the price received. I should like to ask if that resolution has been answered by the War Department?

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the date?

Mr. ALLEN. The date of the resolution was the 8th of January, and it passed the Senate on the 9th.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that no reply has as yet been received to the resolution.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, I rise to a personal explanation. I hold in my hand a copy of the Star of Friday, March 23, 1900. I read the following under the heading, "A matter of money:"

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTION IN RETURN FOR PUERTO RICAN TARIFF—SERIOUS STATEMENT OF A REPUBLICAN.

* * * * * * *

"The action of the Iowa legislature can not affect the situation in Congress. The deal has been made; it is a matter of money for the campaign, and the tariff measure will be carried through."

This statement was made by a Republican member of the House who supported the bill in the House by his vote.

"You may as well set it down that the deal will be carried out," he added. "The carrying out of the recommendation of the President for free trade with Puerto Rico would have deprived the party of a very considerable contribution; the adoption of the reverse policy insures a very large contribution.

"The possible unpopularity of the Puerto Rican tariff was balanced against the certainty of money to use in the campaign, and the decision was in favor of the campaign contribution. It was not expected that the storm of protest would be as strong as it is, but it is now too late for a change."

In reference to the statement supposed to have been "given to a reporter of this paper by a Republican member of the House who voted in favor of the House bill," I want to say, Mr. President, that I do not believe any Republican member of the House, whether he voted for or against that bill, ever made that statement. I wish to add that I believe the statement in itself carries with it the evidence that it is a malicious falsehood. Nobody knows any such thing to be a fact, and I hope that measures will be taken to investigate and find at whose door this falsehood lies. I brand it as a malicious lie.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

He also presented petitions of Excelsior Grange, No. 18; of Eureka Grange, No. 177; of Cecil Grange, No. 3, and of Liberty Grove Grange, No. 54, all Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Maryland, praying for the extension of free rural mail delivery; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of Cecil Grange, No. 3, Patrons of Husbandry, of Maryland, and a memorial of Liberty Grove Grange, No. 54, Patrons of Husbandry, of Maryland, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of reservoirs or irrigating canals for the irrigation of arid lands; which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented memorials of the Commercial, of Vincennes; the Union-Dispatch, of Tipton; the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, the Medical and Surgical Monitor, and the Missionary Tidings, of Indianapolis; the Laporte Daily and Weekly Herald, and the publisher of Vaccination, of Terre Haute, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PROCTOR presented a memorial of the board of directors of the Vermont State Prison and House of Correction, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to restrict or prohibit the interstate transportation of prison-made goods; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 7130, American Federation of Labor, of St. Johnsbury, Vt., praying that all the remaining public lands be held for the benefit of the whole people, and that no grants to the title thereof be made to any but actual settlers and home builders thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a letter in the line of a memorial from Oscar J. Piper, of Meredith Center, N. H., who represents himself as being an invalid soldier, and he protests against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, on the ground that it would prevent him from procuring standard works at a low price.

I will venture to suggest that in view of recent action taken in another body on this measure it occurs to me that there is not much danger that it will become a law during the present session of Congress.

I move that the letter be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the Southwest Missouri Millers' Association, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. ALLEN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Mason City, Nebr., and a memorial of the Business Men's Association of Kearney, Nebr., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade and Transportation of New York, praying that the President be authorized to appoint a committee, to consist of five members of the board, to consider the Puerto Rican tariff matter; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BEVERIDGE presented petitions of the Buckeye Manufacturing Company, of Anderson; the Rude Brothers Manufacturing Company, of Liberty; Guar, Scott & Co., of Richmond, and the South Bend Iron Works, of South Bend, all in the State of Indiana, praying that an appropriation be made to provide for the construction of a new fireproof Patent Office building; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 227, Iron Molders' Union, of Richmond, Ind., praying that the remaining public lands be held for the benefit of the whole people, and that no grants of title to the same be given to any but actual settlers and home builders thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented memorials of the Missionary Tidings, of Indianapolis; the Laporte Daily and Weekly Herald, of Laporte; the News, of Ridgeville; the Reflector, of Argus; the Magnet, of Angola; the Southern Indiana Tribune, of Newburg, and the Democrat, of Kentland, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Ira A. Smith and 39 other citizens of Bridgewater, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Soldiers' Homes, immigrant stations, and all other Government buildings, reservations, and grounds; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THURSTON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Broken Bow, Nebr., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of the Northern California Indian Association; of sundry citizens of San Jose, Cal.; of sundry citizens of Los Angeles, Cal.; of the Indian Rights Association and sundry citizens of Amite City, La., and of Simon H. Gage and sundry other citizens of Ithaca, N. Y., praying for the reorganization of the classified service of the Indian departments; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Company E, First Regiment

Infantry, National State Guard of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to improve the armament of the militia; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the North Side Board of Trade, of New York City, praying for the construction of the Harlem Kills Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5049) to settle the title to real estate in the city of Sante Fe, N. Mex., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2773) to amend sections 179, 180, 181, 182, and 183 of chapter 12, Title I, of an act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska, and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district," approved March 3, 1899, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3421) to grant lands to the State of Alabama for the purposes of education of colored students at Montgomery, Ala., and of the State Normal College at Troy, Ala., reported it with an amendment to the title.

Mr. HEITFELD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7649) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the city of Elreno, Okla., for cemetery purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3488) to amend an act fixing the fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts in certain States and Territories, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5485) providing that the State of Wyoming be permitted to relinquish to the United States certain lands heretofore selected and to select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 705) for the relief of certain citizens of Montana claiming the benefit of the homestead laws, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2991) confirming two locations of Chippewa half-breed scrip in the State (then Territory) of Utah, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments:

A bill (S. 249) fixing the salaries and compensation of the chief justices and associate justices of the supreme courts in the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, and making appropriations to pay the same; and

A bill (S. 3450) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 248) for the relief of Winslow Warren, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3430) to increase the efficiency of the Subsistence Department of the United States Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 3791) for the relief of the trustees of Union University, of Murfreesboro, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3792) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians for balance of annuities provided for by the treaty of July 23, 1851; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3793) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULBERSON introduced a bill (S. 3794) to provide for the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande River between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 3795) improving the Little Kanawha River, West Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. By request I introduce a bill of a character that I have never favored in the Senate; but as a number of such bills have been passed, I present this, with the request that it be read the first and second times, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill (S. 3795) to define renovated butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation thereof was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 3797) granting an increase of pension to John H. Streeter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 3798) granting an increase of pension to David H. Pierson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3799) to remove charge of desertion from the military record of Herman E. Colby; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 3800) to provide for the purchase of a site for a public building in the city of Grand Island, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 3801) to remove the charge of desertion against David A. Lane; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 3802) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of James D. Sullivan, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. BATE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for grading or paving S and Decatur streets from Twenty-third street to Phelps Place, and Twenty-second street from Decatur street to S street, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS OF THE WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to report to the Senate the names and services of soldiers of the war of the American Revolution of record in the War Department, in order that the report when made may be printed.

STATISTICS RELATIVE TO SOLDIERS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day.

The resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN on the 24th instant was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the following information: A statement of the number of soldiers, volunteer and regular, who have been killed and died from wounds received in the Philippine Islands since the close of the war between Spain and the United States of America; the number of regular and volunteer soldiers who have died from disease during that period; the number who have been wounded in action or otherwise, and what proportion of them are still incapacitated for duty; the number who have committed suicide during said period; the percentage of sick, disabled, and invalid soldiers therein; what contagious diseases have been prevalent, if any, in the military camps on the islands of the Philippine Archipelago during said time, and what steps, if any, have been taken for the better protection of their health, and a statement of the number of soldiers who have become insane since the close of the Spanish-American war while in service in the Philippine Archipelago, and the disposition which has been made of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on Saturday, when this resolution was presented, I asked that it should go over that I might examine it. I have done so, and while I do not know that I shall oppose its passage, I wish the Senator from Nebraska would state precisely what the necessity is for the adoption of the resolution. It calls for information on seven distinct points in connection with hostilities in the Philippine Islands; first, a statement of the number of soldiers, volunteer and regular, who have been killed and died from wounds received in the Philippine Islands since August 1, 1898; second, the number of regular and volunteer soldiers who have died from disease during that period; third, the number who have been wounded in action, or otherwise, and what proportion of them are still incapacitated for duty; fourth, the number who have committed suicide during said period; fifth, the percentage of sick, disabled, and invalid soldiers therein; sixth, what contagious diseases have been prevalent, if any, in the military camps on the islands of the Philippine Archipelago during said time, and what steps, if any, have been taken for the better protection of their health; and, seventh, a statement of the number of soldiers who have become insane since the close of the Spanish-American war while in service in the Philippine Archipelago, and the disposition which has been made of them.

I simply wish to say, Mr. President, before the Senator from Nebraska takes the floor, that I have very pronounced opinions in regard to the introduction of resolutions in this body and their passage without due consideration. I have submitted an amendment to the rules, which I presume never will be heard of again, providing that when objection is made to such resolutions they shall go to the appropriate committees for consideration. I hope that the Committee on Military Affairs will see the propriety of insisting that this resolution shall go to that committee for their consideration and investigation before it is acted upon.

I will venture to suggest, Mr. President, that as I read the resolution I can come to but one conclusion, and that is that if there is any purpose in it, it is to place before the country certain facts which will not very likely be properly considered, and which will result in operating against the enlistment of men for service in the Philippine Islands. Very extravagant statements will go out to the country concerning this matter. As an illustration, I have seen it stated that a great many soldiers have become insane and that there has been a very considerable loss of life. That is undoubtedly true, but it should also be remembered that if those soldiers had remained at home, some of them would have died and very likely some of them would have become insane.

On Friday last I received a letter from a claim agent in which, alluding to a young soldier who voluntarily enlisted from my State, he ventured to suggest that he had been murdered in the Philippine Islands. He had been killed in open battle in defense of the Constitution, in defense of the flag, in defense of his Government; and yet such extravagant statements are made. A determined effort in certain quarters seems to be on foot to place upon the Government the onus and disgrace, if I may use that word, of every death which occurs in the Philippine Islands on the part of the soldiers who are defending our Government and its institutions.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator mean to imply that I seek this information for ulterior purposes?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will simply make the suggestion that I of course impute no dishonorable motive to the Senator from Nebraska, but I think in the present temper of a portion of our people and in view of the persistent misrepresentations made in certain newspapers of our country and on the part of some men who style themselves anti-imperialists, it is well for us to move slowly in matters of this kind.

I am very fully persuaded that a resolution involving such questions as are propounded to the Secretary of War in this resolution should at least have consideration by the proper standing committee of the Senate before the inquiries are sent to the Department. I shall not make that motion. It is in the hands of the Committee on Military Affairs, and if they choose to allow the resolution to pass I certainly shall be content.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. Will it be in order for me to move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not see how the Senator from Connecticut gets the floor when I have addressed the Chair before him. There may be some parliamentary——

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not know the Senator had addressed the Chair.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator saw me or could see me on my feet, and he knew I had just addressed the Chair.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can easily see the Senator at any time.

Mr. ALLEN. I say frankly I do not like that kind of pettifogging conduct. It is not due in this Chamber or elsewhere. I have no ulterior motive in presenting this resolution. I want to know what the facts are. I am entitled to know what they are. Whether I am in harmony with the Senator from New Hampshire or not in my political views, this Administration has no right to keep the facts from me as a citizen, to say nothing about my capacity as an officer of the Government, charged with some degree of responsibility for legislation.

What is there about conditions in the Philippine Islands that the Senator from New Hampshire is so tender about? Why does he not want the people to know how many men are insane there or have become insane? Why does he not want the people to know how many men have been incapacitated by contagious diseases? Why does he not want the people to know how many men have been killed there in engagements with Filipinos since the close of the American-Spanish war?

Mr. President, in short, what is there about the condition of the soldiers in the Philippine Islands that the American people should not be fully informed of the situation? They are American boys. They come from New Hampshire and Nebraska and Maine, and from every State and Territory in this Union. They are the sons of our fellow-citizens, many of them our own sons. Why should we not understand what is transpiring in that island?

I understand that a disposition has grown up in the last few months in the Departments not to give out any information. They say these conditions are for their information and not for the information of the people, and every form of tactics that can be invented is resorted to in order to obscure the facts from the people.

Here is a resolution that I called attention to a moment ago, introduced by me on the 8th of January and adopted by the Senate on the 9th of January, asking for information from the War Department that, in my judgment, could have been gathered in twenty-four hours. That resolution has never been answered, and it never will be answered, in my judgment. The people will never know the truth unless there is a Senate or a House investigation to ascertain the truth, and probably they would never know the truth even then.

Now, Mr. President, this is information with reference to the condition of the Army. The Senator from New Hampshire says that it is for the purpose of discouraging enlistments. I have never discouraged an enlistment in the Army in my life. I have at one time in my life enlisted in the Army.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I did not quite say that. What I said was that, in my judgment, this matter going out to the country and not being fully understood, would have that tendency. That is what I said.

Mr. ALLEN. I served three years and two months in the Army of the United States, when a mere boy, at a time, Mr. President, when there was war, when it was not a Sunday-school entertainment. It is not recorded of the Senator from New Hampshire that his plume waved in the forefront of battle at that time.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a fact; but, Mr. President, if the Senator knew all the facts he would not make that statement as any suggestion against my willingness to serve.

Mr. ALLEN. No, I do not do that, Mr. President; but it strikes me that a man who is surcharged with patriotism at a time when it does not require a great deal to be patriotic ought to give some earnest of his patriotism at a time when it requires something to be patriotic.

Merely prating about the flag, whether it will be run up or hauled down, signifies nothing. We are dealing with a great question here, the question of the relation of the United States to what is termed, I suppose, in polite official circles, our new possessions; that is, we have come into possession of a lot of islands with several million of semicivilized people whom we must deal with.

Now, Mr. President, I do not care whether this resolution is voted up or voted down, so far as I am individually concerned. I do not care whether it goes to the Committee on Military Affairs or to the Committee on Woman Suffrage; it would receive just about as good treatment with the one committee as with the other. I want to say, and I say it deliberately, and in doing so I may anticipate the purpose of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the object of the motion to refer this resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs is to destroy and smother it. That is the purpose.

Whenever this resolution goes to the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. President, it might just as well go into the fire and be burned up, because the majority of that committee are in accord with the present Administration, and if it is the wish of the Administration that this information shall be secreted from the public that will be done.

I have asked for this information. I believe, Mr. President, there is an unusual amount of mortality in the army in the Philippine Islands. I do not believe there is an unusual amount of mortality there by wounds received in battle. I think the percentage of loss is very small so far as that is concerned. They have no battles; they are mere émeutes, mere skirmishes, where one or two men may lose their lives, and two or three be slightly wounded. But I believe that the climatic conditions are such in the Philippine Archipelago that an American citizen can not live there two years without his health being practically destroyed, if the information I have be true. It is to the effect that the whole army of the United States now in the Philippine Islands will have to be withdrawn within a few months and fresh men sent there or our army will be paralyzed and absolutely useless in consequence of disease.

I have no hesitancy, Mr. President, in saying here and now that if any young man should ask me whether he should enlist in the Army of the United States to go into the Philippines to fight I would tell him no, and I would take the consequences of it. That is all I have to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that the Senator from Nebraska has seen fit to make a personal attack upon me because of my suggestion that this matter should go to the appropriate standing committee for consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me interrupt the Senator. I have no desire and no intention, not the slightest thought, to make any personal assault upon the Senator. I do not want him to understand it that way.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to hear the disclaimer. It is not the first time the Senator from Nebraska has taken occasion to suggest that he served in the Army and I did not. If the Senator knew all the facts connected with my life at the time when he was fighting valiantly in the Army he would know that my service was offered to the Government and was declined, I think on insufficient grounds. We all know that the Senator was a brave soldier, and I honor him for it. No man honors him more than I.

I do hope, Mr. President, that this may be the last time in the Senate, when I exercise my right under the rules of this body to either oppose a resolution or suggest its commitment to a committee, that I shall be met by observations similar to those that have fallen from the lips of my friend from Nebraska. I have no disposition to smother this resolution. If the Committee on Military Affairs, after consultation with the proper authorities, think it is wise that this information shall be communicated to the Senate, let it be communicated to the Senate; but I think it is not the best way for us to pass the resolution offhand, and to call for this information and have it sent to the country garbled as it may be, misrepresented as it will be, and that false impressions may be produced upon the minds of our young men in reference to the condition of affairs in the Philippine Islands.

I do not know whether our soldiers are to be recalled during the next few months or not. I have been informed that the rate of mortality is not high in our army, and that the percentage of sickness is not beyond that which might be expected. But, however that may be, Mr. President, I simply venture to suggest to the Committee on Military Affairs (I did not make the motion myself) that if they agreed with me a motion would be made to refer the resolution, and if that motion is made I shall feel it my duty to vote to have it so referred. That is all that I shall do in the matter.

Mr. BURROWS. Can we have the resolution again read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire insists that the purpose of sending this resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs is to prevent the possibility of garbled information reaching the country. I submit, Mr. President, the way to put an end to the possibility of garbled information reaching the country respecting the matters covered by the resolution is to have official information from the War Department. When the reply of the Secretary of War comes in answer to the resolution, if the resolution shall ever reach him, it will be certified as official; it will come from the records in the War Office; it will go out to the country, if it goes at all, as information from the War Office.

Now, if that is not done, Mr. President, the very danger the Senator from New Hampshire apprehends will no doubt be presented. The newspapers will gather this information from such sources as they may have at hand, and probably they will not be as accurate as the War Office would be, and they will scatter that information throughout the country.

I was reading but a short time ago that over forty commissioned officers in our army in the Philippines had committed suicide within the last five or six months and that a very great percentage of our troops there, through climatic conditions and from climatic causes, had become insane, the worst cases being sent back to the United States and the more harmless cases treated by the Army surgeons in the Philippine Islands. I believe, and I do not think any sane person can refuse to believe, that you can not take a man from this climate and this country and transfer him to that tropical region and expose him to all the hardships of campaigning without vitally affecting his health and his mental condition.

Mr. President, I insist that the policy inaugurated by the Senator from New Hampshire of obscuring or secreting these facts from the American people is un-American. There is a namby-pamby idea broadspread in this Chamber, and in the other House for that matter, that the Senate and the House of Representatives know so much more about how this Government ought to be conducted than the people themselves, that valuable information ought to be secreted from the country.

It ought, Mr. President, to be an impeachable offense. A man ought to be tried and summarily dismissed from the highest position that he can possibly occupy in this Government who would secrete information from the people who have elevated him to power. It is not your Government, it is not my Government, it is not the Government of the Senator from New Hampshire. We are mere agents of the people who sent us here. They are the principals. They are responsible for this Government, and they do not select us to come here and cover up the information that they are entitled to know. It is their information.

That is all I desire to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say in regard to this matter that I think it better that the inquiry should be made because I know the Senator from Nebraska will be disappointed in the sum total of the agony. I want it so worded that it will develop the whole case, all the facts, if necessary, and a statement in comparison with other great armies under circumstances as nearly analogous as may be. I promise to be active about it, so far as I am concerned. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN subsequently said: I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], which was a few moments ago referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the resolution the following:

And that the comparative losses and disabilities from all causes as between the white troops and the colored troops in the Philippine Islands be stated in the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama presents a proposed amendment to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The amendment will be printed and referred to the same committee, in the absence of objection.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 24th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 427) for the relief of A. F. Fleet, superintendent of the Missouri Military Academy, Mexico, Mo.; and

An act (S. 3138) to provide for necessary repairs to the steamer Thetis for service as a revenue cutter.

MINOR COINAGE.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to report a bill from the Committee on Finance in relation to the coining laws, and I shall be glad to have it put at once upon its passage. I think it will lead to no discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the report will be received.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1612) providing for the purchase of metal and the coinage of minor coins and the distribution and redemption of said coins, to report it favorably with amendments. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. To what coins does that bill exclusively relate?

Mr. ALLISON. It relates wholly to the minor coins of nickel and copper. Under the existing law those coins can only be manufactured at the Philadelphia mint; and they must be transported from there, either at the expense of the Government or at the expense of the persons desiring to use them, to every other portion of our country.

The legislation is especially desired by the people on the Pacific coast, where the coins must be sent, of course, for distribution. The object is to allow them to be manufactured at any of the mints of the United States in suitable quantities for distribution. It is purely a matter of convenience.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill simply authorizes the present minor coinage to be executed at the different mints, as I understand?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; at the different mints. There is nothing else in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. To what does the section of the Revised Statutes named in the bill refer?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the section requiring such coins to be manufactured at Philadelphia.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], in addition to what has been so well said by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], that we have neither nickel nor copper coins made at the San Francisco mint, where we have every facility for coining them, and the superintendent of the mint informs me that the extra expense will not exceed $300 for performing this work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was, in section 1, line 4, after the words "authorized by," to strike out "this act" and insert "law;" in line 5, after the words "United States," to strike out "shall, upon the recommendation of the Director of the Mint and in such sums as he may direct" and insert "may;" in line 8, after the word "Treasury," to insert "in such sums as he may direct;" in the same line, after the word "of" where it occurs the second time, to strike out the words "the mints at Philadelphia, San Francisco, and New Orleans, at which establishments, until otherwise provided by law, such coinage shall be carried on" and insert "any of the coinage mints of the United States;" on page 2, at the end of line 6, after the word "coins," to strike out "as hereinafter provided" and insert "when delivered from the mints;" so as to make the section read:

That for the purchase of metal for the minor coinage authorized by law a sum not exceeding $200,000 in lawful money of the United States may be transferred by the Secretary of the Treasury, in such sums as he may direct, to the credits of the superintendents of any of the coinage mints of the United States. The superintendents, with the approval of the Director of the Mint as to price, terms, and quantity, shall purchase the metal required for such coinage by public advertisement, and the lowest and best bid shall be accepted, the fineness of the metals to be determined on the mint assay. The gain arising from the coinage of such metals into coin of a nominal value, exceeding the cost thereof, shall be credited to the special fund denominated the minor-coinage profit fund; and this fund shall be charged with the wastage incurred in such coinage and with the cost of distributing said coins when delivered from the mints. The balance remaining to the credit of this fund, and any balance of profits accrued from minor coinage under former acts, shall be, from time to time, and at least twice a year, covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 2, line 13, after the words "of the," to strike out "Director of the Mint" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury;" in the same line, after the word "delivered," to strike out "in any of the principal" and insert "from the mints or from the Treasury or subtreasuries to any of the important;" after the words "United States," in line 14, to strike out "at the cost of the mints" and insert "free of charge;" in line 15, after the word "transportation," to strike out "and shall be exchangeable at par at the mints named, at the discretion of the superintendents, for any other coins of copper, bronze, or copper nickel heretofore authorized by law;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the minor coins authorized by this act may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be delivered from the mints or from the Treasury or subtreasuries to any of the important cities and towns of the United States free of charge for transportation; and it shall be lawful for the Treasurer and the several assistant treasurers and depositaries of the United States to redeem, in lawful money, under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, all copper, bronze, and copper-nickel coins authorized by law when presented in sums of not less than $20; and whenever, under this authority, these coins are presented for redemption in such quantity as to show the amount outstanding to be redundant, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to direct that such coinage shall cease until otherwise authorized by him.

SEC. 3. That sections 29 and 30 of an act entitled "An act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States," approved February 12, 1873, are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I will simply state that these amendments were prepared at the office of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the Director of the Mint, so as to make the original bill as introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] more effective.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3419, being the Alaskan bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, when on Saturday last the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] asked unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill which is now before the Senate I was absent, and the Senator commented somewhat on my absence. I desire to say, sir, that if I had been here I should have favored, not perhaps the proposition for unanimous consent, but I should certainly have favored the taking up of the bill this morning. The Senator from Montana then said:

The Senator from Missouri objects at the present time, I believe, because of the absence of the Senator from Tennessee. The request is not made because of the absence of the Senator from Tennessee. I have sent pages about the building to endeavor to find the Senator from Tennessee, who has been steadily objecting to the consideration of this bill. I do not wish the Senator from Tennessee to accomplish by his absence what I hope he will not be able to accomplish in the future by his presence. I think that Senator contemplates, as does the Senator from Missouri, giving attention to this bill at some time; but permit me to say that the way to dispose of the bill is not to continuously object to its consideration.

While there is nothing much in this statement, Mr. President, yet I think it does me a very marked injustice. I was not absent from the Capitol. I was simply out of the Chamber at a proper time of the day for lunch, having gone to the Senate lunch room with two of my fellow-Senators at their invitation, and I suppose we did not stay there exceeding fifteen or twenty minutes. When I returned I met a page coming for me, who informed me as to what was going on in the Senate, but when I reached the Senate Chamber the discussion was over, and I find in the RECORD what I have read.

I only say this in justification of myself in consequence of the remark made by the Senator from Montana. I do not think he made it unkindly. But my objection to the remark is that it may seem to carry with it an idea that I was absent for the purpose of preventing the consideration of this bill. That is not the case. That is a mistake on the part of the Senator from Montana, and I wanted to put myself right upon it.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the Senator from Montana went on to say, knowing the fact that I am a member of the committee, and that I was in part instrumental in having that done:

We were compelled to sit here and go through the farce of reading each and every word in the bill from one end to the other, when the Revised Statutes of the United States were read pro forma in about thirty minutes.

Mr. President, I do not think it is a "farce" to carry out what the Constitution and the laws of your country and the rules of the Senate require; that is to say, that every bill shall be read three times before it can become a law.

This thing of pretending to read a bill by reading a line on a page, or a page or two in a chapter, skipping along through it in that way, I do not think is carrying out the letter, and certainly not the spirit of the Constitution, the law, and the rule of this Senate. Therefore, I did attend here and insisted that every word of the bill should be read, and I am responsible for it.

It is a bill which is very remarkable. It comprises more than 600 pages of printed matter. It carries with it the lives and the liberties of a people; it carries with it the protection of their property, the protection of their honor; and the people who are now in Alaska, in an inchoate state, if I may say so, are awaiting some such action as this, and, therefore, it is a matter of great importance that proper legislation should be enacted.

I differ with the idea of having this tremendous bill of six hundred and odd pages passed without due and proper consideration by the Congress of the United States, legislating for the district of Alaska. I believe by the legislation of Congress heretofore that district was to be governed by the laws of Oregon until the people should form themselves into a Territorial government; and then in a Territorial form they would have their legislature and have their local laws such as they wanted, which would be more applicable to their condition than any laws which could be passed for them by the Congress of the United States. That was the idea I had, for I believe in local self-government.

But when the chairman of this committee and other Senators saw fit to adopt a different course, and went to the trouble to get up this bill, I cooperated with them. I think it is a most admirable bill in some respects, while I do not agree to all of its provisions. I then had no objection to its consideration, and cooperated with the committee in aiding them and doing what I could. I took my share of the bill and carefully went over 150 pages of it to examine and make corrections. I am responsible for that much of the bill, as a lawyer and as a Senator, which extends from page 150 to page 300. This was my share, and when the bill came before the Senate I thought it my duty to see that it was read in full, and not go through a false pretense of reading it.

As to the reading of the bill being a farce, Mr. President, if there is a farce connected with the reading of any bill here, the farce is in pretending to read a bill and never reading it; beginning and reading a line here and there and skipping a page or two, and then reading another line or two. That kind of proceeding in such a grave and important matter is a farce. But the law requires that every bill shall be read; and certainly an important bill like this, involving life and liberty and rights of property of a large number of people who are looking to us for justice and right, should be read in full. The Senator, I think, is also a little unhappy in his reference when he says:

We were compelled to sit here and go through the farce of reading each and every word in the bill from one end to the other, when the Revised Statutes of the United States were read pro forma in about thirty minutes.

Yes, Mr. President, and there were grave errors which were committed in that work, and there was one that has gone into history which has upturned the interests of this country and its politics. It was in that way that the statute passed in 1873, known as "the crime of 1873," was perpetrated. It was covered up in those very Revised Statutes, and that is the way it came to trouble this country and rend parties from center to circumference. It was not done with the knowledge of this body, for those Revised Statutes were only read pro forma in thirty minutes. That was the very thing that caused the trouble.

To prevent such a thing as that and to carry out the duty we owe as Senators to the people of this country, to its taxpayers, to those whose lives and liberties are in a measure in our hands, every bill that comes in here of importance should be read, and read as the rules require it to be read. That is what I insisted upon in regard to the Alaska bill. If that is called a farce, very good. I am a party to it. I came here and performed my part of that farce night after night at the request of the Senator who had the bill in charge, as I did on all occasions when he so desired.

Mr. President, I have nothing more to say about this matter, except that I want to assist in the passage of the bill. If I had been here on Saturday, I should have said that I would agree to fixing a time for taking the bill up. I am a member of the committee which reported it, and, as I have stated, one part of the bill was assigned to me for examination and correction. I feel it my duty to look after it and have done so and will continue so to do.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the language to which the Senator refers, and to which he objects, was used by me in reply to what appeared to be an intimation from the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the request for unanimous consent was preferred because of the temporary absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]. That presumption or assumption I desired to controvert at that point, and therefore stated that the request was not made because of the absence of the Senator from Tennessee.

The Senator's attendance in this Chamber is conspicuous for its steadiness; his attention to the business presented in this body no one has cause to question, and his constituents may well be proud of his painstaking care and continuous attention to the public business.

Mr. BATE. I should like to hear from the Senator what he meant by the language that he did not wish me to accomplish by my absence what he hoped I would not be able to accomplish in the future by my presence?

Mr. CARTER. There was no intention whatever of reflecting upon the Senator, because I assume that if the Senator were present the motion would prevail to take the bill up at a given time, a proper time, and unanimous consent was at that time sought, and was opposed apparently upon the ground that, the Senator being absent, the request should not be at that time preferred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending to the bill offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. CARTER. In the absence of the Senator from Nevada, I ask that that amendment may be temporarily passed over; and in lieu submit the amendment which I send to the desk for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be temporarily laid aside, and the amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In Title I, chapter 1, section 4, page 5, line 33, after the word "court," it is proposed to insert:

> And to employ an official court stenographer under the same terms and conditions as are or may be provided for district courts of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I offered an amendment when the bill was last up for consideration in the Senate, which I ask may be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from California indicate where the amendment is to come in?

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the amendment be inserted on page 25, at the end of section 29.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, at the end of section 29, it is proposed to insert:

> SEC. 460. That any person or persons, corporation, or company prosecuting or attempting to prosecute any of the following lines of business within the district of Alaska shall first apply for and obtain license so to do from a district court or a subdivision thereof in said district, and pay for said license for the respective lines of business and trade as follows, to wit:
>
> Abstract offices, $50 per annum.
> Banks, $250 per annum.
> Boarding houses having accommodations for 10 or more guests, $15 per annum.
> Brokers (money, bill, note, and stock), $100 per annum.
> Billiard rooms, $15 per table per annum.
> Bowling alleys, $15 per annum.

> Theaters, $100 per annum.
> Waterworks, furnishing water for sale, $50 per annum.
>
> SEC. 2. That section 463 of chapter 44, Title II, of the above-named act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:
>
> "SEC. 463. That the licenses provided for in this act shall be issued by the clerk of the district court or any subdivision thereof in compliance with the order of the court or judge thereof duly made and entered; and the clerk of the court shall keep a full record of all applications for license and of all recommendations for and remonstrances against the granting of licenses and of the action of the court thereon: Provided, That the clerk of said court and each division thereof shall give bond or bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Treasury may require, and in such form as the Attorney-General may approve, and all moneys received for licenses by him or them under this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."
> SEC. 3. That section 468 of chapter 44, Title II, of the above-named act be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following, to wit: "And provided further, That all moneys collected as a license upon the liquor traffic as herein provided shall be set aside for and devoted to the maintenance of the public schools of the district of Alaska."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, on page 522 of the bill under consideration it is provided that 50 per cent of all the licenses collected shall be paid into the general school fund. Therefore there is no necessity, I think, for that part of my amendment on page 5, commencing with the words "And provided further," in line 23, and going to the end of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California modifies his amendment——

Mr. PERKINS. I modify my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By striking out the words which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 5 of the proposed amendment, beginning in line 23, the amendment is modified by striking out:

> And provided further, That all moneys collected as a license upon the liquor traffic as herein provided shall be set aside for and devoted to the maintenance of the public schools of the district of Alaska.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say in this connection, Mr. President, that last year the licenses collected in Alaska for the six months ending December 31 amounted to $152,000, and I think one-half of that amount will be quite sufficient for the school fund.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me at that point to interrupt him, I wish to say that under the section referred to by him one-half of the amount will not be paid to the school fund. One-half will only be paid to the school fund where organized towns exist, incorporated under the chapter to which the particular provision refers. Presumably nearly one-half, however, will go to the public-school fund.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the amendment which I have proposed modifies the license upon certain different classes of business by reducing it $10 per annum upon some and $5 per annum upon one other class of business, that of meat markets. It does not disturb in any manner the other licenses that now prevail in Alaska. The provisions in regard to such licenses passed last year during the closing hours of the session, when we had not time, perhaps, to consider them as carefully as we should have done; but they were taken from the laws of the District of Columbia and made applicable to Alaska. They have worked most admirably, especially in regard to the liquor-license tax.

It was then charged that the Government would be engaged in an illicit and nefarious business, by making a special liquor-license tax for one of its Territories or districts that was supposed to be prohibition district, where no liquor was to be sold. Those of us who were familiar with Alaska and its surroundings were attacked by our friends with whom we were in full sympathy, and were told that we were giving our votes and our influence toward the licensing of this illicit traffic in Alaska, notwithstanding the fact that the bill which we presented was a copy of the law which to-day governs the District of Columbia.

I wish to say to my friends who opposed us one year ago that this measure has worked most satisfactorily. I then claimed that it was in the interest of good government, in the interest of good morals, in the interest of temperance; and the result has proved that my assertion was correct. Notwithstanding that we had upon our statute books a law prohibiting the sale of liquor in Alaska, yet, as shown by the report of the collector of internal revenue of the State of Oregon, the internal-revenue district of Alaska being within that district, in 1898 he sold 324 stamp licenses for the sale of liquor in Alaska. After we passed this law and made it mandatory upon all who sold liquor to take out licenses, there was a reduction from 324 licenses to 99, a reduction in the year of 225. The result has been that the law has not only decreased intemperance in the district, but it has prevented smuggling. No longer is a premium offered to violate the law by smuggling liquor into that Territory and patronizing the British in the territory there adjoining.

I want to give, as a result of its practical workings, an object lesson which I think will come home to the strongest advocate of temperance, and I claim to be on that side. For thirty-odd years our Government tried to prohibit the sale of liquor in Alaska and failed, and so we said if we can not prohibit it we will regulate it; we will control it, and we will no longer offer a premium to men to smuggle, to commit a crime, for smuggling is a kin neighbor to crime. Half of the crimes committed in Alaska were brought about by illicit traffic in smuggling in private vessels and boats running to adjacent islands and by smuggling the liquor on other sailing boats and steamers. When prohibition existed in Alaska, there were in the town of Skagway 104 saloons, open and in full blast. After our bill controlling the traffic went into effect, after March, 1899, there were but 16 saloons. The number was reduced from 104 to 16. In the city of Sitka there were 19, and when the license law went into force it was reduced to 3. In Juneau there were 55 saloons, and when this law went into effect and they were obliged to take out licenses the number was reduced to 19. The result is that to-day we are controlling the business in Alaska, law and order prevail, and there is respect for law.

I do not know in all my experience a more forcible and stronger lesson in temperance than the working of this admirable law for the control of the traffic in Alaska. I said to my friends here who reproached us for the part we were taking in licensing this traffic, Commence in the District of Columbia; it is only 10 miles square. If you want to abolish it here, you shall have my vote; but do not go 7,000 miles away, in a district containing 578,000 square miles, and control it only theoretically, for that is what it had been for the thirty-three years that the Government controlled the district.

I am glad, Mr. President, that not one of my most zealous friends who opposed this measure a year ago has been here this year asking any modification or the repeal of any one of these laws. The governor of Alaska, the special agent of the Treasury Department, and every other Government official, as well as those of us who visit Alaska every year, are ready to bear testimony to the beneficent effect of the wide provision of the present license law. We collected last year from licenses in the district, for the different purposes embraced in the bill, $152,000. One of the amendments which I have proposed provides that vessels engaged in Alaska in the business of transporting freight and passengers, which are registered in that district and are not taxed in any other State or Territory, shall pay the nominal tax of $1 per ton upon their net tonnage. This is the only real change that is made by my proposed amendment. The amendments have been submitted to the Committee on Territories; they have been considered by the committee, and I believe there can be no objection to their adoption, and I hope they will prevail.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a single word in reply to the observations of the Senator from California. I was one of the few Senators in the last Congress who believed that we ought to stand by prohibition in Alaska. I was overruled by a very large vote, and of course it would be impossible to get a reversal of that decision. We who believe in prohibition perfectly understand that. I think the Senator from California has painted a picture that possibly may change its coloring after a little while. The licensing of the liquor traffic has been indulged in in this country and in European countries for a long term of years, and I think if the Senator will take the trouble to look up the statistics very carefully he will find that it does not to any appreciable extent anywhere reduce the amount of liquor consumed by those who are anxious to get it. I have no idea that there is anybody in the Territory of Alaska suffering to-day for a drink of any kind of spirituous liquors that he can not obtain under license just as he did obtain it under prohibition which was not enforced and which the Government of the United States did not try to enforce.

The Senator from California says that this beneficent license law has prohibited smuggling in the Territory of Alaska, and I want to ask the Senator for information, because very likely I am ignorant of the facts how this law operates to prevent smuggling any more than the old system of prohibition operated to prevent smuggling.

Mr. PERKINS. When anyone heretofore took liquor into Alaska, even as his private stores, it was immediately seized and confiscated. No permit was granted for taking it into the Territory. Notwithstanding that fact, as I have stated, there were a hundred and odd saloons in full blast in Alaska.

Mr. SHOUP. Three hundred and ten.

Mr. PERKINS. I am aware of the fact, but I am speaking from the records of the internal-revenue office. There were a hundred and four licenses. I have no doubt there were a great many more saloons—as the Senator says, 310. There is no longer any inducement for men to smuggle.

Then, again, everyone who pays the license fee is an officer of the law to see that others do not violate it. The custom-house records are the best proof of what I have said. The customs officers have found it unnecessary to continue their full quota of men in the customs service. As I said before, there is no longer any inducement to smuggle liquor into Alaska, because any one can now obtain a permit to take it in if he is a legally licensed liquor seller.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume the law may operate, of course, to legalize the transportation of liquors by private individuals for their own consumption or that of their families, but I can not for the life of me see how this marvelous law which we enacted for Alaska will prevent smuggling from Canada into Alaska if liquors can be purchased more cheaply at wholesale in Canada than they can be in Alaska, which I think is the fact.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that perhaps of which he is aware, that the Canadian tariff and the British Columbian tariff are quite as high as our own, and liquors can not be purchased very much more cheaply in Canada, for the same quality, than they can be in the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be so. I am not an expert on this question. I simply want to make one further observation. The Senator can not with justice reproach some of us who voted to sustain prohibition in Alaska because of the fact that we have a license law in the District of Columbia, because when I had an opportunity to vote on the bill regulating or pretending to regulate the traffic in intoxicating drinks in the District of Columbia I offered and supported and voted for a prohibition amendment. So I, at least, have been consistent.

Mr. President, I hope sincerely that the picture which the Senator from California has painted of good order and sobriety and temperance in Alaska is true. If license has in some one community somewhere reduced the sale and consumption of liquor, it is an important fact to have placed upon record, because the most diligent investigations and inquiries that have been made the world over on this subject have proved two things conclusively. One is, that licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors does not reduce the consumption, and the other, that licensed liquors make men drunk and unruly and violators of law just the same as unlicensed liquor.

I simply want to restate the position I held when the bill was under consideration in the last session of Congress, that I believe if the Government of the United States had been as diligent and as earnest and as sincere in enforcing the prohibition law in Alaska as it was in punishing other crimes, we would have had very many less saloons in Juneau and Sitka and in other towns and cities in that Territory than we had under prohibition. But of course when men were given practically to understand, by the law officers of the Government, that they could with immunity violate this particular statute, they proceeded to do it, as they would have done if they had been given immunity to violate any other statute that had been enacted for the government of that Territory. I think, Mr. President, that this question does not arise in the present bill. I ask the Senator from Montana whether it does?

Mr. CARTER. The question does not arise. Liquor licenses are in no manner interfered with by the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. GALLINGER. I supposed that to be the fact.

Mr. PERKINS. Except to place in the school fund 50 per cent of that which is collected from licenses. I want to say one word.

Mr. GALLINGER. Permit me to conclude my sentence. I assumed that that question was not involved in this bill, which provides a civil government for Alaska. I think we ought speedily to pass the pending bill, and I suppose the Senator from California was simply patting himself on the back and congratulating himself that the prophecies he made here in the last Congress in regard to the great good that would come from the bill which he advocated had actually come to pass; and if that be so, I will certainly join with the Senator in giving him credit for having been a prophet in a field of prophecy where every fact, outside of Alaska, refutes the statements he has made to-day.

Mr. PERKINS. I am glad my friend the Senator from New Hampshire—I expected no less from him—when we have shown him that the tree which we planted has produced delicious fruit, is willing to partake of its benefits with us and congratulate the horticulturist who selected the tree which has borne such excellent fruit.

There is no question as to the picture I have drawn. We have not changed it, and even my friend the Senator from New Hampshire has not had the temerity to come in and propose any change in the present licenses in Alaska, because he knows, as he stated, that we had a law upon our statute books prohibiting the sale of liquor in Alaska which did not prohibit, and for thirty-odd years the Government found it impossible to control the sale of liquor in Alaska.

I am fully conversant with the conditions that prevail in Alaska, and therefore it required no particular gift of foresight to know what the result would be. On vessels which I in part represent, plying in the waters of Alaska, we had to double our vigilance in the number of detectives and watchmen placed on board those vessels to prevent the firemen and the stewards department and the mates department of those ships from smuggling liquor into the Territory. That necessity no longer exists, and the men find it unprofitable to violate the law where before they found it a source of great revenue.

There is another provision in the law which has been most wise and beneficent: and I am sure my friend the Senator from New Hampshire will agree with me in the result.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator reaches that point, will he yield for one moment?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like him to explain to the Senate how it was more profitable to smuggle liquor into Alaska under the old law than it is under the present law. I confess I can not for the life of me understand it.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator has been in Alaska. If he had been as observant there as he is here as to all measures that come before us for consideration, he would have known that those who wanted liquor in Alaska could obtain it only in a clandestine manner, and to the vessels that brought it in they would pay twice its market value in order to obtain it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says there were four or five times as many saloons under prohibition as there are under license. It seems to me there was not any need of clandestine work to get liquor under prohibition, and I can not get his idea.

Mr. PERKINS. The quality enters into that question somewhat, perhaps, but it is a notorious fact, known to all who are conversant with affairs in Alaska, that there were fifty boats and cutters engaged in plying from Alaska to the islands where vessels came loaded with liquor to sell. But a point I wish to make is this: The Indians were intoxicated. They purchased or obtained clandestinely this liquor, and the result was most demoralizing, not only to them, but to the whole community in which they resided. We put into that act this provision:

> That under the license issued in accordance with this act no intoxicating liquors shall be sold, given, or in any way disposed of to any minor, Indian, or intoxicated person, or to an habitual drunkard.

The result is that everyone who has a license is an officer of the law to see that no provision of this act is violated in the community where he lives. But the most potent, the most forcible object lesson is found in the figures I have given as to the number of saloons existing in these few principal towns, and it applies to every other village and every other town of any importance in Alaska. The result is that high license controls and regulates, while prohibition was a farce because it never was enforced, and it was offering a premium to others to violate the law.

Mr. President, I believe in temperance; I believe in controlling the liquor traffic. When you fail to do it by prohibition, then the next remedy, and the only practical remedy, as experience has demonstrated, is high license. I believe in local option. If a community desire that there shall be no saloons in that county or in that colony, let that be the rule. It is so in my own State in a dozen or more localities where there is not a saloon, because public sentiment is against it. But in Alaska, in that great, vast area of territory, public sentiment was in favor of having liquor, and the law on our statute books prohibiting it was not enforced.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, I can certify to the sincerity of the Senator from New Hampshire in his opposition to a license law in Alaska. I know how vigorously he fought it. I know he did it in good faith, as several other Senators did at that time; but when you come down to the main question as to results, we ascertain that there are only about one-fourth the number of saloons in Alaska to-day that there were at that time. As the Senator from California has just stated, all liquors sold in Alaska were smuggled into that district, and they were very inferior goods. Some liquors were compounded on the islands, made from drugs, and taken on to the mainland by night and sold to liquor dealers.

I speak from personal observation, having been there recently, when I say that to-day, in addition to the number of saloons being greatly reduced, there is no such thing as a man selling whisky in Alaska from a tent or in a little log cabin alongside the road. He can not afford to pay the license. They are utterly obliterated. The liquor dealers in Alaska, as a rule, are men of experience, men of intelligence, men who undertake to maintain law and order in their places of business.

They are required to put up a large sum of money to pay for their licenses. Hence it is to their benefit to maintain order and quiet; and I do not know of any part of the United States where you will find better order than you will in the principal towns of Alaska—for instance, the town of Juneau, the town of Skagway, the town of Sitka, the town of Ketchikan. In all these important towns they have saloons, but we have thrown safeguards around the traffic, as stated by the Senator from California, prohibiting the sale to minors, habitual drunkards, and Indians.

In my judgment the act has been beneficial to the Territory. Now that the importation of liquors is permitted, it is not necessary to smuggle intoxicants into Alaska. The people can buy better goods. They can buy what are generally regarded in the markets as pure distilled goods at a less price than they had to pay for the adulterated goods which were smuggled in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSBROUGH in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. CARTER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting on page 5, in line 17, after the word "shall," the following:

> Except as otherwise provided by law.

The portion of the section which this amendment is intended to amend reads as follows:

> Provided, That the clerk of said court and each division thereof shall give bond or bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Treasury may require and in such form as the Attorney-General may approve, and all moneys received for licenses by him or them under this act shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The amendment would cause the section to read:

> And all moneys received for licenses by him or them under this act shall, except as otherwise provided by law, be covered into the Treasury.

The amendment is made in view of the fact that we have provided otherwise for the distribution of funds under order of the court for necessary court expenses. We again provide that the clerk shall pay 50 per cent of the licenses by him collected to the treasurer of incorporated towns for the purpose of maintaining the public schools. If the section here under consideration were not amended as suggested, there would be a conflict of law, and it might be held that the clerk could not transfer the money to the school fund, as otherwise required, and could not pay the necessary expenses of the court.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, I have a proposed amendment that I think had better be read before we act upon this amendment.

Mr. CARTER. This is only for the purpose of perfecting the amendment under consideration. It will in no sense interfere with the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the Senate first dispose of the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Montana is well advised and his criticism well taken, and I will re-form my amendment by striking out all of section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California accept the modification proposed by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PERKINS. I do, and at the same time I ask to re-form my amendment by striking out all of section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified, if there is no objection.

Mr. SHOUP. Let the section of the amendment as modified be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification suggested will be made in section 3 of the proposed amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to know what the amendment is that the two Senators have arranged.

Mr. CARTER. In reply to the Senator from Alabama, I will state that the amendment pending, the main amendment, was offered by the Senator from California, and involves some corrections or modifications of an existing license law applicable to the district of Alaska. The liquor-license law is in no sense involved, because the amendment reads exactly as does the original text. The modifications will be found to be in reference to licensing of steamboats and steamships principally, I believe.

Mr. PERKINS. It reduces the license $10 a year upon seven different classes.

Mr. PETTUS. I yet do not understand what the amendment is.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from California offered an amendment, which will be found printed, and which he now proposes to modify by striking out a portion, known as section 3 of the amendment, which provides for a disposition of some of the funds for the maintenance of the public schools. That portion of the amendment is stricken out because the proposition he there seeks to cover has been provided for in another part of the bill. His motion goes to the perfection of his own amendment by striking out section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from California and modified by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the form of the introduction of the amendment be changed as indicated herein, to be inserted on page 25 of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. In line 11, after the word "Alaska."

Mr. CARTER. At the end of line 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What change does the Senator propose?

Mr. CARTER. Instead of recapitulating the act, the amendment merely provides further that a section in the act shall be amended to read——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be the order.

Mr. McBRIDE. Mr. President——

Mr. PETTUS. I shall have to insist that the Secretary shall report these amendments. We can not hear on this side what the Senator says. We do not know what the amendment is. I could not hear a word that the Senator said. If the Secretary would report the amendments we would know something about them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been reported at length. Does the Senator desire that it shall be again read?

Mr. CARTER. It is a mere question as to where the amendment shall be placed in the bill. I suggested that it be placed at the end of line 11, on page 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so ordered.

Mr. McBRIDE. I offer the following amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oregon that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] had offered an amendment, which is on the desk.

Mr. McBRIDE. Let my amendment lie on the table until the amendment of the Senator from Idaho is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Idaho will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 215, page 522, after the word "said," in line 20, strike out the remainder of the section and in lieu thereof insert:

The district shall set apart as an educational fund, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the education of the children therein, without distinction of race, between the ages of 6 years and 18 years, inclusive, as follows:

First. That the 20 per cent of the amount collected within the limits of an incorporated town shall be paid to the ex officio treasurer of the school board of said town, who shall receipt for the same to the Secretary of the Interior.

Second. That 25 per cent of the amount collected within the limits of all the incorporated towns of said district shall constitute a common fund, which shall be paid to the ex officio treasurer of the school board in each of said towns pro rata according to the number of children of school age in each of said towns.

Third. The remainder of said fund shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior in behalf of the school children of said district pro rata outside of the incorporated districts in accordance with section 28, Title I, page 1 of this act.

Mr. SHOUP. It should read "school districts."

Mr. PETTUS. What page does the Secretary read from?

Mr. BATE. What is the page and section?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that this is an original amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BATE. Has it been printed and laid on the table, or has it been merely read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is an original amendment, and it has been read.

Mr. BATE. Where is it to be inserted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In section 215, page 522, line 20, after the word "said," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section and in lieu thereof to insert what has been read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I will ask the Senator from Idaho to withdraw his amendment for the time being for the purpose of ascertaining if it can not in some wise be harmonized with the existing text which it proposes to amend. I apprehend that confusion would arise from the adoption of the amendment and its insertion at the particular place indicated, and therefore I ask the Senator to kindly withdraw it for the time being.

Mr. SHOUP. I have no objection to that course, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho withdraws the amendment temporarily. The Senator from Oregon offers an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. McBRIDE. I now offer my amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, page 8, insert:

And all records of instruments of writing hitherto made by any United States commissioner in the district of Alaska are hereby declared to be public records of such district, and shall have the same force and effect as if recorded in conformity with the provisions of this act.

Mr. CARTER. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BATE. I do not know about that, Mr. President. I do not want to object, but it seems to be an effort made for the purpose of curing and covering up or remedying some evil that exists there. I should like to have it pretty thoroughly explained. It directs that deeds before commissioners heretofore shall now be registered. Does that cure any defects in those deeds or not? What legal effect will that have? If there be such deeds there as are incorrect, as are forgeries, illegal, does this tend to cure that, or what is the object of the amendment? I should like to have the Senator explain it thoroughly.

Mr. McBRIDE. Mr. President, the legal force and effect of the language of the amendment can best be decided by every lawyer in the Senate upon his own judgment as to the effect of that language. The purpose of the amendment is to make public records of those records, all instruments of writing which have been hitherto presented to commissioners of the United States in the district of Alaska for record and recorded by them. There is doubt whether or not those records have been authorized by the laws of the State of Oregon applicable to the district of Alaska, and it is the purpose of this amendment not to change anything affecting the documents themselves or to cure any defect in any deed or mortgage or mining claim or other instrument of writing which may have been recorded, but to give such a document the force and effect of a public record, if it has heretofore been recorded by a United States commissioner for the district of Alaska. It is simply that those records, which are the only records in thousands of cases, of claims to real estate and mining claims shall have public notice, as they should have had if they had been recorded under the provisions of this act, and not to cure any defects in any of the instruments themselves, if any exist.

Mr. BATE. Under what authority were these deeds made there? Were they made by the authority of the United States Government, or by commissioners who had been appointed by the President, or how?

Mr. McBRIDE. The records?

Mr. BATE. Yes; these deeds, these acknowledgments, I ask by what authority were they executed there and by whom? Was it done under the United States commissioners?

Mr. McBRIDE. They were executed by the commissioners, as I understand.

Mr. BATE. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. McBRIDE. They were recorded by the commissioners.

Mr. BATE. The object is to have the deeds recorded by them as United States commissioners now recorded in the court.

Mr. McBRIDE. The object is to make the records of deeds and mortgages and all other instruments of writing hitherto kept by such commissioners public records of the district of Alaska.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the fact was that in the early stage the commissioners were the only officers before whom acknowledgments were taken and the only persons who could make any record. Now, they made the best record that it was possible for them to make; and their record, I take it, is the record of all the conveyances at that time. Now, when we are establishing more formal records and more formal registry, the Senator seeks to join on the present time with the past by providing that the records which the commissioners made shall be considered as good records, to be used by the courts and by parties who are looking up titles, that being the only record which was made at that time. It seems to me to be a very suitable provision. It is a provision that we make frequently when we are dealing with any communities that are merging; we take the best that we could give them at the beginning and recognize it and adopt is as a part of the record, together with the registry that we are now providing for.

Mr. McBRIDE. That is precisely the situation.

Mr. BATE. Of course, the condition of things in Alaska is anomalous. We have had no regular courts or anything of that kind there, and they have had only, as I understand, United States commissioners. I think the suggestion is a wise one; but I do not want to see any language used in the amendment that would cover up any misdeeds or any frauds which may have been practiced before that time. That was the only point I made.

Mr. McBRIDE. I should certainly concur heartily in the suggestion of the Senator that neither this nor any amendment should cover up any frauds or correct any errors in the instruments themselves which shall have been recorded. If the Senator from Tennessee would suggest any modification of this amendment which will carry out his purpose, I should be very glad to accept it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BATE. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And all records of instruments of writing hitherto made by any United States commissioner in the district of Alaska are hereby declared to be public records of such district, and shall have the same force and effect as if recorded in conformity with the provisions of this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that a part of the bill to which I had suggested some amendments was passed over in my absence. If agreeable to the Senator having charge of the bill, I will move them now.

Mr. SHOUP. What is the page?

Mr. CARTER. Page 436.

Mr. BATE. What is the page?

Mr. STEWART. Page 436. It relates to the jurisdiction of justices of the peace. That paragraph or subdivision provides for conferring jurisdiction on justices of the peace in controversies respecting claims to mines. I object to it because I have seen the same provision substantially in actual operation. In early times in California, before there was any legislation conferring jurisdiction upon justices of the peace, or any one else, in fact, before courts were established respecting mining claims, the general custom was to submit cases to arbitration, which was really a law binding upon the conscience of men, and it was very unwholesome for a gentleman to refuse to arbitrate his claims. The decisions were generally right and satisfactory. There were three men, one selected by either party, and the third selected by them, who would be prominent miners of the district and they would bring in a judgment. The proceedings were orderly and conducted fairly and justice was arrived at without any scandal.

But when justices of the peace were appointed to take charge of and to preside in the controversies respecting mining claims the whole thing changed. The justice was not able, he was not strong enough, to maintain order, and it became a question of the strongest party. Really it became a question of force. There would be a large amount of property at stake, probably three or four hundred thousand dollars, and that could be taken out in a few days, a few weeks, or months. Placer claims at that time were worked out very rapidly. All the controversy was in regard to the possession. When they undertook to set up the law in that feeble way it was overturned.

After the matter had gone on for about a year there came a case that went before the Supreme Court, and they decided that the law was unconstitutional, and order was restored. In Alaska a justice of the peace, or anyone else feebler than a judge of the district court with a marshal behind him, with the force of the Government, any person with any less authority than that, will fail to preside over one of those turbulent cases of litigation. They will always come, particularly where there are placer mines, mines to be worked out in a short time. It is a scramble in which physical force is almost always used in cases where there is no judge having the power of the Government behind him to preside, and he is a strong man.

I move to strike out that whole provision, because it will certainly do more harm than good. The justice of the peace, with his limited authority, should not be called on to decide these questions, because he is deciding the title when he decides the right of possession, for before any relief by appeal can be had in regard to a placer mine the mine has been worked out. It is too big a jurisdiction for the justice of the peace in a turbulent country, as every new mining district is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend for a moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

Mr. SHOUP. At this point I desire to inquire——

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Nevada concludes his remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to know when this Puerto Rican bill is going to be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the title of the unfinished business be read.

Mr. MORGAN. I have tried that. I do not propose to yield to the convenience of anybody at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business has not yet been laid before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I am perfectly willing——

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily until the Senator from Nevada concludes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Nevada concludes his remarks.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that we are to have a conference at 3 o'clock, or at some hour this afternoon, after which I hope to be able to proceed with the Puerto Rican bill without yielding to any other business. Until then I have no objection to its going over without prejudice.

Mr. MORGAN. For two weeks and longer the progress of business in the Senate on the Puerto Rican bill has depended upon conferences that are to be held in Republican caucuses, and we have delayed, and delayed sufficiently, I think, to wait upon those gentlemen to reconcile their party and personal differences with each other. I insist that it is the duty of this Government to seek to provide those people with some assistance, with some government under which they can afford to live.

I wish to say that I am not willing that this bill shall be sidetracked for every caucus that is to be held and for every bill that some other gentleman on the other side of the Chamber may choose to sandwich between it and the duty of the country. I am not willing to do that, and I wish to say to the honorable Senator who has charge of the bill that I intend to insist that he shall press the bill to a vote in some form or other without yielding to everybody who comes upon the floor making personal requests or party requests.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with all the Senator from Alabama has said, and there would not be any delay at this time except only for the fact that the Alaskan bill is second only in importance, if second at all, to the Puerto Rican bill. There is an emergency requiring that bill also to be passed, and at some time or other the time of the Senate must be taken up for that purpose.

In view of the fact that there was to be a conference, I thought this was an opportune moment to allow the Senator who has charge of the Alaskan bill to proceed with it. I thought it would expedite the business of the Senate.

There has not been any delay on account of conferences, as the Senator has suggested; certainly not up to this time. In so far as there has been delay, it has been because Senators wanted to speak upon the measure or because there was other business that seemed to be pressing, which it seems to me it was in the public interest for me to give an opportunity to have considered.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the other night, at a little later hour than the present, we were on the very point of coming to an agreement for a vote to be taken on the Puerto Rican bill when the Senator's colleague insisted on calling for the regular order, so that no request could be made, and that alone hindered us in coming to an agreement for taking the vote.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Maine permit me?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to say that the objection came from the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. HALE. But we were on the point of agreeing that the vote should be taken. The Senator from Vermont objected to its being taken the next day. We were on the point of agreeing to a vote being taken on Wednesday, when the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] insisted upon calling for the regular order, which shut off all further proceeding.

Mr. ALLEN. The RECORD will show that there was no likelihood of reaching an agreement to take the vote.

Mr. HALE. That must——

Mr. ALLEN. And the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] strenuously objected and we could not agree upon a date, and after the debate had run along a short time in that way the junior Senator from Alabama called for the regular order.

Mr. HALE. The Senators who were then present will remember.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the RECORD will show that we were on the point of agreeing to take the vote on Wednesday.

Mr. HALE. We were on the point of agreeing.

Mr. FORAKER. I so understood it. But however that may be, I do not want——

Mr. MORGAN. I beg leave to say that I understood distinctly it was the Senator from Vermont who made the objection which carried the bill over.

Mr. ALLEN. The responsibility rests with the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORGAN. I leave that matter for my colleague to take care of when he comes in. He is able to do it.

Mr. FORAKER. We all recognize that. What I want to say in answer to all that has been suggested is that I have no disposition to find fault with anybody about it. I think it is pretty generally the wish of Senators that the bill should be brought to a vote. I know it is my wish, and I know it is my purpose, in so far as I can, to press it to a vote, and bring it to a vote at the very earliest day possible. But I am glad to take advantage of this opportunity to give notice to Senators that commencing with to-morrow I shall insist upon the consideration of the unfinished business, whatever the state may be, and when I make that remark I mean that, whether the bills shall be separated or be considered together, I shall insist upon the consideration of the unfinished business to the exclusion of everything else, except a privileged question, until it is disposed of.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if the caucus deliberations have indicated a vote on the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not intend to make objection to-day as regards the bill for the government of Alaska, but I propose before the bill goes over——

Mr. HALE. What is the parliamentary status, Mr. President? Has the unfinished business been laid aside?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business has not been laid aside. Unanimous consent has been asked, but it has not yet been granted.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the floor on the Puerto Rican bill, if the Senator wants to know. That is the business before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. The Senator objects to the request that the bill be laid aside.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I have not, and I said I would not do it.

Mr. HALE. Then let the Chair put that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. No; that motion has not been made. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. It is not a motion; it is a request. It is privileged above all other things.

Mr. MORGAN. I know. I wish to inquire of the Chair what is the amendment pending to the Puerto Rican bill?

Mr. HALE. I ask first that the Chair put the question for unanimous consent.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I object. Perhaps that will end that matter.

Mr. CARTER. I trust that this colloquy will take some other turn than what now seems possible.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. President, I have the floor, and I do not want any personal explanation about this business. I wish to inquire of the Chair what is the parliamentary condition of this bill? What amendment is pending?

Mr. FORAKER. Being more familiar, possibly I can answer the question if the Senator from Alabama will allow me. There are quite a number of amendments which have been proposed and printed, and which are lying on the table to be offered whenever the time comes to offer amendments.

Mr. MORGAN. What amendment, Mr. President, is pending to this bill? That is my question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the amendment pending to the Puerto Rican bill is the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to insert after the word "also," in line 23, page 19, the words "as to railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises."

Mr. MORGAN. That is the amendment which is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the amendment now pending.

Mr. MORGAN. I just wanted to know what it is. Now I withdraw my objection.

Mr. CARTER. Let the Chair again state the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is given, the Chair understands, that the unfinished business shall be laid aside.

Mr. HALE. Temporarily.

Mr. FORAKER. Temporarily, without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Temporarily. It is so ordered. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, when the morning hour expired I was calling attention to the inadequacy of a justice of the peace to preside over a trial for mining claims—for placer mines in new districts where the mines are very valuable. The decision in a controversy over mining claims must be quick. The powerful party will get into possession before any relief can be had in any other court. He will either have worked the claim or will have become so powerful that the other party can not contend with him in litigation at all. That would not be the case if the realty could not be destroyed in a very short time.

In this case we have a district judge in that locality who is very capable, and with a good district judge near at hand he will be during the summer season constantly engaged in trying these cases. Probably he has only one more mining camp in his jurisdiction. There is no beneficent result to be obtained by conferring jurisdiction on a justice of the peace. If you confer the power on him the decision will be in favor of the strongest party. He will not decide it otherwise, and justices of the peace never did decide otherwise in an important case when they had jurisdiction in California. So I move to strike out the whole provision and let the matter in regard to mining claims be tried by the district court.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I do not know about that. I am unfamiliar with mining ways and its interests. The Senator from Nevada who has just taken his seat is familiar with all those things. I would be very much inclined to follow what he might do. But it seems to me that in such a country as Alaska, and as this bill is to apply to the whole Territory, hundreds and thousands of miles in extent, there can not be a judge close to every mining camp, at every place where trials may be required to be had, and there should be jurisdiction, with some officer to look after these things and to see that trials are had and that justice is done.

The Senator says that there will be a district judge at Cape Nome, where it is supposed there will be perhaps as many as fifty or one hundred thousand miners this coming summer. But will he be over at the other parts of that district, which are 100 miles and some of them nearly a thousand miles apart? If we give jurisdiction to a justice of the peace it would certainly not interfere much with that at Cape Nome, where the judge will be, and at the same time it would give the jurisdiction to the justice of the peace at other points more remote from the court. It would require a man to travel for a week or ten days before he could get to the court in order to have his rights tried in reference to a mining claim, but if it was under the jurisdiction of a justice who lived in that immediate neighborhood it seems to me it could be done with greater benefit to the interests of society, and that it would also be to the interest of those who were litigants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada to strike out all of chapter 104.

Mr. BATE. The amendment is to strike out section 1042.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire chapter was the motion.

Mr. STEWART. The entire chapter.

Mr. BATE. I do not so understand it.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; the entire chapter down to "forcible entry." That I do not want to strike out. I want to move to amend that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator please state the exact part of the bill he moves to strike out?

Mr. STEWART. I move to strike out all on pages 436, 437, and 438 down to chapter 105.

Mr. CARTER. That is all of chapter 104?

Mr. STEWART. It is all of chapter 104.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada to strike out chapter 104.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator will let me finish my amendments.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Very well.

Mr. STEWART. In relation to the section in regard to forcible entry and detainer, I am aware that the same language employed in that is frequently used. It might not be very harmful, and be all very well in the older States; but even there it leads to confusion and sometimes to injustice.

On page 439, section 1052, line 2, I move, after the word "when," to strike out "an entry shall be made in a peaceable manner and;" and in line 3, after the word "held," to strike out "by force" and insert "after the expiration of the lease or agreement therefor." The language of the section is this:

SEC. 1052. When a forcible entry shall be made upon any premises, or when an entry shall be made in a peaceable manner and the possession shall be held by force, etc.

It frequently happens that a man is in possession, and I have known instances of a man being rightfully in possession by forcible entry and detainer; but it was alleged that he held the property by force, and therefore nobody else could get title from him. That was not the intention of the law. Sometimes he held the property by force, and that changed the possession. The provision should apply only where an entry has been by force and where possession is held by force.

I think those who have had experience in such matters will agree with me that that should be eliminated. After such cases have been brought to the attention of the court, and a justice of the peace has overruled them once or twice, this has been frequently corrected. So I submit the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. BATE. To what section does the Senator propose his amendment?

Mr. STEWART. To section 1052, on page 439, so that when amended the clause will read:

When a forcible entry shall be made upon any premises, or when the possession shall be held after the expiration of the lease or agreement therefor, the person entitled to the premises may maintain an action to recover the possession thereof, etc.

Mr. CARTER. I question the wisdom of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], and will suggest to him these considerations: The section merely gives the right of action to the person entitled to the possession of the premises. It gives the right of action to the person entitled to possession as against one who has taken forcible possession.

Mr. STEWART. That is righ

Mr. CARTER. Then it gives the right of action to the person entitled to possession, even though the possession has been taken peaceably and is held by force. For instance, your premises, your house, may be entered peaceably during your absence, but upon your arrival there the occupant refuses to surrender possession to you. It is wholly immaterial to you under such circumstances whether he entered forcibly or not. The fact that he entered peaceably should be no bar to a suit for the recovery of possession.

This section, I think, upon close analysis, will be found to give merely the right of action; and it will be no bar to such right of action for the person to plead that he entered peaceably.

Mr. STEWART. That is very true. Cases of that kind might happen, and they ought to be guarded against. A case of the other kind may sometimes happen, and such cases have come under my observation, where a person enters peaceably, but afterwards holds forcibly against another's adverse possession. There ought to be some qualifying words; and perhaps, if the amendment is passed over temporarily, we can fix it; but I think cases such as those I have suggested ought to be provided for.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator that he withdraw the amendment temporarily.

Mr. BATE. I should like to have the Secretary read the parts proposed to be stricken out and to read the words proposed to be inserted, so that we may understand the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The SECRETARY. On page 439, section 1, line 2, after the word "when," it is proposed to strike out "an entry shall be made in a peaceable manner and;" and in line 3, after the word "held," to strike out "by force" and insert "after the expiration of the lease or agreement therefor."

Mr. CARTER. I understand that the Senator from Nevada temporarily withdraws the amendment for the purpose of adjusting it hereafter, if he shall determine to press it.

Mr. STEWART. I withdraw the amendment for the present, because there is one condition suggested by the Senator from Montana in regard to the bill which would not be provided for by my amendment, and an amendment remedying one evil might create another. I want to examine the matter further, and perhaps we can frame language to meet both cases.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 469, to strike out section 73 and insert a new section as a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 73, on page 469, as follows:

SEC. 73. The title to any lands heretofore conveyed shall not be questioned nor in any manner affected by reason of the alienage of any person from or through whom such title may have been derived;

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 73. Aliens shall not be permitted to locate, hold, or convey mining claims in said district of Alaska; nor shall any title to a mining claim acquired by location or purchase through an alien be legal. In any civil action, suit, or proceeding to recover the possession of a mining claim, or for the appointment of a receiver, or for an injunction to restrain the working or operation of a mining claim, it shall be the duty of the court to inquire into and determine the question of the citizenship of the locator.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator offering that amendment if that would be reciprocal? Would the action be in correspondence with the action of the Canadian government in treating our miners? I have heard a good deal of complaint of their treatment of our miners by their harsh laws; but it seems to me this is probably a little more severe than are the regulations they have imposed upon us.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, it would be entirely reciprocal, if my information is correct. The fact is, that when gold was first discovered in the Cape Nome district, there was quite a rush of miners, chiefly Americans, from the Klondike on the Canadian side. Upon the arrival at Nome of a party of American miners—I now refer to American citizens—it was found that quite a number of aliens, including several Laplanders who had been sent to that country in charge of reindeer by this Government, had staked out the very best claims, the richest claims on the principal creeks in and about the Nome district.

This condition naturally excited the opposition of those American miners who were American citizens, because it has never been the rule in this country that aliens shall have the advantage of our mining laws. When the American citizens undertook to stake out claims over those of the alien Laplanders, the military authorities on the ground arrested several of the American citizens, dragged them two or three hundred miles away from the scene, and undertook to intimidate them and compel them to relinquish any claim they might have had to those mines.

Not only the Laplanders, but other aliens, staked out the richest claims in that region, and they took a great many of the claims, in fact, it is said, they staked the richest section of all the creeks in that region, until now the American miner has been shut out of the opportunity of obtaining his share of that rich region.

The object of this amendment is to compel the courts to inquire into the citizenship of the persons asking for a title to any mines in that region.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, for many years in the West, when mining was very prosperous, all aliens had the right to work mines. There was a foreign miners' license tax for a short time, which was collected only upon the Chinese. The miners made their own laws for about twenty years, but they never, after they had the power to do that, excluded aliens from locating and working mining claims. I think the practice is a very bad one. I think we ought to be more neighborly.

There has been a great deal of complaint, and very just complaint, against the Canadian government officials for the manner in which our miners have been treated, and some notice ought to be taken of it by our Government. But by setting an example of harshness and exclusion it will certainly come home to plague us, because there is a vast, unexplored portion of this region belonging to Canada and Great Britain to which our miners want to go. They have been in the habit of freely going to Australia and coming back from there; and there never has been any serious friction until within the last few years up at Dawson and about that vicinity. To retaliate now and break up the good-fellowship which has generally existed would be bad policy; and particularly, since you have adopted the gold standard, you ought to develop the gold mines of the whole world, and mining ought to be free.

Our policy originally was to hunt in the mountains of all the world for mines. Miners like to travel; they do not want to be limited to any locality; they enjoy prospecting; and I believe in extending the widest privileges to them and protesting against the policy pursued by Great Britain in unfair dealing toward our citizens.

In the Alaskan country there has been a good deal of ill feeling, which is very detrimental to the general business of mining and detrimental to us. All along the Canadian border in British Columbia there are a great many mines, and American citizens are interested there in mining and making money. Canada will retaliate and our citizens there will be excluded if we enact hostile legislation toward them. If you should commence this warfare, it will cause the confiscation of a great deal of property of American citizens.

We ought to stop right here and show that we pursue a generous policy, so as that a similar policy will be cultivated on the part of all nations; for if anything is terrible, it is going to a new country, spending all one has got in the development of mining property, and then having his work stopped and his property taken away from him by a government official.

I think the Senator had better withdraw that amendment. Let us protest against the exclusiveness which has been practiced by other countries, and let us set an example of generosity and fair dealing such as has heretofore prevailed in this country.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This amendment is not aimed at the Canadian miner. There is no conflict, as I understand, between the Canadian miners who have gone to the Nome district and the American citizens who are there. It is aimed at the Laplanders who were brought to this country in charge of a herd of reindeer that we brought from Lapland, and who, by reason of the fact that they were in charge of those reindeer, were enabled to travel much faster and get to the gold fields earlier than were the American citizens, who had to drag their sleds over the snow and ice by hand. The object of this amendment is simply to do away with that kind of business. Those Laplanders, as I understand, were under contract with this Government. After they had performed the service of bringing the reindeer here and caring for them up to a certain point, they were to return to Lapland. Instead of that they found rich diggings and preempted the entire section to themselves—they and a few others—and when American citizens, those who are entitled to the American mines, came along, their opportunities had fled and the Laplanders were in charge. To cure that evil is the object of my amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, in the abstract the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is right. It was the custom and has been the custom, in all the Western mining States, that those who went in as pioneer miners might locate their mining claims under such rules and regulations as the local miners should have made. The instances to which the Senator has referred I know of my own knowledge to be correct; but these claims were only for 20 feet, perhaps, running upon a creek, or 100 feet square of a placer mine, or perhaps 200 feet of a bench claim or a mountain claim.

But the conditions in Alaska are altogether different. The locations there are made under the United States mining laws, which give to each individual 20 acres. Foreigners and aliens propose to go in there. I care not whether they go in there from Canada or from Lapland, they are not American citizens; they can not take up a homestead or preempt land under our general land laws; and while I would be generous and while I would give privileges to foreigners who come here to assist in developing the resources of our country, even if it is to benefit themselves, while I would give them every privilege, I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] is right in principle, that the alien who has not even declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States should not have the right or the privilege to come in and acquire a United States patent to 20 acres of mining or mineral land.

The conditions to which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] referred are altogether different. That custom prevails now in mining camps where they are not seeking to obtain Government titles to the land; but if we permit aliens, those who have no intention of becoming citizens of the United States, to acquire a right by which they may obtain a United States patent, they may transfer that right to A, B, and C, and so take advantage of our own people.

Mr. President, I believe in first being just to our own household; I believe in giving these privileges to American citizens, to those who by accident were born here. As to those who come here of their own volition, who take the oath of allegiance, and who declare their intention to become American citizens, I believe in giving them the same privileges as are given to those who are to the manner born.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PERKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. ALLEN. Would the Filipinos have the right to go to Alaska and enter mineral land?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I have been in the Philippine Islands in my younger days, but I never yet saw a Filipino who cared to work a mining claim, or any other kind of a claim, and therefore——

Mr. ALLEN. I thought they conducted mines there.

Mr. PERKINS. I am told there are a great many mines in the Philippine Islands, but it will take American enterprise and American energy, like that which my friend from Nebraska possesses, to go there and develop those latent resources.

Mr. ALLEN. Would not the Laplander be quite as acceptable as the Filipino?

Mr. PERKINS. It is not a question of the Laplander or the Filipino or the Russian or the Scandinavian. There is a principle involved in this; that one who is not an American citizen, one who has not declared his intention to become such, ought not to have the right to go upon our public domain and take up mineral land, agricultural land, timber land, swamp or overflowed land, or any other character of land.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator regard the Filipinos as citizens of the United States?

Mr. PERKINS. There are some Filipinos who are very intelligent and bright men. Some of them have been educated in our colleges in this country.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator if he regards them as citizens of the United States?

Mr. PERKINS. Some of them have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States; and when they have done that and conformed to our naturalization laws, I think they ought to have the right to take up mining claims.

Mr. ALLEN. But are they citizens of the United States?

Mr. PERKINS. I think after a Filipino has properly declared his intention and has taken the oath of allegiance he is an American citizen.

Mr. ALLEN. But what is his status under the treaty of Paris?

Mr. PERKINS. That is a constitutional question which I will refer to my friend from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the Senator's opinion about that.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, perhaps I should state——

Mr. SHOUP. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will yield to the Senator presently. I have merely a word or two to say.

Perhaps I should state that when the Laplanders and other aliens came upon the scene in the Nome district they held a miners' meeting under the provisions of the Revised Statutes, which I see my friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is now examining; and they decided that the size of the placer claims thereabouts should be 1,320 by 660 feet. Up to that time I am informed that the size of claims along the creeks in Alaska had been 500 feet up and down the creeks—much smaller than 1,320 by 660 feet.

When the American citizens came upon the ground, they found that the aliens had complied with the law of the United States with respect to the taking of mining claims; but the Americans were not satisfied with the conditions and they proceeded to call a miners' meeting to rearrange matters. There were several hundred of them gathered in a hall, as I am told, at the city of Nome. A little bunch of military that was there—one company, I believe—ordered the miners to disperse; and they did disperse that miners' meeting, that meeting of American citizens, at the point of the bayonet, and the Laplanders and other aliens were left in possession of the mines.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, in regard to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], if he will modify it by confining it to the location of mining claims, I shall be in accord with him; but when it comes to disposal or sale, that is a question which is entirely different. That is being done all over the United States to-day. Mining properties are being sold to foreign corporations, companies, or individuals, as the case may be, and they are paying liberal prices for them. But as to the matter of location, I thoroughly concur with the Senator that aliens ought not to be granted that privilege. They are not American citizens, and certainly ought not to be entitled to the privilege of locating mining claims. We do not permit it to be done in my State, and I do not know that I have ever known it to be done in any State; certainly not under my personal observation. If it has been done, my attention has never before been called to it.

Where a mine has been permitted to be located, except as stated by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], in some small mining districts, they never stopped to make inquiry whether this or that man was a citizen of the United States; but the first man on the ground was entitled to 20, 50, or 100 feet, as the case may have been. If, however, he applied for a patent, there was no patent issued in the case referred to by the Senator from California; but when application is made for a patent, it is my judgment that the applicant ought to be an American citizen. I would go further than does the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], and not only require the foreigner to take out his first papers, but I should exact that he should be a full citizen of the United States before these rights and privileges are accorded to him.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it is true that under this system of free mining injustice may sometimes be done, but it will be done in fewer cases than will result if we enact harsh legislation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the amendment be again read.

Mr. STEWART. It excludes foreigners.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to hear the amendment again read.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] will be stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. HANSBROUGH.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the liberal policy adopted in California in the first instance was of immense benefit to that country and to American miners. It was immediately reciprocated in Australia, where thousands of our people went, and thousands of Englishmen came to our country. California was developed under that liberal policy.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What was that policy?

Mr. STEWART. That policy was that any person might locate a mining claim and be protected in his rights; it was his property if he located it. There was free mining to all, and our citizens had the privilege of free mining in Australia for a quarter of a century without molestation.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator will permit me, I want him to dwell a little upon the fact that the idea in adopting this proposition was that it was to apply only to small claims.

Mr. STEWART. I will answer that.

Mr. PERKINS. The claims in question here may cover 20 acres.

Mr. STEWART. I will explain that; and it will be seen that there is nothing in the objection when the matter is understood. At that time the size of the claims was regulated both here and in Australia. After gold was discovered in California the system adopted in California spread through Australia, and they let it alone and there was great satisfaction with it. The only exception was an attempt to strike the Chinamen with a license tax. Everything else was open to all. That went on without any friction in any part of the world worth mentioning until some years ago, when an act was passed here prohibiting foreigners from holding real estate.

One of the arguments for the admission of new States was that they might be enabled to allow foreigners to deal in mining claims, regarding that as an important matter. Nobody in any one of those mining States ever favored that law. Such a law might be made to apply to agricultural lands with more propriety than to mining lands. Under the law established by the miners themselves an amendment was offered by Judge Field, when he was a member of the legislature in 1851, to the California statutes, which read in about this way: In actions respecting mining claims the rule and regulations established at a particular bar or diggings may be offered in evidence, and when not in conflict with the laws of the United States or of the State, shall govern the decision of the action. Before that time such matters had been left to arbitration. The miners' rules were recognized, and that system went on until 1866.

In 1866 Mr. Julian, of Indiana, was chairman of the Committee on Public Lands in the House of Representatives. He ran twice for Congress upon a platform to sell the mineral lands at auction, so as to help pay the war expenses. I was in the Senate at that time, and I resisted his scheme and explained to the Senate what was then the condition of affairs. There were a million inhabitants in prosperous States who were living under the laws they themselves had made, not only governing the possession of mining claims, but the possession of nearly everything else—water, timber, and almost everything. We had some fifteen or twenty of the California reports, mostly composed of questions relating to the possession of mines, water rights, and timber, under those rules.

After Nevada was admitted into the Union a case finally went up to the Supreme Court, I arguing it on one side and Mr. O'Conor and Mr. Curtis on the other side. They took the position that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction; that we were all trespassers. There was never any doubt about that. They claimed that those rules were against the most positive law, and they were very sure that the court would dismiss the action. I had ex-Attorney-General Black with me. I replied by stating what had occurred, giving the history of what had grown up under free mining, under nonaction by Congress; and when I got through, my colleague said he could not add anything to it. I did not argue the law at all. I did not say a word about the law. I just told the court what occurred.

In rendering the decision the court held that possessory right was property; that they could not shut their eyes to what had occurred by the nonaction of Congress, and ordered to some of my remarks put into the appendix. You will find it in the appendix to 3d Wallace. The court held there that the legislation they had there for twenty years should be recognized by the courts. Shortly after that Congress passed a law, the act of 1866, recognizing the rules and regulations that the miners had made and provided for their getting patents. The first law was not a very perfect one. Bills were introduced from year to year, and in 1872 the Congress passed the present mining law, which has been so satisfactory that nobody has been able to amend it.

All that was very satisfactory to other nations and other people, and there was no friction; but some ten or fifteen years ago the alien land act was passed and that created friction and we have had some retaliation. As to the retaliation that we have had, the harsh treatment that has come from the Canadian government within the last two or three years, in the discussion they alluded to this legislation of the United States. It inspired bad feeling. It has done us no good whatever, because the people of those States wanted foreign capital to come in and help develop their mines. There was no friction, no injury, and there was no reason why such restrictions should be applied.

Petitions came for its repeal, and it would have been repealed except from the agricultural standpoint. They were in favor of it. It would have been carried by the unanimous vote of the mining States if they could have controlled the matter. It was tried at every session of Congress almost, but most of them had become States, and they adopted that policy which to them seemed best. I do not know exactly what policy they have.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then the Senator from Nevada is opposed to this amendment?

Mr. STEWART. I am, most decidedly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask a question for information. I know nothing about the facts. I understand the most profitable mining in that region first was in the Klondike country, and that was on the British side?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On what terms were American miners allowed to go into the British country to mine?

Mr. STEWART. They mined there, but there were certain restrictions and regulations of which they complained; that they were harsh, and they were taxed differently, and they said that the British had commissioners of mines of whom they complained. The liberal spirit which prevailed in California and Australia, and which had made such good feelings and led all countries to permit miners to go where they pleased to prospect, was not observed there.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Was there any difference between the way American and English miners were treated in the Klondike region?

Mr. STEWART. It was claimed that there was. That was the complaint.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Can the Senator state what the difference was?

Mr. STEWART. I can not. I know there was complaint.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Can the Senator from Montana give us any information on that point?

Mr. CARTER. In 1898 we passed a law entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," which was intended, so far as section 13 is concerned, to facilitate some kind of a reciprocal arrangement between miners in the Klondike and miners in Alaska. The section reads as follows:

SEC. 13. That native-born citizens of the Dominion of Canada shall be accorded in said district of Alaska the same mining rights and privileges accorded to citizens of the United States in British Columbia and the Northwest Territory by the laws of the Dominion of Canada or the local laws, rules, and regulations; but no greater rights shall be thus accorded than citizens of the United States or persons who have declared their intention to become such may enjoy in said district of Alaska; and the Secretary of the Interior shall from time to time promulgate and enforce rules and regulations to carry this provision into effect.

The purpose of this provision was to place the Interior Department in position to negotiate with the authorities of the Northwest Territory or the Dominion of Canada for the purpose of having the onerous restrictions that had theretofore been applied to American citizens in the Klondike country removed. In order to enable the Secretary to progress with such negotiations we gave him this authority, as outlined in the section I have just read.

No progress whatever has been made in the way of securing the release or mitigation of any of the onerous or burdensome conditions applied to American miners in the Klondike country. In the first place, a rule was promulgated and enforced by the Dominion police, known as the mounted police, whereby our citizens were compelled to yield an exorbitant revenue to the government of the Dominion, in the way of a percentage of what they took out of the mines in that country. That royalty was somewhat limited by later action.

Mr. SHOUP. It is 10 per cent.

Mr. CARTER. It is now 10 per cent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Of the gross product?

Mr. CARTER. Of the gross products. Now, I believe it is seriously proposed, while our miners are subjected to these burdens on the east side of the Alaskan line, to permit Canadians, Laplanders, Chinese, Japanese, people from anywhere and everywhere, to locate mining claims and acquire, hold, and defend their rights in the same manner that American citizens may do. You may call this free mining, but it is mining entirely too free to suit the average American citizen who finds himself denied like privileges everywhere else.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from California lays great stress on the size of the claims, and he called my attention to that fact. It is true they make small claims. I have known claims to be limited to 25 feet in length along a ravine. I have known them to be two or three hundred feet or four or five hundred feet long, depending upon conditions; but there is nothing in this statute which limits the power of the miners to make a claim any size they see fit. There is only a limit of the maximum. They can make it 600 feet wide or 1 foot wide. They can make it 600 feet long or 1 foot long. The statute only defines the maximum size of the claim, so that they are free to make claims the size they please.

Now, as to the harshness and injustice in Canada, I am very certain that that course results from the legislation we passed in Congress, without any intention of doing injury. There was no proscription anywhere in the world until we commenced it. Our people went everywhere they pleased, and others came here, and they discovered mines, and it was generally beneficial. There is a great deal of unexplored country to be examined. Take the territory of the Russian Empire and China, where there were great mines in former times, when the means of mining were very limited and the methods were crude.

Africa is not yet explored. If we inaugurate a dog in the manger system, we will be confined to our territory and others will be confined to their territory, and the general good feeling and general benefit to mankind of prospecting all over the world will be lost. It is a hard life. It is an enterprising class of people who follow it.

As to the treatment by the Canadians, I think the way to modify that is for our Government to apply to the Canadians for like privileges, and have an understanding all over the world, because if we are going to have real mining we must have free access to the mines. The prospector must be permitted to examine any mountain he feels like in any part of the world, and he will find mines if you let him alone. If you let him alone, he can protect himself. Do not hamper him by rules and regulations.

The absolute exclusion of foreign miners from Alaska will create great friction. Our miners must make up their minds that they can not go anywhere outside of the United States. They can not go to South Africa or anywhere else and mine, for if we take this stand, we shall be followed. I think it is very objectionable.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Would the Senator change the present law? The law that allows English miners to mine in Alaska on the same terms on which American miners are allowed to mine in the Klondike seems to me to be fair.

Mr. STEWART. I would let that stand.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. You are not in favor of repealing that?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I am not. Let that stand now, because it calls attention to the condition and gives opportunity to negotiate. I think the State Department ought to consider the matter. We ought to pass a resolution calling the attention of the State Department to it. I am in favor of letting that law stand. But cut off here that system, and stringent laws will be passed all over the world. The American miner will have to stay in his own country, and if American and English miners can not travel, Asia will remain undeveloped. It is the genius of the Anglo-Saxon race to find and develop mines.

Mr. PERKINS. Would the Senator impose the same tax upon miners in Alaska that the Canadian government now imposes upon those who mine in its territory?

Mr. STEWART. I would not; certainly not. I think it is a great hardship and an outrage. We do not want to commit like outrages and confine our miners to our territory by having retaliatory laws. Let this law stand without this amendment another year, and our Government call the attention of the British Government to it, and have it discussed in its large sense.

It is a question of sufficient importance to receive diplomatic discussion. The miner ought to be free to go anywhere he pleases. He is a pioneer. Ninety-nine out of a hundred spend their lives and get nothing, but occasionally they make a find which benefits mankind. It is absolutely necessary that mining shall go on. If we do not, we are going to have hard times.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My understanding is that the law at present is that British miners have to labor under the same embarrassment in our country that our miners labor under in their country. I think that is right. I understood the Senator from Nevada to say that he is in favor of that.

Mr. STEWART. I am in favor of allowing the law to stand, and see if we can not make it milder and better by negotiation.

Mr. PERKINS. Our Government imposes no taxes upon either the gross proceeds or net proceeds of the mines in Alaska.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood the Senator from Montana a moment ago to read a section of the law that we passed a year ago which does that very thing.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator misunderstood it, I think.

Mr. CARTER. The section of law permits the Secretary of the Interior to promulgate rules and regulations whereby he shall extend to citizens of the Dominion of Canada the same rights and privileges extended to citizens of the United States in British Columbia or the Northwest Territory.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It merely permits it?

Mr. CARTER. It permits it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. He has not done it.

Mr. CARTER. There has been no disposition on the part of the Secretary of the Interior to levy a royalty upon any miners working in American territory.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then, while American miners have been required to give up one-tenth of the gross proceeds of their labor in Canadian territory, the Canadians who come across the line into American territory have no such burdens to bear.

Mr. PERKINS. That is it precisely.

Mr. STEWART. Make that mandatory on the Secretary.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think that is an outrage.

Mr. PERKINS. There is one other proposition which my friend the Senator from Nevada neglected to state. I agree with him that the miner should be encouraged. He and I have had some experience, tramping over mountains and camping in the snow and rain at night. They should be encouraged, but we want to encourage Americans or those who desire to become Americans.

But aside from that proposition he has not stated the whole case. Canada, aside from imposing this 10 per cent onerous tax upon the gross proceeds of every mine that is worked in their dominion, concede or delegate to the parliament of British Columbia, one of the provinces, the power to make and regulate the mining laws in that province. What is the result? British Columbia to-day has laws upon her books, or at least they are enforced by her agents, that prevented American miners who went into the Atlin district in Alaska from even locating a claim; and petition after petition was sent to me when I was in Juneau last summer, saying that American miners in the Atlin district, under the dominion of British Columbia, had no rights whatever.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I wish to say, as the result of what the Senator from California just stated, namely, that where an imaginery line divides this country and Alaska, and on the British side of the line onerous conditions are imposed on Americans and they are compelled to give up, at the very least, 10 per cent gross on all they get for their labor out of British mountains, and, in addition to that, in many localities are practically prohibited from having any rights whatever, and on our side, while the Secretary of the Interior has authority to impose like conditions on British miners coming into our country, no action whatever has been taken—it seems to me that that is a sort of subserviency to British interests which is simply an outrage.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Arkansas permit me to explain?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly I will.

Mr. CARTER. By paying the 10 per cent royalty in the Dominion of Canada or British Columbia, the American miner may locate a mining claim. In the Territory of Alaska a citizen of Canada can not locate a claim at all by paying 10 per cent or any other royalty.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood the statement to be made just now that a lot of Laplanders had gone up there and located claims without number.

Mr. CARTER. That is the proposition to which the amendment goes, and I think the amendment is a meritorious one.

Briefly I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the questions here presented. Section 73 of this bill, found on page 469, reads as follows:

> The title to any lands heretofore conveyed shall not be questioned nor in any manner affected by reason of the alienage of any person from or through whom such title may have been derived.

This section was copied from the code of Oregon. It is obvious from reading it that special conditions existed in Oregon at the time this act was passed, and that the legislature intended to relieve certain property from a clouded title. The section crept into this compilation and escaped attention, so far as the members of the committee are concerned, I believe. Later it was suggested that its effect would be to render invulnerable the title of mining claims acquired by location by certain aliens in the district of Alaska. In view of that construction, the Senator from North Dakota offered the amendment which is now pending.

In connection with this amendment he states—and I believe the statement is correct—that locations were made by a large number of persons in the employ of the United States, having charge of a reindeer herd of which we became possessed in the excitement attendant upon an alleged condition of starvation in the Klondike some years ago, a condition which the Senator from Missouri will recall. I remember when the matter was under consideration before the Committee on Military Affairs, the worthy Dr. Sheldon Jackson explained to the committee that these people up in the Klondike country were in dire distress and actually starving, and that nothing could possibly be done to relieve their distress unless he were permitted to repair to Lapland and there purchase a lot of reindeer and employ a lot of Laplanders to drive them over the Alaskan country. In a moment of mental aberration, I think, the committee, later both Houses of Congress, acceded to that proposition.

It was found, after a little investigation, that no distress existed in the Klondike country at all, that there was no necessity for any Laplanders, that there was no necessity for any reindeer. But in the meantime we had chartered a steamer way over in the North Sea somewhere, had landed the reindeer and Laplanders in Jersey City, had chartered a special train to convey them in great haste across the continent, and then through the Alaskan waters to Skagway, where the Laplanders fell ill. The reindeer could not be sustained with the grass and shrubs in the vicinity, and most of the reindeer were lost. The Laplanders survived. They are still, I believe, in the employ of the Government of the United States, herding the remnant of that purchase of reindeer.

They were in the vicinity of Cape Nome, and immediately on hearing that rich discoveries had been made there they employed this Government transportation, the reindeer—these rescuers of the sufferers in the Klondike—and made a grand rush for Cape Nome. As a matter of fact, they could outstrip the ordinary miner going afoot over the ice and snow, and when Americans reached the Cape Nome region in numbers they found that the Laplanders, the employees of the United States, the rescuers of the distressed miners in the Klondike, were in there with their reindeer in full form and good shape to take up every desirable mining claim in that country. They had located the desirable portions of the region. Their locations stand to-day.

This section of the bill would give validity to those locations. The amendment of the Senator from North Dakota would leave the locations subject to the scrutiny of the court, and require the court to inquire into the citizenship of the locators. Under the mining laws of the United States a valid location of a mining claim can not be made by a person who is not a citizen or who has not declared his intention to become such. Our mining laws are the most liberal of any in the world. The original theory was that the title to the precious metals would remain in the crown, in the sovereign. We departed from that theory and permitted titles to mining claims to pass to citizens of the United States, or to persons who had declared their intention to become citizens. It is now proposed by the Senator from Nevada that we go further still and leave the whole district of Alaska open to exploration and location by citizens of Japan, Korea, India, Lapland, or any other part of the civilized world, or the uncivilized, if you please.

It is a fact well known that just across the Bering Sea, beyond Cape Nome, is the coast of Siberia; that a large number of Russian miners are now at work and have been at work for many, many long years along that coast exploring the coast for gold and developing the mines when found. If we should refuse to adopt this amendment, we would extend a general invitation to those Russian miners to come across Bering Sea, rid themselves at once of the royalty paid to the Russian Government, and take up the mines which the enterprise of our own people had located and assisted in developing.

There does not seem to be any just ground upon which to debate such a proposition for a moment. It has been the theory of our law from the day the first mining law found its way on our statute books up to this hour to preserve the public domain of the United States for exploration and location by American citizens or people who had declared that they desired to become American citizens. To depart from that settled policy now and invite people from everywhere to take up as quickly as they can the mining region of Alaska is such wild folly as would not, it seems to me, seriously be entertained by any body of American citizens anywhere.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada says let us be liberal, give away everything we have in Alaska, in the vain hope that, excited thereto by our wonderful generosity, other people may extend to us some such privilege in the indefinite elsewhere. This amendment is in harmony with the time-honored policy of the Government with reference to our mining claims and should, in my judgment, be adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Montana yield to a question?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask what are the restrictions over on the Russian coast? Can an American go over there at all and take a claim?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly not. The Empire of Russia reserves unto itself absolute control of all mining claims in the realm and does not alienate a single foot of its soil. The principal mines in Siberia are being worked by the convicts or exiles, the political prisoners, sent to that far-away country as a penalty for some alleged offense. They work for the Government as its servants.

Mr. FORAKER, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. MORGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. STEWART. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. Let me offer an amendment first.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to ask if section 73, on page 469, is in the bill as it is proposed to pass it?

Mr. CARTER. It is proposed to strike out that section.

Mr. STEWART. I propose a substitute for it, which I think will be better than to strike it out.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to call attention——

Mr. CARTER. The amendment of the Senator from North Dakota is offered as a substitute for that section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has been recognized, and he moves that the Senate adjourn. Will the Senator from Ohio permit the Chair to lay some business on his desk before the Senate?

Mr. FORAKER. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. If I can have for one second the attention of the Senator from Montana in charge of the bill, I desire to suggest to him that the amendment which I now send to the desk and ask to have read and printed may be a solution of the entire subject. I want his consideration of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The rights and privileges of mining for gold in Alaska shall be extended to the subjects of Great Britain and Russia on the same terms and conditions that are granted by said Governments, respectively, to the citizens of the United States in the provinces or departments of said Governments that border on the Arctic Ocean or Bering Sea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask the Senator from Ohio if he will not withdraw his motion and allow me to make a motion to go into executive session?

Mr. FORAKER. In view of the Senator's request, I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana will withhold the motion for one moment. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Missouri to a bill which he lays before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just let it be presented to the Senate.

LEVI C. FAUGHT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 477) granting a pension to Levi C. Faught, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill may lie on the table for the present. The chairman of the committee is not in his seat at this moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table.

PURCHASE OF DISTINCTIVE PAPER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a letter from the chief of the division of loans and currency submitting an estimate of appropriation, $14,383.20, required for the purchase of distinctive paper for the remainder of the current fiscal year upon which to print national-bank currency; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

YANKTON INDIANS IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and accompanying copy of an agreement of October 2, 1899, made in accordance with the provision of the Indian appropriation act of June 7, 1897, with the Yankton Indians in South Dakota for the cession of the Pipestone Reservation, in Minnesota, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 27, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 26, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read, corrected, and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MEMPHIS, TENN.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 8247, which is on the House Calendar, be taken from the Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

I make this request by direction of that committee, who desire to give a further hearing to the parties interested in the bill.

Mr. SULZER. What is the title of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8247) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.," approved April 24, 1888.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from New York is——

Mr. SHERMAN. That the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. That the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS TO ASTORIA, OREG.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 359) to extend the privilege of immediate transportation of dutiable goods to the port of Astoria, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privilege of immediate transportation of dutiable goods, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, and the amendments thereto, be, and the same is hereby, extended to the port of Astoria, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. SIMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HULL. I will state——

Mr. SIMS. Before the motion is put, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the unfinished business on the Calendar this morning the pension bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on Friday last, with the previous question ordered thereon?

The SPEAKER. That is the unfinished business.

Mr. SIMS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HULL. I think my motion is in order always and is a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the demand for the regular order calls up the unfinished business, which is the consideration of the pension bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on Friday last, upon which the previous question was ordered upon all of the bills and the amendments to their passage. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. SULLOWAY moved to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed, and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr HULL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House this is District day. I understand more important legislation is coming before the House, and I ask unanimous consent that it be in order to call up District business next Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, asks unanimous consent that Monday, one week from to-day, be set apart for business from the District Committee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my motion, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill making appropriations for the Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the military appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. And pending that, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the committee this morning arranged for general debate to run until Wednesday at 2 o'clock, and then to consider the bill under the five-minute rule and vote on the bill and pending amendments on Thursday at 4 o'clock. In view of the fact that an hour or more has been taken to-day, I will modify that, after consultation with members of the committee, and ask unanimous consent for an agreement on the part of the House that general debate may run until Wednesday at 3 o'clock, when the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule until Thursday at 4 o'clock, when a vote shall be taken upon the bill and the pending amendments.

Mr. SULZER. And it is also agreed, as I understand it, that all members who speak on the bill shall have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD. This was agreed to by the committee.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask if the result of that agreement might not be that the bill would not be read through for amendment?

Mr. HULL. I think I can say that that might be the result; I do not think it would be.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I do not object to the first part of the arrangement.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was going to suggest that the request might be modified.

Mr. HULL. I do not think there is any doubt on earth but that we shall read the bill through in the seven hours devoted to that purpose. There is no fight on the bill.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I think that would be likely to be true, but why does not the gentleman from Iowa modify his request so that the bill may be read under the five-minute rule until its completion and a vote then taken? There will be no roll call on the bill.

Mr. HULL. The only idea the committee had in fixing this was at the request of gentlemen on the other side of the House, to give as much time as possible for general debate on the ground that there is no contest over the bill, and that there was no doubt about getting the bill read under the five-minute rule in that time. Consideration of the bill would not take a day. General debate is not for the bill.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. We might read and pass the bill first and talk about it afterwards. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. I am not willing to extend the general debate for two days and then take the chances on having an indefinite general debate under the five-minute rule. The questions discussed do not bear any relation to this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The suggestion I was going to make was in line with that made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY]. It is a bad precedent to fix the time arbitrarily for a vote on an appropriation bill when you may not complete its reading under the five-minute rule. I do not think there will be any objection to closing general debate on Wednesday at 3 o'clock, and then reading the bill under the five-minute rule, and think it can be concluded on Thursday. I hope that agreement can be made.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It would be very easy if the rule was invoked strictly under the five-minute rule and the debate was compelled to be germane; but no one can tell whether that rule will be enforced strictly or not. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that we ought never to enter into such an agreement as to permit us to pass an appropriation bill without considering it in detail.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is at least liable to abuse where an agreement is made that cuts off the reading of an appropriation bill through under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HULL. Well, Mr. Speaker, if there can be no agreement which will bring a vote on the bill not later than Thursday, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill, and I shall move to close debate when, in my judgment, the time shall arrive.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that general debate on the bill close at 3 o'clock on Wednesday, and the bill be then taken up under the five-minute rule, and that a vote be had on the bill at 4 o'clock on Thursday.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That is the same proposition to which I objected.

Mr. SULZER. Very well, then; I now ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill close at 3 o'clock on Wednesday.

Mr. HULL. I object to that. We do not need now to fix the time allowed for general debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the objection of gentlemen is. It was agreed to in the committee.

Mr. HULL. The agreement in the committee went clear through; the idea was to get as early a vote on the bill as we could. It was an agreement as a whole. If you leave the other part open, you may have an indefinite contest. If we are to have an unlimited debate under the five-minute rule, we do not know when it might end.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Iowa will agree to my proposition that general debate end on Wednesday next at 3 p. m., as the committee agreed on this morning. This is an important bill.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House will now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from New York, Mr. SHERMAN, will take the chair.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, all points of order are reserved on this bill.

In accordance with the motion of Mr. HULL, just agreed to, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8582) making appropriations for the support of the Regular and Volunteer Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy but a brief time in explanation of this bill. I think the bill as submitted to the House has the support of the Committee on Military Affairs as a whole—both the majority and minority members. The amount carried by the bill is $111,600,364.55. This is a reduction of the estimates, which, as submitted by the War Department, carried $127,712,183.55. The main reduction in the bill is in regard to transportation of our troops, with a small reduction of the pay of the Army, both officers and men. All estimates submitted are always for the full number of men authorized by law to be enlisted, yet we all know, as a matter of fact, that the condition never exists when the Army is absolutely at its maximum strength. The reduction in this case is something over 10 per cent of the amount of the estimate, and the Army at this time is more than 10 per cent below its maximum, and, as recruiting is not going on actively, the prospect is for a further reduction in the Army; so that the amount reported in this bill is, in my judgment, more than ample to meet the expenditures for the fiscal year for which we are appropriating.

The estimate of the Department in regard to transportation was for the mustering out and the return to this country within the next fiscal year of the entire Army, because on the 1st of July, 1901, the term of enlistment of all the men recruited under the law passed by Congress at its last session expires, and under that law the Army is to be reduced to the 25,000 provided for at the outbreak of the Spanish war, with the exception of the addition which was made in the artillery branch of the service. So that if no further legislation is had the Army will be reduced on the 1st of July, 1901, to the neighborhood of 28,000 enlisted men. But every gentleman here knows that with the term of enlistment expiring on July 1, 1901, comes in a fiscal year beyond the period for which we are now appropriating. It will be utterly impracticable for the entire Army to be returned to this country during the fiscal year covered by this bill. So we have reduced the estimate in that particular some $8,000,000, allowing, in my judgment, more than will be necessary to provide for the wants of the Government during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901. These, I think, are the main reductions made from the estimates.

Mr. STEELE. I do not see how it follows that the law with reference to the mustering out of these troops can not be complied with. If it is necessary to commence in February preceding the 1st of July, the law ought to be so framed that we may have the money on hand to make it operative without the necessity of another appropriation.

Mr. HULL. The law, Mr. Chairman, provides for the expiration of the term of enlistment on the 1st of July, the day the next fiscal year begins. What is paid by this bill is before the 1st of July, 1901. At the second session of Congress there will be another appropriation bill brought in, when, if necessary, this matter can be provided for without any trouble whatever and without a deficiency.

Mr. STEELE. If Congress is not in session, the Department will have to wait until December before it can have the money with which to bring these men home.

Mr. HULL. We are not providing now for the fiscal year ending next July, but for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901. Congress will convene on the first Monday of December next, and we shall then have more information on this matter than we have now. There will be another appropriation bill presented for another fiscal year; and if there is a shortage or any danger of difficulty, it can be provided for without any damage to the interests of the service in any particular whatever. I think the gentleman from Indiana will agree with me that in these matters—and they are only estimates—the Department estimates for the largest amount that can possibly be required.

The last appropriation bill carried about $80,000,000, in round numbers. There was a deficiency in these appropriations of some $45,000,000, caused by a change of the law, provision having been made for a temporary force to be mustered out and mustered in in a manner not provided for at the time our appropriation was made.

I think you gentlemen who were here at that time will remember that in answer to a question by Mr. Dockery, when the House bill and the Senate bill were being considered, we very frankly stated that our appropriation was largely a matter of guess, because the law had not been settled; but that if the Senate bill prevailed, there would be a deficiency of at least $30,000,000. The deficiency actually exceeded that somewhat. But I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that if this bill is passed just as it is reported from the committee, there will be a deficiency of any considerable amount in any of the items appropriated for.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the new legislation that is proposed in the bill.

On page 4, line 1, we make an appropriation—

> For the purpose of connecting headquarters, Department of Alaska, at St. Michael, by military telegraph and cable lines with Fort Egbert, Cape Nome, and other military stations in Alaska, $450,550: Provided, That commercial business may be done over these military lines under such conditions as may be deemed, by the Secretary of War, equitable and in the public interests, and that the sum hereby appropriated shall be immediately available.

I do not believe that this is subject to a point of order. It is in the line of our appropriation so far as it has been made for years, with the exception that it specifically provides where a certain amount of money shall be expended. It is called for by the report from the War Department submitted by General Greely, the Chief of the Signal Corps, and approved by the Secretary of War.

I simply want to call attention to the fact that it is a new provision. I do not believe it is subject to a point of order; but upon the same page, the proviso commencing in line 15 and ending in line 18 is also new legislation. That proviso is as follows:

> Provided, That hereafter length of service pay of all officers in the Regular Army holding commissions in the provisional army shall be paid on their rank in the Regular Army.

Whether that is subject to a point of order or not I am not now prepared to give an opinion. It is called for by the fact that we have many officers in the Regular Army serving with provisional regiments. We have captains of the Regular Army who are colonels of provisional regiments. These captains have length of service pay as captains. The law provides that while serving as colonel of a regiment the officer shall have the pay of that rank, and not have the pay proper of his regular rank or lineal rank in the Regular Army.

In other words, the pay proper of a captain is suspended. The office is not vacated, but the pay proper is suspended, and the officer is paid as colonel of the provisional regiment. But, in addition to that, the Department has given him what is called "length of service" pay on his higher temporary rank. As captain in the Regular Army he has length-of-service pay, increasing 10 per cent on his regular rank each five years up to 40 per cent. After twenty years' service there is no increase of service pay, but in place of figuring the service pay on his lineal rank in the Regular Army, they figure it on his rank as a colonel in the Volunteer Army, making a considerable addition to his compensation other than that of the pay of a colonel; and it seemed to the committee that a captain who succeeded in securing one of these very desirable appointments—because every captain in the Regular Army would be delighted to have such an appointment—would get his pay increased to the rank in which he is serving, and that he had no claim in justice or in equity to have also his length of service pay increased over that of the other members of the Army of his lineal rank who could not get these commissions, by computing the length of service pay on the higher compensation.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Will the gentleman allow me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HULL. I do.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. If these captains are getting this extra pay, is it not because they have served a long time?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Does not the committee think, then, that they are entitled to this extra pay?

Mr. HULL. Certainly; and they get it as captains or on their lineal rank. It does not cut them off from their regular length of service pay as captains or rank in the Regular Army.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Well, then——

Mr. HULL. But the point that the committee made was this: Suppose the gentleman from New York and myself were both captains——

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I understand the point thoroughly, but it seems to me that these men are selected because they are meritorious, are selected over their comrades because of good service, and I submit that they ought to have the compensation which would naturally come to them.

Mr. HULL. The length of service pay does not come from a service of five years or more as a colonel. One of these captains serves a year as a colonel, and after his service as colonel is over he goes back to his place in the Regular Army as captain.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Neither does that take place with reference to any other officer.

Mr. HULL. That is true.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. If a man is made a brigadier-general to-morrow——

Mr. HULL. Then there is no length of service pay at all.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. If he is made a colonel, he gets it.

Mr. HULL. If he is a colonel in the regular establishment, he gets it, and ought to, because that is his regular place.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I can not see the difference.

Mr. HULL. This is the difference: Here is a man commissioned from the State of New York as a colonel of a State regiment. He gets his pay as colonel of a regiment. Here is another man selected out of the Regular Army, from a lower grade, and commissioned as colonel of a regiment. This gentleman is colonel of a provisional regiment, and he holds the same rank as the other colonel. They will both go out in two years from the time when the regiment was recruited. The one who was commissioned from civil life gets the full pay of a colonel and nothing else. The other, from the Regular Army, gets the full pay of a colonel, and in addition to that he gets his length of service pay. Now, he has earned the length of service pay as a captain, but he has not earned it as colonel of a regiment.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I think I agree with the gentleman in some respects; but suppose two officers started into the service, say, on the 23d day of February, 1866, when a great many of these colonels were appointed. There are a very few officers who are serving in regiments that were not fortunate in regimental promotions, and until we had lineal promotion in order to make the promotions equal they were at great disadvantage. So that officers who had service in the Volunteer Army higher than some others, but who came into the Regular Army regiments that gave them slow promotion, are yet majors, while there are colonels appointed on the same day and who have had no more regular service and not as much volunteer service as they had.

Now, these men have been at a disadvantage all these years because they happened to be in regiments where lineal promotions did not obtain.

Mr. HULL. This proviso does not affect that. It only affects temporary commissions.

Mr. STEELE. If a captain who has been serving just as long as a colonel has had just as much experience, and because of his experience is made a colonel, it seems to me that when he is serving right along with an officer who has had no more service than he has he ought to have the same pay that the other colonel has, and the reason why he gets more than the volunteer colonel is because of his greater experience.

Mr. HULL. This does not affect a colonel in the Regular Army at all.

Mr. STEELE. I know it does not, but it affects a captain who has been promoted to be a colonel in a volunteer regiment.

Mr. CAPRON. A colonel of volunteers.

Mr. HULL. Not in the Regular Army.

Mr. STEELE. I mean an officer—a captain, if you please—who has been appointed a colonel in a volunteer regiment. He has served just as long and has had the same experience as the regular colonel, and yet he will not get the longevity pay of a colonel but will only get the longevity pay of a captain instead.

Mr. HULL. I think there are very few captains who have had the same service as the men who are now colonels in the Regular Army.

Now, I want to get along with my remarks——

Mr. STEELE. I will not take your time.

Mr. HULL. I am glad to have the gentleman mention that, so that we will have it to consider.

On page 11 of the bill there is a provision for 10 junior veterinary surgeons. That is absolutely new legislation increasing the number of veterinary surgeons and providing in regard to their pay. That provision is as follows:

For pay of 10 junior veterinary surgeons, $9,000: Provided, That the additional veterinary surgeons provided for in this bill shall be graduates of some recognized veterinary college: Provided further, That junior veterinary surgeons shall be allowed and paid monthly the sum of $3.71 during the entire period of their service in lieu of the clothing allowance of a sergeant-major.

I think that would go out on a point of order without any doubt, but I hope the point of order will not be made, as these men will save the Government many times their salaries, and it is just as important for the artillery to have veterinary surgeons as it is for the cavalry. The cavalry have one veterinary surgeon now for part of their regiments only. Some of them are without veterinary surgeons. Some of them have two. The total number of veterinary surgeons in the Army is ten. The total number of cavalry regiments is ten, and the total number of artillery regiments is seven. You ought to provide each of these regiments with veterinary surgeons.

On page 14, commencing with the proviso in line 12 and ending with line 18, is new legislation. That proviso is as follows:

Provided, That hereafter the pay of all officers and enlisted men serving beyond the limits of the United States in the islands in possession or under the control of the United States, and in the Territory of Alaska, shall be increased 10 per cent for officers and 20 per cent for enlisted men over and above the rates of pay as fixed by law in time of peace.

That is subject to a point of order, but again I express the hope that members will give it careful consideration and recognize the justice of it, so that when we come to pass upon it no one will raise the point of order.

I want to explain what it is as briefly as possible. You gentlemen will remember that in enacting the law under which our Army was raised at the beginning of our war with Spain, we put in a proviso that the enlisted men should have 20 per cent increase of pay during time of war. The flat pay of enlisted men is $13 a month, and under this proviso they get $15.60. But the war is over. I do not believe they have a right to pay this now; and without any question, after the money appropriated by the bill that this Congress passed to pay this extra compensation has been exhausted, the Treasury can not pay it to the Army.

I believe the men in the Philippines are entitled to the 20 per cent additional pay. We have provided for it in this bill. More than that, there was a provision in the bill which gave officers 20 per cent additional, but that was stricken out before that bill passed. This bill gives to the officers 10 per cent additional pay and is manifestly new legislation, and yet I think every man here will admit that an officer serving in the Philippines is at more disadvantage than the 10 per cent will make up for. I can give you one illustration. A major in the Regular Army went to the Philippines with the first expedition and stayed there until recently, when he returned, and is now on duty here. All the time that he served there he had to hire his own quarters, and lost at least $1,200 of actual cash by serving there.

Now, the allowance made for commutation of quarters here is $12 a month for each room, and a major would have four rooms, which is $48 a month. He lost all that. It cost him the extra money over what the man serving in Washington had to meet when serving his country under a detail that very few of them are very anxious to fill. They would all rather stay here. They go because it is their duty and they are ordered to go. This 10 per cent additional to officers will not make up the actual additional expense that the officer is put to while serving in that country.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question upon that point?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this 10 per cent additional pay to officers and 20 per cent additional pay to enlisted men is now being paid?

Mr. HULL. Ten per cent to officers is not being paid; but the 20 per cent additional to enlisted men is, as I understand.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Up to a very recent time was it not under a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury that they were entitled to it?

Mr. HULL. I do not know as to that. It is paid, and the Treasury has not hung it up.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If it is being paid, what is the necessity for any legislation?

Mr. HULL. Because I think the whole question is largely by sufferance. If this Congress, early in the session, had not passed a special appropriation to pay it, it would have been held up. The language of the old law is "in time of war."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that very well; but the gentleman said, and I understand it to be true, that 20 per cent to enlisted men has been paid all along, and is now being paid under a ruling of the officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. HULL. I do not know about any ruling of the Treasury, but it has been paid.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If that is true, and they are still paying it, does the gentleman mean to take the position that what has been heretofore paid has been improperly or unlawfully paid?

Mr. MARSH. I would say to the gentleman from Tennessee that this provision is inserted in the bill for the purpose of removing any doubt upon that point.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not see how there can be any doubt on the point.

Mr. MARSH. The gentleman says there can be no doubt, and we think there is doubt.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How can there be, if there has been a ruling?

Mr. MARSH. I do not want to argue the matter. I say that this has been put in for the purpose of covering any doubt there might be on that question. I think the money ought to be paid, and if there is any doubt as to whether the men could be paid under the existing law this removes that doubt.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that; but if the ruling has been made——

Mr. MARSH. And that doubt grows out of the construction as to whether there is a war going on in the Philippines or not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, I understand a ruling has been made, and under that ruling it has been paid; and if so, no one objects; and I can not see what necessity there is to amend existing law.

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the Committee the first decision of the War Department after the conclusion of the treaty was that they could not continue this payment, and afterwards they determined to continue it, and asked Congress for an appropriation, which was given in this Congress.

Mr. MARSH. This Congress?

Mr. HULL. Yes; this Congress. We did not amend the law. Now the war is over; we all know that; and the construction has been liberal in the past—and I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee in my judgment it has properly been liberal—in giving them this additional pay for the great services that they are called upon to render in those island possessions, under different conditions from those which prevail at their homes; and there can be no doubt of the further fact that unless we provide in this bill something of this kind, the Department will be compelled to adjust the pay to the flat pay of $13 a month. If any member believes that these men should be paid this small increase, then there is no reason for any point of order being raised against it. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. RIDGELY. I think there will be no objection to paying the 20 per cent, but there is one other matter that seems to be an open question with the War Department, and I want to know if you have provided for it. That is, the extra month's pay to all the soldiers who served in the Spanish war.

Mr. HULL. We have that bill before us as a separate measure. It is not in order on this bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. I hope the bill will be reported favorably.

Mr. HULL. I will say that the bill we have before us is for more than that. It involves two months' pay to some parties and one month's pay to others.

Mr. RIDGELY. And the gentleman thinks the committee will report such a bill?

Mr. HULL. Yes; but I do not know it.

Mr. RIDGELY. I am glad to know it.

Mr. GRIGGS. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption at this point?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. GRIGGS. I want to ask a question for information solely. I understand the officers of the Regular Army who served in the volunteer regiments during the war between the United States and Spain are denied the extra pay given to volunteer officers who served in the war.

Mr. HULL. Certainly; and they ought to be.

Mr. GRIGGS. Is that the truth?

Mr. HULL. Certainly; it is the business of the regular officers to fight. It is their life business. The volunteer goes in as a matter of patriotism; he is not obliged to go. After a short time in the service he goes back to neglected business.

Mr. GRIGGS. I am not contesting the provision. I simply wanted to ask if this bill provided that officers of the Regular Army who served in volunteer regiments shall now receive it.

Mr. HULL. Not at all; and as far as I am concerned, I would oppose actively such a proposition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 16, lines 17 to 20, there is simply some new language inserted to make clear whom they are paying. It is not subject to a point of order because they have been paid; it is simply making the bill more particular, and in detail, than it has been heretofore since we have had this class of people to pay.

On page 19, commencing after the word "soldier," in line 3, "and to enable the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to cause to be transported to their homes the remains of civilian employees of the Army who have died or who may hereafter die while in the employment of the War Department in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines;" that is new legislation. I think it is unnecessary to take the committee's time in saying what it is, for every member knows what that provides for.

On page 20 that proviso is a limitation or a direction on how some of this money shall be used. It was placed there at the request of the War Department, because it was necessary to make it immediately available. I do not believe that would be subject to a point of order, as I think in appropriation bills there is the widest latitude as to limits placed upon the funds provided for.

On page 24 there are two items that are subject to a point of order. The first begins after the word "discharge," in line 12, in these words:

For indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, etc., destroyed by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons.

The War Department submitted to us that there had been in the neighborhood of $10,000 worth of personal clothing of men and officers destroyed on account of being exposed to contagion in Cuba and other islands, especially in Cuba, and it is a direct loss to the officers and to the men; and we believe that while in the line of duty they not only exposed their clothing but their lives, the Government ought at least to make good the amount of clothing destroyed by the sanitary officers, taken from them and burned up. So that while it is new legislation, it seems to me that it will appeal to the sense of justice and right of every member of the House.

The next provision is much wider in its scope. Commencing after the word "dollars," in line 15, and going down to the close of line 23, on page 34, there is this proviso:

Provided, That on application of the governor of any State or Territory the Secretary of War is authorized to replace the quartermaster stores which the volunteers from said State or Territory carried into the service of the United States Army during the recent war with Spain, and which have been retained by the United States, exclusive of such stores as have been allowed for in the office of the Auditor for the War Department and such award accepted by a State.

We in our last appropriation bill provided for doing exactly this as to the ordnance stores and supplies. We all know that when the war broke out the Government was short of tents, short of clothing and camp equipage, and that in a large number of States, if not all of them, where there was militia, or the organized National Guards, they went into the service, and their clothing, tents, and camp equipage were turned over to the Government. In place of making every State and Territory go before the Department and prove what the clothing and tents and equipage were worth, we return it in kind.

It is a liberal proposition on the part of the Government, but it is no more than should be done under the circumstances. It is true many of the tents were old, much of the clothing had been worn, and that we will give them new, but, gentlemen, it came into the service of the Government at a time when the country was anxious to see the boys as well cared for as possible; it gave us clothing, tents, and camp equipage at a time when the Government could not immediately provide it, and, in my judgment, this Congress will not do any damage to the Treasury or the interests of the country if it deals liberally with the National Guards and the militia of the States in returning them new clothing and new camp equipage for what they surrendered to the Government at the outbreak of the war.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. How is that to be determined?

Mr. HULL. The Government has on its record now the amount that every State furnished. The officers of the Government have been going over these supplies to find out their value, and I will say to the gentleman very frankly that those officers in a large number of cases have determined that the value of this material furnished by the States is very small. Still it is true that these supplies answered the purpose of the Government at that time. The supplies properly belonged to the States or to their guards. The Government had the benefit of it all. No matter if it was not new, no matter if the supplies were not as good as they might have been, they answered the purpose of the Government, and by dealing liberally with the States in this matter we are only supporting our own people, providing for our own defense, and encouraging our own great reserve in the National Guard. Every State is interested in this matter.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Can the gentleman give us any approximate idea of what this property amounts to in value?

Mr. HULL. I think it will amount to only $800,000 or $1,000,000; and if the provision of the bill on this subject is not stricken out on the point of order, the committee have instructed me to move to add, in line 15, after the words "eight million," the words "five hundred thousand;" so that the total appropriation under that head will be $8,500,000—being an increase of the appropriation for the purpose now under consideration.

Mr. MAHON. As I understand, if we do not return these things on application of the governors, we shall have to pay for them?

Mr. HULL. Certainly. But the amount which the States would receive in money would not equal the value of the material which we propose to return to them.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Why not give them the money instead of the stuff?

Mr. HULL. Because if you give them the money they can not, with the amount which will be received, supply themselves to the same extent with material. If you give them the money under the present law, you have got to find out how much these things were worth. Now, take a tent, for instance, furnished by a State to the Government. It may have been in use for some years. If put on the market it would have sold as old material and would have brought but a small price; yet it answered the purpose of the Government; it might have answered the purposes of the guard for years, yet in active service it would soon go to pieces. If that tent were returned in kind, the State would receive a new tent. So far as I am concerned, I am willing that the Government should give to the States new tents—new material in all cases in return for that which they tendered the General Government when the war commenced.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. This proviso leaves the question entirely open as to the amount to be paid and the method by which the property is to be returned.

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. What I want to know is, why you can not appropriate a sum of money to cover the expense which the States may prove to have been incurred by them, and then let them procure in their own way such equipment as they themselves think they need for the National Guard.

Mr. HULL. Why, Mr. Chairman, if we appropriate the money we appropriate it only for the amount that the material was worth. In returning the material in kind we shall be doing what the National Guard of every State has asked us to do, and what the State authorities of every State, so far as we have heard from them, request that Congress shall do. We do the same thing with our ordnance and with our camp equipage, etc.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. But these States, in getting their original equipments, did not get their supplies from the General Government; they supplied themselves in their own way, according to the facilities they then had at hand.

Mr. HULL. The General Government at no time has undertaken to supply the National Guard with quartermaster's supplies.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The point I desired to make is this: If we give a State a sum of money which it proves is sufficient to reimburse it for what it has lost, then in its own way it can buy such equipments as it may deem necessary.

Mr. HULL. That is the law now.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Why not leave it that way?

Mr. HULL. Because when we give the States the value of what they supplied to the Government, they can not with that amount supply themselves with the same quantity of new material. But when we return them the property in kind, they will receive the same number of uniforms for the same number of men, the same number of tents, the same amount of camp equipage that they turned in; and as that was old material, we are giving all that they lost and more, too. It is that "more, too," that I am in favor of giving them.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I hope the gentleman will not understand that I am opposed to the proposition to make this return. I agree that there ought to be a proper return made, but I think the States would prefer to receive the money and then in their own way buy what would suit their purposes. I think they can supply themselves with what they want better than the General Government can supply them.

Mr. HULL. If we should appropriate a lump sum to be distributed among the States, the amount would have to be apportioned in accordance with the number of men in service. It would be paid to the State treasury, of course, and could only be expended when the legislature of the State had made the necessary appropriation.

Now, in the very nature of things, the State of Iowa or the State of Michigan or any other State can not supply the same quality of uniform, the same amount of tents and equipage, etc., for the same amount of money that the General Government could, because it makes or purchases large amounts of these materials. So the State itself, under the arrangement proposed, will fare better than if we made a lump appropriation of money.

Mr. BROMWELL. Allow me to suggest, too, that the Government, especially when the war in the Philippines is closed, will have large quantities of ordnance supplies, together with tents and other equipage, which will be available for this purpose, and which otherwise it would have to store or sell at a very low price. But, availing itself of that material already on hand, it can make the return to the States in kind.

Mr. HULL. I think that they have a great deal that they can return in kind now.

Mr. THROPP. It is not the purpose of the Government to return to these States the old tents that have been used in the Philippines, as I understand it, but it is to return to the States an equal number of new tents in place of the old tents.

Mr. HULL. If they have them to spare, it will be out of their stock. If they have not got them to spare, it will be to furnish them tents anyhow.

Mr. THROPP. The States will be better supplied.

Mr. HULL. Yes; and I want to say that in this matter we have followed the universal request of the National Guard, who have the matter at heart more than we have, and have followed the requests of the governors of the States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Several bills have been introduced in this Congress relative to increasing the appropriation for the equipment of the National Guard from $400,000 to $2,000,000. Is that covered by this bill?

Mr. HULL. That is not. That comes before the Committee on the Militia, of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] is chairman. The matter has been favorably reported, and it is in charge of the gentleman from Illinois.

On page 28 there is a very little amendment, in lines 18 and 19, by which, if this provision carries, we will furnish powder for the firing of salutes at burials of soldiers at soldiers and sailors' State homes, as well as at the National Homes. That is all there is to that. It includes that, and also the firing of morning and evening guns at the State homes. That is a new provision, which will be subject to a point of order, but everybody knows exactly what it means.

I think the only other provision that is new is on page 30, commencing with line 7 and ending with line 14, as follows:

> Hereafter all volunteer officers and soldiers who served in the United States Army, regular or volunteer, during the late war with Spain, and all who served, or shall serve, in the Philippine Islands, shall be admitted to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers on the same terms and conditions as officers and soldiers who served in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion from 1861 to 1865.

The object of that amendment is to open the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to those who fought in the Spanish war or to those who are hereafter disabled in the Philippines or in any part of our possessions. That is all there is to that, and I think, Mr. Chairman, these are all the new provisions that are in the bill in any form whatever.

I will say to gentlemen that the committee have instructed the offering of an amendment to this section, if it is not stricken out on a point of order when it is reached under the five-minute rule, which amendment enlarges the scope of it a little more than the bill does.

My understanding is that the law as it now stands opens these volunteer homes to men who served in the war of 1812, the Mexican war, and the civil war, and who have been honorably discharged; but the construction of the language is such that men who served in the Mexican war and afterwards served in the war of the rebellion against the Government can not gain access to these homes. The amendment that will be offered to this section will provide that the men who served in the Mexican war or in the recent war or any war can have access to these homes, regardless of service in the Confederate army.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I should like to ask whether this proviso at the bottom of page 28—

> Provided, That hereafter the Chief of Ordnance is authorized to issue such obsolete or condemned ordnance, gun carriages, and ordnance stores as may be needed for ornamental purposes to the Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, the Homes to pay for transportation and such other expenses as are necessary—is intended to mean the National Homes only, or whether that would cover such homes as the Michigan Soldiers' Home?

Mr. HULL. I think that is construed to cover simply the National Homes, but am not sure.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Why not let it cover the State homes? I make that suggestion.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that I will get a construction of that from the War Department before the bill is taken up under the five-minute rule. I have no objection to its reaching all homes, and I think, upon a second thought, the language should have that construction. I may be mistaken in my first suggestion.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. While the Michigan Soldier's Home is a State institution, it is also somewhat national in its character.

Mr. HULL. That is true of all our homes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And we would like that privilege extended to the State homes.

Mr. HULL. That would come up under the five-minute rule. Now, if there is no other gentleman who desires to ask me a question——

Mr. DRIGGS. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I do.

Mr. DRIGGS. For my own information, I should like to know if the gentleman from Iowa can tell me what were the total appropriations for the Army and everything connected with the Army for the fiscal year ending July 1 or June 30, 1900?

Mr. HULL. That was during the war period, and we had many extra appropriations, and I do not remember. I have never counted it up. For the fiscal year that will end the 1st of July next my impression is that the total is about $128,000,000. That includes the deficiencies, that have already passed this Congress, for the balance of this fiscal year.

Mr. DRIGGS. That is about $17,000,000 decrease in appropriation.

Mr. HULL. Yes; this decreases that, and I think very properly.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PARKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. R. 854. An act granting an increase of pension to John J. McCormick.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. SULZER. I ask the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JETT], a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, as has been stated by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, this bill carries in round numbers $112,000,000. It is $16,000,000 short of the estimates that were furnished to the committee by the War Department.

I am of the opinion that before the fiscal year ends, for which this appropriation is made, there will be a deficiency, and that there will be a deficiency carried for the Army in the next deficiency bill for the fiscal year closing June 30, 1901. I base this upon the estimates made by the War Department, and upon what the expenditures of the War Department have been for the present fiscal year which will close June 30, 1900.

As will be remembered, in the appropriation bill for the Army that was passed for the fiscal year closing June 30, 1900, we appropriated $80,000,000. In the deficiency bill which passed this House during the early part of the session there was an appropriation of $47,000,000 carried for the Army, which will make the total expenditures for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, the sum of $127,000,000. The estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, were $128,000,000. There was cut, by the committee, out of one item, for instance, the item for the pay of enlisted men, the sum of $1,000,000. There was taken out of the estimate of the War Department, from the items of travel pay for enlisted men, $2,800,145. There was a deduction from the item estimated by the War Department for clothing not drawn, $1,000,000. There was also taken out of the item of total pay of the Army, which item is estimated by the War Department at $47,969,000—out of this item alone the sum of $5,254,595 was deducted. But the largest deduction that was made was in the item for transportation of the Army and supplies. In that item alone over $8,678,000 was deducted.

I simply mention these facts to substantiate what I said a moment ago, that while this bill carries $112,000,000 and the estimates were $128,000,000, I believe the appropriation made at this time is not and will not be sufficient to defray the expenses of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

Mr. Chairman, among other items carried by this bill I see one on page 10 that reads as follows:

For pay of officers on the retired list and for officers who may be placed thereon during the current year, $1,273,000.

Now, I do not suppose that there is any material opposition to the passage of this bill. There may be some slight changes in its phraseology. In some of the items there may be slight increases and in others slight deductions may be made; but the total amount carried by the bill will be necessary for the support of the Army; and while I am opposed to the policy that requires such a large appropriation for the maintenance and support of the Army, yet since they have been called into the field under the directions of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, I believe every member on this floor as well as myself is in favor of making liberal appropriations for the proper maintenance of the Army while it is so serving. So I desire to call the attention of the committee for a short time to this item which refers to retired officers. I am not going to criticise the officers who are on the retired list, but there is this significant statement in this item. It says:

For pay of officers on the retired list, and for officers who may be placed thereon during the current year.

Just what significance we may give to the latter part of this item I suppose is a mere difference of opinion in the minds of each member of the House. But I want to call the attention of the committee more definitely to the wholesale appointments and retirements that have been made during the last three years—during the present Administration. My attention was called a short time ago to an article on this subject in one of the great newspapers that is published in the State of Illinois. It was there charged that there is an unlimited retired list, notwithstanding the corps of active brigadier-generals is restricted by law to six, and that in pursuance of this policy many brigadier-generals have been placed on the retired list long before they would have been compelled by the age limit to retire.

After thinking about this matter for some time, I concluded to investigate for myself, and I desire now to submit here a list of appointments of major and brigadier generals that have been made within the last three years, showing the time of appointment and the length of service in the positions to which they were appointed, together with the date of retirement.

The list is as follows:

List of appointees.

* Suspended by court-martial. † Died.

Mr. Chairman, the law in force as to the number of major and brigadier generals is as follows:

From and after the date of the approval of this act the Army of the United States shall consist of three major-generals and six brigadier-generals.

This is the permanent establishment—the Regular Army.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to call the attention of the House to the list to show the number of retirements that took place within so short a period after the appointments were made. In many instances after the officer had been promoted to the rank of a brigadier-general he was placed immediately, almost, upon the retired list; in some cases he only served in the capacity of a brigadier-general, after having received his appointment, until he was retired—a period of one or two days, some of four days, some of six, eight, ten, and twelve days, and some for two or three weeks.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman, without difficulty, inform us what is the difference of pay of those retired officers where the promotion is made in that way?

Mr. JETT. I will come to that, I will say to my colleague, in a short time, before I conclude what I have to say upon this subject.

Mr. Chairman, I find that General Wheaton was made a major-general on the 2d day of April, 1897. He was retired May 8, 1897. That Gen. J. W. Forsyth was appointed major-general on the 11th day of May, 1897, and he was retired on the 14th day of May, the same year.

Gen. Zenas R. Bliss was made a major-general on the 14th of May, 1897, and he, too, was retired on May 22, 1897. Gen. John R. Brooke is the only major-general who was appointed—and his appointment was made on May 22, 1897—that is now in the service of the Government. There have been appointed ten brigadier-generals of the staff since the coming in of the present Administration. On September 11, 1897, Samuel Breck was promoted to the position of brigadier-general, and on February 25, 1898, he was retired. On the 14th of November, 1897, Gen. W. H. Bell was made a brigadier-general of the staff, and on the 28th of January, 1898, he, too, was retired. On the 28th day of January, 1898, being the same day that General Bell was retired, Gen. S. T. Cushing was made a brigadier-general, and on the 21st of April, 1898, he was retired.

On February 3, 1898, Gen. M. I. Ludington, present Quartermaster, was made brigadier-general of staff, and he is at the present time in actual service. Gen. H. C. Corbin was, on the 25th of February, 1898, made a brigadier-general of staff, and he is in the service of the Government at the present time.

On April 21, 1898, Gen. W. H. Nash was made a brigadier-general, and on May 2 of the same year he, too, was placed upon the retired list.

On the 3d of May, 1898, Gen. C. P. Eagan was made a brigadier-general, and he is now suspended; a fact with which every member of this committee is very familiar, not only of his suspension, but of that which occasioned it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And is it not true that he is getting his full pay during his holiday?

Mr. JETT. Yes; he is now on a pleasure trip in the Hawaiian Islands, drawing a salary of $5,500 a year. [Laughter.]

On the 30th day of January, 1899, Gen. A. B. Carey was made a brigadier-general, and on July 12 of the same year he too was retired.

On the 5th day of April, 1899, Gen. A. R. Buffington was made a brigadier-general, and he is now in the service, as is Gen. Alfred E. Bates, who was also made a brigadier-general July 12, 1899.

Mr. Chairman, I will now call the attention of the committee to the brigadier-generals of the line, of those that have been appointed since the coming in of the present Administration, and show just how many have been appointed and how many have been retired and the length of service of each.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JETT. Certainly, to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Have you any statement as to how many of these officers served in the civil war?

Mr. JETT. I have not that data at my command at this time, but it can be secured very conveniently, I suppose, by reference to the Army Register.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Did not they all serve in the civil war?

Mr. JETT. I am not prepared to say whether they did or not, but I will refer my friend to the Army Register, where that can be ascertained without any difficulty. But if they did, is that any reason why they should a few hours, a few days, or a few weeks before they have reached the retirement age be promoted to the next higher rank expressly for the purpose of receiving the higher pay when they are placed on the retired list?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman think that after their service, after thirty-five years, that something more than a retired colonel's pay is due to these men?

Mr. JETT. I did not understand my colleague.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman think that after a service since the war of thirty-five years, besides their services in the late war, some promotion is really due to these men?

Mr. JETT. I will say this. I prefaced my remarks by saying that I was not criticising the officers themselves, but for a generation almost this country was in profound peace, and they received the benefits and emoluments of the positions they were then filling. If they saw fit to cast their lot with the Army, they ought to be willing to take upon themselves the incidents and burdens of the Army without asking at the hands of Congress or of the people of this country a position on the retired list with a higher grade simply and solely for the purpose of enabling them to draw $1,500 more salary per year out of the Treasury of the United States.

As I said before being interrupted, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the appointment of brigadier-generals of the line. The first name I see is that of Gen. W. R. Shafter, who was made a brigadier-general on May 3, 1897, and I will say I believe served longer in the capacity of brigadier before he was retired than any of these gentlemen who were or have been promoted since the present Administration came in. General Shafter was retired October 6, 1899.

I find that Gen. W. M. Graham was made a brigadier-general of the line May 26, 1897, and he was retired September 28, 1898.

I find Gen. James F. Wade was made a brigadier-general May 26, 1897, and he is now in the service.

Gen. John M. Mizner was made a brigadier-general on May 26, 1897, and retired June 7, the same year.

Gen. Anson Mills was made a brigadier-general June 16, 1897, and he was retired on the 22d of June, 1897.

I find that Gen. C. H. Carlton was made a brigadier-general of the line June 28, 1897; that he served his country in the capacity of brigadier-general from June 28, 1897, to the 30th of June of the same year. [Laughter.]

I see that Gen. H. C. Merriam was made a brigadier-general June 30, 1897, and is now in the service.

Gen. H. S. Hawkins on the 28th of September, 1898, was made a brigadier-general, and was retired on the 4th day of October of the same year.

Gen. Jacob F. Kent was made a brigadier-general on the same day that General Hawkins was retired, which was October 4, 1898, and he, too, was retired on the 15th day of October, 1898.

I want to say this: It appears that one vacancy was used in such a way that five or six men received promotion by reason of the fact that one vacancy had alone been created, and when one general was promoted to the high position of brigadier-general he only acted in that capacity for a short time, until he stepped down and out and another was appointed to take his place.

Gen. Guy V. Henry was appointed brigadier-general October 11, 1898, and he departed this life October 27, 1899, while in the service of his country. Gen. W. S. Worth was made a brigadier-general October 29, 1898, and on the 9th day of November of the same year was retired. Gen. W. M. Wherry was made a brigadier-general January 7, 1899, and on January 18, 1899, he was placed upon the retired list. Gen. J. H. Patterson was made a brigadier-general on the 18th of January, 1899, and served in that capacity only till the 6th day of February of the same year, when he, too, was placed upon the retired list.

Gen. William Sinclair was made a brigadier-general February 8, 1899, served his country in that rank for a period of five days, or until February 13, 1899, when he was placed upon the retired list. Gen. M. P. Miller was made a brigadier-general March 15, 1899, and served as such only until March 27 of the same year, when he was placed on the retired list. Gen. E. V. Sumner was made a brigadier-general of the line March 27, 1899, served in that capacity only till March 30 of the same year, when he was placed upon the retired list. Gen. T. M. Anderson was made a brigadier-general March 31, 1899, was placed on the retired list January 21, 1900.

Gen. A. C. M. Pennington was made a brigadier-general October 16, 1899, and on the next day, October 17, 1899, was placed upon the retired list. Gen. Royal T. Frank was made a brigadier-general October 17, 1899, being the same day General Pennington was retired, and on the following day, October 18, 1899, was placed upon the retired list. Gen. L. H. Carpenter was made a brigadier-general of the line October 18, 1899, being also the same day General Frank was retired, and was placed on the retired list October 19, 1899. Gen. S. Ovenshine was made a brigadier-general October 19, 1899, and retired October 20 of the same year. He served in the capacity of brigadier-general for a period of one day. Gen. D. W. Burke was made a brigadier-general October 20, 1899, and placed upon the retired list October 21 of the same year. He, too, served in the capacity of brigadier-general for a period of one day only.

So I might go down through this long list and mention Gen. E. R. Kellogg and Gen. G. S. Carpenter, who have been promoted to the rank of brigadier-general and soon retired, after a very brief service in the rank to which they had been promoted. Nor are these all, Mr. Chairman. For instance, Gen. S. B. M. Young was appointed a brigadier-general January 2, 1900; Gen. A. MacArthur, who was made a brigadier-general January 2, 1900. Gen. William Ludlow was promoted to the position of brigadier-general January 21, 1900. These last three, with Gen. James F. Wade and General Merriam, are the only ones in all this list of brigadier-generals of the line who are now in the service of the Government. They have all been promoted and retired during the present Administration.

As members have observed, a great many of these officers have been retired, some on the next day after their promotion, some after having served three, four, or five days, and some after having served only a month. I call attention to this matter for the purpose of showing that while our friends on the other side are proclaiming their patriotism they are at the same time getting for their friends all the high positions in sight.

Mr. STEELE. Ought it not to be taken into consideration that many of these officers have served forty or forty-five years without having the opportunity for promotion?

Mr. JETT. I did not catch the gentleman's remark.

Mr. STEELE. I say that many of those officers served for a long time without receiving any promotion; and, after long terms of active service, it was only a matter of justice that they should be at last promoted before being retired.

Mr. JETT. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] asked me a short time ago a question on this subject. I said to him, and I repeat it now, that these gentlemen saw fit to cast their fortunes in the Army, and they should have been willing to have accepted all incidents thereto. While our country was at peace for years and years they were upon the pay rolls, having but little to do, and simply because of the fact that they had served for a long number of years, it may be, in some lower ranks of the Army, that is no good reason why, when they are about to be retired, the people of this country should be compelled to pay them annually an additional salary of $1,500 and more because in contemplation of the fact that they were about to be retired. I know of no other business or profession that retires men, who have followed it for years, upon an increased salary.

I am not criticising these gentlemen for getting all the benefits that they possibly can; but I say I do not believe it is right that simply because these officers have been long in the service until they have arrived at the age when they can be retired they should receive greater pay than they would have received if they had been retired at the rank in which they had served. The presumption, of course, is that every man knows the law; we all know that these gentlemen knew sufficiently well what the law was. They knew what pay would necessarily follow when they came to be retired, that it would depend upon the rank which they held at the time of retirement, and if it was that of a colonel or captain he should be willing to accept it.

I am not blaming these officers because of the fact that they have been enabled to control sufficient influence to get themselves placed upon the retired list at a rank higher than that in which they had served; but I am calling the attention of this committee and of the country to the fact that these wholesale appointments have been made for the sole purpose, as I believe and as I have a right to believe, of entitling them to receive on the retired list the pay of a higher rank than that in which they had served. They have heretofore been paid for their services salaries that were in keeping with their rank. During all the years of peace they drew regularly their pay; and if retired with the rank in which they had served or had reached when the time of retirement had come, they have no right, in my judgment, to complain.

Mr. STEELE and Mr. RIDGELY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JETT. I will yield first to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] and then to my friend from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY].

Mr. STEELE. Take the case of Colonel Burke, who was forty-five years a soldier, who served first as an enlisted man and then was promoted to be an officer on account of gallant service during the war. After serving in a great many battles he was severely wounded at Gettysburg and was put in what is known as the Veteran Reserve Corps, where only wounded officers could go.

In 1870, because the Army seemed to be larger than necessary, he was consolidated with the Fourteenth United States Infantry and put on the active list notwithstanding his severe wounds. While he was a lieutenant he was in a regiment where promotions were not rapid and lost the advantage of promotion, but finally he got to be a colonel. If he had been made a colonel as others were who had not had as much service as he had, for which he was not responsible, but the law was responsible, he would, in the natural course of events, have been made a brigadier-general; but he went through the Spanish war and did gallant service there. He is one of my Democratic friends.

Mr. JETT. That is a very good recommendation for him.

Mr. STEELE. He was retired as a brigadier-general for his gallant service during the war, and not on account of any political influence whatever.

Mr. JETT. That may have been a case, such as we usually know of, where an injustice has been done to a Democrat. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. No, he is retired as a brigadier-general because of his gallant service. He was a gallant officer. I had the honor of serving with him for many years on the frontier and I know him to be an honest, straightforward man and a very good soldier.

Mr. JETT. There may be some particular reason why some men are entitled to more than others, but here a wholesale lot of appointments and retirements have been made in comparatively a short period of time.

Mr. STEELE. I happen to know the circumstances in this case.

Mr. JETT. If they have been entitled to this for years and years, how is it that they have not been able to get it until the present Administration came into power?

Mr. STEELE. Because the President of the United States was a soldier himself and he has a sympathy for all good soldiers. [Applause on the Republican side.] I have no doubt that there are other cases with which I am not familiar, as I happen to be familiar with the circumstances in this case, which cases have been acted upon for like good reasons.

Mr. JETT. I have sympathy for a good soldier. Since I have been a member of the Committee on Military Affairs no man has done more for the soldiers who have been called into the service than I have myself. I have at all times been in favor of liberal appropriations. While I have detested the policy which has called our soldiers to some places to do service, yet I know that they are only acting under the instructions of their superior officers and they are compelled to do service; hence my voice and my actions have been in the interest of the soldier. And as long as they are called away, whether I agree with the policy for which they are serving or not, I am going to favor liberal appropriations for their maintenance, and to provide supplies for them.

Now, I will yield to my friend from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY].

Mr. RIDGELY. I think my question comes in here very properly. We are all very generous to our soldiers. The sentiment of our entire country has ever been generous to its soldiers; but while this generosity exists we must also remember the great army of taxpayers who of necessity must carry the burdens. Now, my question is this: Have the Committee on Military Affairs made any estimate, so that the gentleman himself or any member of the committee can state to us what the increased burden will be in the years to come by reason of the increased number of retired officers necessarily resulting by reason of the large increase of our standing Army?

Mr. JETT. Well, I will say to my friend from Kansas that so far as I know there has been no estimate made along that line. I suppose it would be very difficult to make an estimate along the line that has been suggested by my friend. I quite agree with the suggestion that the taxpayers of this country ought not to have such burdens thrust upon them as are evidenced by the facts which I have related here this afternoon. When any officer is retired he receives three-fourths of the salary which he receives while he is in active service, and the difference between the retirement of a colonel and of a brigadier-general is $1,500 a year. Of course the amount that would necessarily have to be paid by the taxpayers of this country on account of the facts suggested by my friend would necessarily depend upon the number placed upon the retired list. I will say that there is at this time carried in this bill for the payment of officers for the year 1901, who had been placed upon the retired list, the sum of $1,273,000, and there is appropriated in this bill the sum of $600,000 for those who are on the retired list who were not officers.

Mr. Chairman, my friend from Indiana, Mr. STEELE, says these promotions and retirements were made at this time because the President has a sympathy for all good soldiers. Is that all? Does not this list indicate more than that? I say it does. To my mind it is indicative of the fact that there was much more politics in these appointments than sympathy. Here is the proof of this assertion:

The retirement of Brigadier-General Shafter alone was made the occasion for the appointment of five brigadiers. General Shafter was retired October 16, 1899, and on the same day General Pennington was made a brigadier and retired on the next day, and on the same day of his retirement General Frank was made a brigadier, and he, too, retired before he got his uniform warm; and the same is true as to Gen. L. H. Carpenter, General Ovenshine, and General Burke.

Mr. LITTLE. Does my friend mean to say to the House that appointments and retirements were made daily for five days in succession?

Mr. JETT. That is just what I mean, and all done upon one vacancy created by the retirement of General Shafter.

Again, by noticing the list of appointments it will be seen that four major-generals were appointed and three retired upon the vacancy made by the retirement of General Ruger, and these three retirements were made within a period of fourteen days. Was all this the occasion of sympathy alone, or is it the act of a shrewd and experienced politician? I am constrained to say that it was the act of the latter.

Again, Mr. Chairman, it can not be said that these numerous appointments were necessitated by the Philippine or Spanish war. These events caused no increase in the generals of the Regular Army. The increased requirements were met by the appointment of volunteer officers.

In conclusion, let me say that we have here the appointment of 27 brigadiers to a corps of active officers restricted to 6; in all, 41 appointments within three years. I do not believe that the people's money should be so trifled away by the Administration. Many easy places have been made that command additional pay, which must come from the people.

Mr. Chairman, this is not all. The policy adopted is calculated to and is building up an aristocracy in the Army. It creates rank and increased salary, both of which are calculated to build up an aristocracy. This is contrary to the institutions of our country, and I am unalterably opposed to it.

Mr. Chairman, I have not intended to be harsh about these things, but have stated what the records will show upon investigation, and my sole object in view is to call the attention of the House to this wholesale making of appointments and retirements that the members might be in possession of the facts. This manner of taking care of political friends and henchmen at the expense of the taxpayers I do not believe will be approved of by the people. [Applause.] If this policy is to be pursued in the future as it has been during the last three years, the item of $1,173,000 that is carried in this bill for the payment of retired officers will in future bills have to be much increased. I thank the committee for their attention. [Applause.]

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I desire to thank my friend the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HULL] for his invariable courtesy in yielding time to me.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time did the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCLELLAN. I understood the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to yield an hour to me.

I do not propose to make a political speech, but I desire to address myself exclusively to the subject of the reorganization of the United States Army. I know that it is a dry subject and not popular. Gentlemen who have not devoted any time to its consideration are, as a rule, not interested in it, especially in time of peace. The Regular Army is too often looked upon as a mere machine and chattel of the Government, that should be kept as much as possible out of sight until actual necessity occurs for its use. The United States Navy is by far more popular and closer to the affections of the people. Possibly Kipling's homely lines fit our case as well as that of his own country:

For it's Tommy this, and it's Tommy that, and it's "Chuck him out, the brute!"
But it's "the savior of his country" when the guns begin to shoot.

We have a term of endearment for the enlisted man of the Navy. Who has not heard Jacky's praises sung, and who has failed to do honor to Jacky's pluck and Jacky's valor, and yet so little is our enlisted man of the Army thought of that we have not even paid him the compliment that Great Britain has of conferring upon him any term of endearment whatsoever. "Its savior of his country when the guns begin to shoot;" but if the enlisted man of the Army, if the regular, is to be his country's savior, we must make it possible for him to accomplish that salvation.

For five years I have stood in my place on this floor, session after session, urging with all the slight strength that is in me the necessity of a reorganization of the United States Army, and session after session I have spoken and I have worked, only to see my hopes blighted and to see a continuance of a policy of "laissez aller, laissez faire" that, however wise in theoretical socialism, certainly does not conduce to the welfare of the United States Army.

In speaking for a reorganization, I appreciate that I am speaking to a limited audience. I know that, directly, I represent a little constituency composed of the officers of the United States Army, who have given this subject lifelong thought and lifelong study, but in a broader sense I know that I speak for a vast constituency; one composed of every patriotic man in this country, of every American who is interested in his country's welfare.

We have all of us heard the cry of militarism. We all know that the great party that sits upon this side of the House is opposed, heart and soul, to militarism and to a large standing army in time of peace. While the expressions "militarism" and "large standing army" are used somewhat loosely and are defined in various ways, gentlemen, with very few exceptions, are agreed on the necessity of the maintenance of a standing army of some sort and of some size in time of peace, but gentlemen differ as to the sort and size of the standing army. Some are in the habit of fixing an arbitrary maximum, and, having fixed it, of saying that this maximum represents liberty, but that the addition of one private soldier to the maximum means militarism and a large standing army.

Some gentlemen say that a five-year enlistment means militarism, while a three-year enlistment means liberty. I trust that I will not be considered presumptuous if I submit my own definition. I think that a large standing army and that militarism mean the maintenance in time of peace of one enlisted man or of one officer more than is necessary to form a nucleus for mobilization in time of war. No one feels a sincerer admiration than do I for the gallantry of our volunteer soldiers. No one appreciates more than I the spirit of self-sacrifice, the spirit of heroism, which has always actuated them when the country has been in need; but an army of volunteers is of little use, unless time is given to organize the regiments. During our civil war, after they had been seasoned, our volunteers made as magnificent troops as the world has ever seen. But the organization and the seasoning of raw troops requires time, and modern wars are fought so quickly that were we to be attacked to-morrow by any of the first-class powers of continental Europe we would find ourselves almost helpless to beat off the enemy for a sufficient length of time to permit of the organization of a volunteer army.

I do not favor a large standing army in time of peace; I do not believe in government by injunction, nor do I believe in using United States troops for police duty which can be performed as well by the organized militia of the several States; but I do believe in the maintenance of a standing army in time of peace large enough, and no larger, to be expanded in time of war to make a first line of defense strong enough to hold off a foreign enemy until the volunteers can be organized to constitute the second line. Our Army can only be a nucleus, but a nucleus sufficiently elastic and sufficiently mobile to permit of automatic expansion.

If I am right in this opinion—if I am sound in my objection to the spirit of militarism and to a large standing army—the problem to be solved in Army reorganization is clearly defined. It is this: What shall be the organization of our Army so as to allow the maintenance of a minimum of troops in time of peace and to permit of a maximum of expansion in time of war? In discussing this subject we must consider our existing establishment; its strength and its defects; suggestions that have been made for its improvement, and then compare existing conditions with the perfect solution of the problem I have suggested.

There are before the Committee on Military Affairs two bills for Army reorganization; the bill introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, which represents the views of the Secretary of War, and the bill introduced by myself, which is the result of years of patient study and of consultation with the leading authorities of our Army. It has been drafted with the purpose of providing a small standing army capable of great expansion in time of war, and has been based upon the present size of the Regular Army, although the total enlisted strength provided could be either reduced or increased without injury to the principle involved.

The first annual report of the new Secretary of War showed that its author was a man who had brought to the study of the question of Army reorganization a strong mind and a clear intellect. Mr. Root and I are as far apart politically as the two poles. I absolutely dissent from the conclusions of the political part of his report, but in all fairness I wish to bear testimony to the wisdom with which he handles purely military questions. Such being the case, it was to have been expected that the bill sent by the Secretary to both Houses of Congress would have sought to accomplish the objects recommended in the Secretary's report.

When I first glanced over the Root bill it struck me as being most excellent, but I regret to say that the oftener I read it and the more I study it the less I like it; so that I am now convinced that unless it is radically amended and almost recast, its passage would make conditions, already bad, even worse. Should the bill come before the House, I shall discuss it in detail. I trust that it will come before the House amended so that I can give it my hearty and enthusiastic support.

In justice to those gentlemen upon the floor who are not in the habit of studying military questions, I wish at this time to briefly point out the chief defects in the Root bill. Although containing many sections, the Root bill may be divided into five parts according to the objects sought to be accomplished. That part which refers to the reorganization of the artillery I will discuss further on when I reach the general subject of artillery organization. That part which abolishes post chaplains and creates regimental chaplains is excellent so far as it goes and needs no comment from me. I may say in passing that it only provides chaplains for the cavalry and infantry and excludes the artillery from the benefit of religion. The other three parts of the bill provide, respectively, for detail to the so-called "staff" departments for promotion and for the transfer of duties from one so-called "staff" department to another.

The bill provides that all officers now in the so-called "staff" departments, with some few exceptions, shall return to the colors for one year in every five. This is a most excellent provision, in so far as the Adjutant-General's, Inspector-General's, and Ordnance Departments are concerned. It provides further that the President may summarily retire at any time the chief of any "staff" department who holds a permanent appointment and select his successor from the Army at large. Of course it is claimed that no President will ever make a selection that is not a proper one. This power virtually permits the President to retire any one of our departmental chiefs and fill his place by the appointment of the junior second lieutenant of the Army if he sees fit. The assumption that no President will ever make an improper appointment is equivalent to saying that our Presidents are not human and not liable to error. It gives to the President of the United States a power unheard of in the history of our country. Details to the staff departments are in the future to be made for a period of four years by assignment of officers according to their service records, and every third promotion to the grade of field officer is to be made by the President in the same manner, according to the service records of our officers.

Now, the full meaning of these assignment and promotion sections can only be understood when we know what an officer's service record is. I hold in my hand two forms of blanks used in making up an officer's service record; one is the officer's individual report, made out by himself, in which he states the duty he has performed during the year, which is a matter of record; whether he is married or single, the number of his minor children, and the studies he has pursued during the previous year, the number of foreign languages he can speak and translate, his business experience, the books he has written or published, essays that he has prepared, lectures that he has delivered or the papers he has read. Modest as our officers are, it has been found in practice that they have a flattering opinion of their own knowledge and ability when required to submit it to their superior officers.

The other blank that I hold is that which is made out and filed with the officer's individual report by that officer's commanding officer. It gives a statement of the duties he has performed, his habits and general conduct, his professional zeal, condition of the men under him, his capacity for command, and whether he is qualified for the position he fills. It has been found by experience that our commanding officers, like their juniors, are only human, and are unwilling, except in flagrant cases, to report otherwise than in a kindly and considerate way of their subordinates; in fact, that the commanding officer's report is but little more than a perfunctory indorsement of the officer's own estimation of himself.

Mr. STEELE. May I interrupt the gentleman there?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. Are not the reports made each year?

Mr. McCLELLAN. They are.

Mr. STEELE. So you have a chronological report?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly, so far as it goes.

I may call attention to the fact that no method is employed for verifying the service record of an officer, except his duty record, by either examination or careful investigation. It therefore comes to this, that the real service record of an officer depends on the duty performed by him during the year previous to the filing of his report, and that therefore an officer who has seen active service will necessarily have a vast advantage over one who has not. Take two officers in the United States Army—for the sake of argument, two captains—one, who graduated from the Academy, we will say, five years before the other and who stood far higher in his class than the other, remains with his battery on garrison duty at one of the fortifications upon our coast, while the other officer, in whom his Senator has discovered signs of marked genius, is commissioned a lieutenant-colonel in one of our volunteer regiments serving in the Philippines. He does his duty there, for, thank God, every officer of the United States Army does his duty [applause], but at the end of the year his service record is so much better than that of his unknown comrade serving with the great guns that he must necessarily be preferred for detail to one of the so-called "staff" departments, or for promotion under the terms of the Root bill, to his less fortunate brother, who may be the better officer.

It is conceded perfectly frankly that the purpose underlying the provisions in the Root bill making promotion and details upon the service record of officers is to reward the officers now serving with the volunteer regiments, the theory being that the officers who have been given increased volunteer rank are the best officers in the United States Army and that it would be ignominious for them, after the muster out of the volunteer regiments, to return to their original rank in the regulars. Under the Root bill it would be possible to promote a captain now serving as a lieutenant-colonel or colonel of volunteers to the grade of colonel of regulars in a very few months. I do not question that the regular officers serving with our volunteer regiments are as good as any other officers in the Army, but I do question if their superior talents would have been discovered without the assistance of the divining rod of some Senator or Representative, and I do question the justice of confining the benefit of promotion and of staff detail to them because they have been fortunate enough to have influence behind them.

We know that favoritism has greatly injured the efficiency of our service. This bill will make matters infinitely worse, for its benefits will not only be confined exclusively to the officers of the volunteer regiments, but it will put into the hands of the President a power over the administration of the War Department, over promotions, transfers, and retirements in the United States Army, second only to that at present held by the German Emperor. While I am perfectly confident that in most cases our Presidents would not misuse that power, we must remember that our Presidents in almost every case are civilians and politicians, and that the institutions of our country and the sentiments of our people will never willingly permit Congress to make the President of the United States an irresponsible and supreme War Lord.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am glad to have the gentleman interrupt me.

Mr. STEELE. What recommendation would the gentleman make?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I shall state that as I come to it, if the patience of the House will last.

Mr. STEELE. Then I will not ask the gentleman to do it now.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will state now that I should promote in the line as at present, and to the general staff by competitive examination from the Army at large.

Even those of us who have not made Army organization a special study are aware that conditions in our so-called "staff" departments are not by any manner of means what they ought to be. I have so often discussed the defects in our administrative organization that I will not again weary the House by any long statement upon the subject, contenting myself with summarizing the faults of our administration in the War Department. All the faults, the weaknesses, and the shortcomings that have been apparent for many years can be traced directly to a defective system. There is lack of responsibility; there is divided responsibility; there is no responsible military head of the Army, and without responsibility there can be no harmony of action and no general accord in results. The immediate effect of divided responsibility is wastefulness and extravagance in administration and inefficiency in organization.

It is customary to call our so-called "staff" departments the "general staff," but in the sense in which we employ the expression it is absolutely meaningless. The words "general staff" mean the staff of the general, and not a universal staff. Its misuse comes from an incorrect understanding of the German words. The German general staff is called the "General Stab," which, as I say, means the staff of the general. Its application to our supply departments is erroneous and has come from translating the word "general" as though it were the word "allgemein." The correct expression in German for our so-called "general staff" would be "Allgemeine Intendantur," or the universal intendance, or the universal business management, or general business management, if you like. When this is kept in mind it will be seen how absurd it is to speak of our supply departments, our intendance, as the "general staff."

We have no general staff, no military brain to assist the general commanding, whoever he may be, in the military problems he is called upon to solve. The Secretary of War, thoroughly realizing existing conditions in our so-called "staff" departments, has begun the organization of what he calls a war college, but which when complete will be nothing more and nothing less than one of the sections of the Prussian general staff. Our Adjutant-General's Department, with the military information division and the war college, will by indirection become a general staff.

The Secretary's bill contemplates the mere assignment of officers to the general staff for a period of four years, after which they are to return to the line for at least one year, with no assurance that they will ever be reassigned to the staff, and provides, as I have said, that these details shall be made upon the service records of the officers so detailed.

A general staff, to be effective, must be composed of the very flower of the Army, and its members must devote their lives to the study of that particular branch of the profession to which they belong. If it is to be anything but a parody of the name it must be composed of officers possessing the greatest intelligence, the greatest brain power, the greatest knowledge of their profession, and not of the officers possessing the greatest pull. It should be composed of a small body of officers, permanently belonging to the corps, selected by competition and promoted after rigorous and searching examinations, who, to keep in touch with the troops, must be returned to the colors for service in their respective grades every few years.

The Root bill does not abolish the Inspector-General's Department. While this department is composed of some of the best officers in our Army, I do not doubt that under its present organization it is well-nigh useless. During the late Spanish war almost every regular in that department was commissioned to the command of troops, and its most important functions were performed, or rather not performed, by volunteers, who, necessarily, were ignorant of its requirements. Under the present system an officer who has served in the infantry is detailed to inspect fortress artillery, of which he can not possibly have any knowledge, and a fortress artilleryman is detailed to inspect cavalry, of which he is probably equally ignorant. Inspections should be made, as in every continental army, by officers detailed from that branch of the service which they are called upon to inspect. So that the talent and the intellect of our present Inspector-General's Department may not be wasted, its personnel should be absorbed in the general staff.

The Root bill does not propose any change in the Ordnance Department, and proposes to permit a continuance of the present curious system by which one department designs and manufactures munitions of war, while another branch of the service is called upon to employ this war material without having any voice in its design or construction. Officers of the Ordnance Department are in the habit of saying that for a period of eleven years in the early part of the century the artillery manufactured war material, and that the system proved so defective that the country returned to an independent ordnance department. Granted that this is true, it is merely a reflection upon the personnel of United States officers seventy-five years ago, and not a reflection upon the system that is in force in every army on earth but our own. Ordnance officers are in the habit of saying that if they are required to return from time to time for service with troops, as provided in the Root bill, they will forget that peculiar knowledge of scientific subjects which they claim to possess. If the practical application of what they have learned or supposed to have learned will unfit our ordnance officers for the practice of their profession, the sooner we abolish the Ordnance Corps or the sooner we get a different set of officers the better for the service.

The Root bill continues the high rank of our various supply, pay, and legal officers, and, with the exception of the Judge-Advocate's corps, details them in the same manner that it proposes for the general staff. Personally, I believe that the possession of rank by the medical officers, supply officers, and paymasters is an absurdity. They are noncombatant, and their functions are purely administrative; they are the various component parts of a great department store, of which the Army is the sole customer. They should have relative rank only, but I have begun to believe that the giving of relative rank to our paymasters and our commissaries is an iridescent dream which will only be realized in that millennium when officers cease to be politicians, when pulls cease to exist.

The duties of supply officers and paymasters being purely administrative and clerical, do not require that these officers should serve with troops otherwise than in their proper functions, in the discharge of which they never deal directly with the men constituting the Army, but only with the supplies furnished to the men.

Our present establishment fails to draw any general distinction between combatants and noncombatants. The distinction is clearly defined. Combatant officers should have absolute rank and noncombatant relative rank only. The Adjutant-General's Department, the Inspector-General's Department, the Corps of Engineers are all composed of officers who are combatant, while the Medical Department and the supply departments are composed of officers who are purely noncombatant. Officers of engineers are as clearly line officers in the sense that line officers mean combatant officers as are officers of the cavalry or of the infantry.

The Root bill offers no relief to the present overworked condition of the Quartermaster's Department. The Quartermaster's Department is to-day the hardest worked and one of the most efficient of our so-called "staff" departments. The commission which investigated the conduct of the war commented upon this fact and suggested the creation of a new "staff" department to be called the equipment department, and recommended that the Quartermaster's Department be confined to its legitimate duties of transportation. Accordingly in the McClellan bill an equipment corps is created which furnishes all equipments for the Army, and the Quartermaster's Department is confined strictly to transport and train service.

In view of the constantly increasing need of trained officers and in view of the necessity for more officers for the Army, the McClellan bill increases the corps of cadets to more than double its present size by giving to each Congressional district 2 instead of 1, and to each State at large 2, and to each Territory 1, and permits the President to appoint 10 at large each year. It is thought that the Army will readily absorb this increase. Should it not, the graduates of the Academy for whom no vacancies exist can return to civil life benefited by a military education and be ready to serve their country in time of war in volunteer regiments.

The Root bill offers no improvement in the organization of the line of our Army with the exception of the artillery. The line of the Army now consists of the battalion of engineers, the infantry, the cavalry, and the artillery. It is a rigid, inelastic organization, capable of absolutely no expansion and possessing no mobility. There are a fixed number of units all recruited to the maximum, which maximum can not be exceeded successfully. In discussing the several branches of the so-called "line," I will speak of them in the usual European order.

Engineer troops can not be organized quickly. We should maintain them in time of peace upon a war footing, for the duties of the enlisted men are so complicated that recruits are of little value until they have served two years. The unit of organization of the engineers should be the company. It is very exceptional when more than one company serves with any body of troops.

The Root bill proposes a radical reorganization of the artillery. Recognizing the fact that most of the points which we are called upon to defend, while very numerous, require comparatively small garrisons in time of peace, it establishes the battery as the unit of organization and consolidates the officers of artillery into one corps of artillery. The unit of organization in the French and German armies is the battalion; but it must be remembered that the points there to be defended consist chiefly of fortresses of the first, second, and third classes, and that their garrisons are kept very near war strength in time of peace.

It should be remembered that fortress artillery is in no sense a part of the field army. The field batteries of course serve in the field, but the units of fortress artillery serve constantly in fortifications. Their number should not be considered in estimating the total strength of our Army, for from the very nature of their duties they can not be considered as a part of the field army. The work of the fortress artilleryman is that of a machinist caring for and handling complicated and delicate pieces of machinery. The stations are invariably far from the cities, usually most unattractively situated, and even in action the work more closely resembles that of the engineer force on a man-of-war than that of a cavalryman in the field. It is hard work, unromantic work, disagreeable work, with poor pay, with no glory, with no chance of advancement or promotion even in time of war, with no satisfaction except that which comes to every honest man who knows that he has done his duty well, no matter how inconspicuous or humble that duty may have been.

We have had great difficulty in recruiting artillerymen and still greater difficulty in obtaining the proper kind of men for noncommissioned officers. The noncommissioned officer of fortress artillery must be a good mathematician, well versed in algebra and trigonometry, and, what is more, he must constantly study. It is needless to say that with the ridiculous pay that we have given them it is impossible or well-nigh impossible to get the men we ought to have. The pay of the fortress artillery should be the same as that of enlisted men in the engineer battalion.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. So far as I am informed of the matter, I favor the proposition to increase the artillery to the extent of properly caring for the guns and coast-defense works, but I would like to have the gentleman tell me if it is not possible for men from the infantry line to be assigned to the work of taking care of these guns, and would they not be able to do it as well as the artillerymen?

Mr. McCLELLAN. If permanently assigned, they would become fortress artillerymen, but the gentleman must bear in mind that an artilleryman must have an excellent knowledge of algebra and trigonometry, and he must study night and day. We have great difficulty in getting fortress artillerymen. We can not keep them. You could assign them, but you would have to make their assignment permanent.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that these noncommissioned officers serving as artillerymen of coast defense must have a good knowledge of the advanced mathematics?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How do you expect to get them?

Mr. McCLELLAN. We do not get them. Go into any fortification, and what do you find? An 8-inch gun covered with grease and tarpaulin and two or three men cutting grass and making paths, but not handling the guns.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that down in my district, at Fort Hamilton, they do not have time to cut the grass, and there are not enough there to keep the guns cared for.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly; that bears out what I say.

The number of men required to man our seacoast defenses is a mere question of arithmetic—that is, assuming that we wish to man our seacoast defenses and not continue the present policy of treating our costly guns as so much old metal, so much junk, only for the scrap heap. Every man detailed to a seacoast gun has his duties clearly defined. In serving a gun there must be one man or two men or three men, as the case may be, for each particular part of the operation of firing the gun. Thus, as an example, let us take the 10-inch disappearing rifle. There must be 1 gun commander, 1 gunner, 7 in the breech detail, 2 in the traversing detail, 2 in the lifting detail, 2 in the charge detail, 1 ammunition sergeant, 2 in the cartridge-room detail, 4 in the shell-room detail, 2 in the hoist detail, 1 in the platform detail, 1 telephone man, 1 dial-telegraph man, 2 for the battery-position-finder detail, 2 for the relocator and main range finder, making a total of 31 men for each 10-inch gun, which only furnishes one shift with which to serve the gun and furnishes no additional men for special duty, for cooks, orderlies, etc.

Gentlemen who have not seen great gunnery drill do not realize the enormous physical work involved in rapid-fire practice. It has been found that at the end of fifteen minutes one gun shift will be completely exhausted. In time of war there must be at least two shifts for every gun. Now, these being the facts, to get at the total number of men required in time of peace for our fortress artillery it is only necessary to take the number of guns of each kind that have been mounted or are about to be mounted and multiply them by the number of men required for each shift for one gun, a mere matter of multiplication.

Now, for each of the 4-inch and 5-inch rapid fires, 14 men are required; for each of our 6-inch rapid fires, 19 men; for each of our 8-inch rifles mounted in barbette, 29 men; for each 10-inch rifle mounted in barbette, 31 men; for each 12-inch rifle mounted in barbette or on gun lift, 36 men; for each 8-inch rifle, disappearing carriage, 29 men; for each 10-inch rifle, disappearing carriage, 31 men; for each 12-inch rifle, disappearing carriage, 39 men; for each 12-inch mortar, 24 men; for each 15-pounder, 13 men; for each 6-pounder, 8 men.

Now, we have mounted to-day at eighty-eight points upon our coast, seventy 4-inch and 5-inch rapid fires; thirty-seven 6-inch rapid fires; eight 8-inch rifles, mounted in barbette; ten 10-inch rifles, mounted in barbette; thirty-two 12-inch rifles, mounted in barbette and on gun lifts; sixty-four 8-inch rifles, disappearing carriages; one hundred and eight 10-inch rifles, disappearing carriages; fifty-four 12-inch rifles, disappearing carriages; three hundred and forty-three 12-inch mortars; one hundred and twenty 15-pounders; and seventy 6-pounders, making a total of nine hundred and twenty-two guns, which would require, for one shift each, 20,987 men. But there have been contracted for and will be mounted in two years five hundred and thirteen guns in addition, requiring an additional force of 13,662 men, or making a total of guns mounted and ordered of one thousand four hundred and thirty-five, requiring, for one shift each, 34,649 men. I will append to my remarks a table which I have prepared, showing the number of guns of each kind mounted and ordered and the number of men required for each gun for each position.

The Secretary of War has asked for less than 18,000 men for our artillery, including fortress and field batteries, but proposes to obtain the increased number by transfer from the infantry and cavalry regiments. It will probably be possible to get on with this number at the present time, but there is no question but that the immediate future will require more men. The Secretary does not, however, provide for any expansion of our artillery force in time of war. As I have pointed out, where one gun shift will suffice in time of peace, we must have two in time of war.

Military authorities say that the maximum of recruits that can be absorbed by a minimum of trained troops in the artillery is 60 recruits by 60 trained troops; that the maximum of men that can be handled by 3 officers in fortress artillery is 120, but that there will be more efficient fire control and better fire discipline if the proportion is 3 officers to 90 men.

In the bill that I have introduced I think the problem of artillery expansion is nearly solved. The bill provides for 200 batteries in time of peace of 90 men each, and permits the President in time of war to increase the number to 300 batteries at 120 men each; and further allows him to appoint additional second lieutenants for each battery to serve only during the war. The manner in which this would operate is as follows: Assuming that war is declared, the President directs the mobilization of the additional 100 batteries. Thirty trained men are detailed from each of the 200 peace batteries to the 100 new batteries, giving an average of 60 trained men to each battery. All of the 300 batteries are then increased by the addition of 60 recruits to each battery, which is the proportion of recruits that can be absorbed without friction. My bill provides for 3 officers for each of the 200 peace batteries. The addition of 300 temporary second lieutenants will permit of the detail of first lieutenants to the command of the 100 new batteries, distributing the temporary lieutenants among all of the 300 batteries.

The Root bill provides for 18 batteries of field artillery, presumably of 6 guns, as at present. We have to-day only 14 batteries of 6 guns each, which gives us only 84 guns in all, sufficient in time of peace, but inadequate in time of war. In the McClellan bill the usual European organization has been followed and 24 batteries of field artillery at 120 men each are provided, each of 4 guns, while in time of war 2 guns would be added to each battery and the enlisted strength raised to 180 men each, giving in peace 96 guns and in war 144 guns. The proportion of guns to men required by modern science is 1 gun to every 1,000 men, although the Germans have in recent years far exceeded that number. Under the present establishment we have 84 guns to 65,000 men, more than the required proportion, but with no method of increasing the number in time of war. Under the Root bill 108 guns are provided in the peace establishment, but with no possibility of expansion, while in the McClellan bill 96 guns are provided in time of peace and 144 in time of war, both large enough for probable contingencies.

The cavalry, as at present organized, consists of 10 regiments of 12 troops, each organized into 3 squadrons and recruited up to the maximum, giving us a total cavalry force of 12,740. For some unknown reason there are 3 establishments. Twenty-four squadrons consisting of 401 men each, 3 squadrons of 454 men each, and 3 squadrons of 481 men each. The squadron is the real unit of organization, for it is the real battle unit, cavalry seldom serving in modern warfare in larger units than squadrons. Owing to our peculiar position we have been taught by experience that in time of war we need a far larger proportion of cavalry than do European armies. Our present organization will not permit of an increase in the cavalry except by the organization of new regiments and squadrons, which necessarily will not be as efficient as regulars until many months after organization.

The usual European organization in time of peace is a certain number of field squadrons—two, three, or four, as the case may be—and a depot squadron having a full complement of officers, but only a detail of enlisted men. This organization has been followed in the McClellan bill. The total number of enlisted men on a peace basis for the cavalry therein provided is 10,515, or somewhat less than the present establishment. It is organized, however, into 15 regiments instead of 10, each regiment consisting, in time of peace, of two field squadrons and a depot squadron, the latter to be mobilized in time of war and the squadrons to be increased from 332 each to 680, the depot squadrons to be mobilized by transfer from the field squadrons, and all the squadrons increased by the enlistment of recruits. In time of peace the depot squadron would drill recruits and purchase and train the remounts, purchases being now made not very satisfactorily by the Quartermaster's Department.

I know that there is a deep-seated prejudice in favor of the three-battalion organization for the infantry regiments. Until comparatively recently leading military authorities considered the regiment the unit of organization, but the trend of modern science has been to displace the regiment in favor of the battalion as the real unit, not only of organization, but as the battle unit as well. The regiment is treated more as an administrative unit for the purpose of economizing officers. In the Austro-Hungarian army the infantry regiment in time of war consists of four battalions, with economy as the principal object in view. Our own War Department has followed the trend of modern thought, and we are bringing back to-day from the Philippines battalions and not regiments, the battalion having become in practice the real unit.

In support of this view of the case it is only necessary for me to refer to two of the greatest military authorities who have ever written on line organization, names which will carry conviction with every student of the subject, Maj. Fritz Hoenig, of the Prussian army, and Gen. Lieut. Z. D. von A. von Witzleben. The latter insists in his standard book, Heerwesen und Infanteriedienst des deutschen Reichsheeres, that the battalion is the true infantry unit and should be made so for administrative purposes as well as battle tactics. In the bill I have introduced 30 regiments of infantry are provided, each consisting of 2 field battalions and 1 depot battalion, the latter to be used for the training of recruits, or 90 battalions to be mobilized in time of war in the same manner that I have suggested for the cavalry. This provides in time of peace for 27,180 men, as against 37,046, under the present establishment, but permits of an expansion in time of war to 73,020 without the slightest possible friction.

To summarize, the existing establishment of the line of our Army permits of no expansion in time of war. The Root bill does not better existing conditions. The McClellan bill, on the contrary, provides a small standing army capable of being almost trebled in size in the event of war. Under that bill a total of 65,000 men is provided in time of peace, of which 63,143 are combatant and 44,627 constitute the field army. In time of war it is capable of being automatically expanded, without friction and with the addition in officers of only temporary second lieutenants, to a total of 150,920, of which 149,063 are combatant and of which 112,547 constitute the field army, with guns in time of peace numbering 96 and in time of war 144, larger than the proportion required by modern science.

The lack of interest in the service and the lack of popularity of the soldier among the people is sought to be remedied in my bill by Territorial recruitment of the various regiments, the regiments and batteries being assigned among the different States and Territories as nearly as possible in proportion to population and according to local facilities for furnishing men and animals. Thus, for example, the depots of the various cavalry regiments and of the field artillery batteries would be in the horse-raising States, while the depots of the fortress artillery batteries would be in the seaboard States, and the infantry depots would be distributed where recruitment would be most facilitated. The Territorial method of recruitment has invariably been found to be the most successful. Volunteer regiments raised in one locality are always more efficient than volunteer regiments recruited at large. There is a local pride and popularity extending to the home regiment. Recruitment is more rapid, for young men are far more willing to enlist when sure of finding their schoolmates in the same regiment or company.

The inducements for good service are greatly increased, while desertion becomes almost unknown. The eyes of the people at home are constantly on the regiment, following its ups and downs and watching its history and the records of the individuals composing it. So that the enlisted strength of regiments may not become undisciplined from association with home surroundings, a proviso is added to this section that in no case shall any company, troop, or battery be stationed in the State or Territory where recruited for a longer period than one year out of every five.

It has been my purpose in drafting this bill to suggest a method by which our Army may be made efficient and by which it may be brought closer to the people.

I trust that I have not unduly imposed upon the good nature of the House in my frequent speeches upon the subject of Army reorganization; but, Mr. Chairman, it is a subject very near my heart, for I am a soldier's son, and it is one that, in my judgment, is of such vast, such overwhelming importance that it is the duty of every man, of every American who by inclination or by accident may know a little more of the subject than his fellows, to spare no effort and to spare no work, to write and to speak, day after day and year after year, in the hope that sooner or later the interest of our people will be sufficiently aroused to force Congress from its lethargy into activity in Army matters. If any feeble effort of mine, if any words that I may have spoken, will sooner or later help in the accomplishment of my purpose, I shall feel that my work has not been in vain. [Applause.]

Mr. LENTZ. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Was it not arranged at the beginning of this discussion that gentlemen who spoke on this bill should have the right to extend their remarks in the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. It was not.

Mr. JETT. I had that understanding, and I desire, therefore, to ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Mr. Chairman, while this military bill is before the House, I desire to call attention to one matter of very great importance, which is, I believe, pertinent at this particular time, and I hope that I may have the attention of the House for a few minutes.

I desire to call attention to that neglected post of Fort Hamilton, N. Y., and the bill H. R. 876, providing for the reconstruction of the same, and the report from the Military Committee upon that bill.

There was some question in my mind about the expediency of bringing this matter up at this time. I asked a member of long experience here what he thought about it. His advice was, "If the bill has any weak points, you had better wait; if it is meritorious and an all-around good bill, go ahead."

I believe the bill to be a good measure from every standpoint, and should be enacted into law as early as practicable.

I have more important matter bearing on the bill than I have time to read. I therefore ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

In considering the reconstruction of the post of Fort Hamilton it is well to keep in mind the location of the defensive works there. Fort Hamilton is on the Long Island shore, at the very entrance to New York Harbor. It is true there are coast defenses farther out at Sandy Hook, but there the distance between Sandy Hook and the opposite shore is so great that it is always possible for a vessel to slip by in a fog or at night. This is not the case at Fort Hamilton. The bay here is narrow, and the guns at Fort Hamilton are built out on a high projecting point and from their position easily command the bay for miles. If these guns are properly manned, no fleet in the world could get past that point. It is the main dependence against foreign war vessels sailing right up to the very city of New York. The fortification has been remodeled and new rifle guns of improved type have been put in, and the mortar battery is now nearing completion.

While the importance of this point has been recognized by those in charge of appropriations for coast defenses, nothing has been done for the accommodation of a garrison large enough to man the fort. The post is in the same antiquated and dilapidated condition that it has been in for some years. Many years ago it was made large enough for a battalion of artillery. I am now informed by the War Department, and I know from personal knowledge as well, that it requires a regiment of artillery to man the present works. The importance of the location requires not only that there should be provided accommodations for the men necessary to man the works alone, but also that some provision should be made for the accommodation of light batteries to be used anywhere along the coast. The grading of the reservation and the laying of sewer and water pipes should be arranged with a view to the encampment of a force of infantry in case of war. Many of our young men lost their lives in our home camps in 1898 because of the unhealthy conditions which prevailed in the camps.

The outbreak of typhoid fever and other camp diseases was greatly increased because of want of proper water supply and drainage facilities in our camps. It appears good reasoning to reconstruct now the post at this very important strategic point where troops must be assembled in case of war with any first-class power. Provision should be made in time of peace, so that should the occasion ever arise we may be able to put a force of men here in camp where they would be healthy, ready for duty, and of easy access to any point where they would be needed. This, however, is only an additional reason for making a complete, businesslike job of the reconstruction of this post. Even for the permanent garrison that must be put there on account of the armament which has already been placed, reconstruction is absolutely necessary.

In the bill H. R. 876, as reported from the Military Committee, the first section gives the Secretary of War power to straighten out the boundary line of this post. It does not tie him down to any particular plan, but very properly leaves that to his discretion. At present the western boundary of the post extends some 25 feet into Fort Hamilton avenue. This avenue leads from Prospect Park, Brooklyn, down to the water on the west side of the post. It is necessary that this side of the post should be moved back 25 feet, so that a sidewalk may be constructed along there in conformity with the many improvements made by the city of New York on all the streets surrounding the post. On the northeast side of the post the boundary is a broken line, with several ugly jogs in it. It is desired by the War Department to straighten this line out and give the post a regular and sightly boundary in accordance with some complete plan, which, I believe, has not yet been fully decided upon. For the purposes of this section $50,000 is appropriated.

The second section provides for the reconstruction and grading of the post under a complete plan to be adopted by the Secretary of War. It gives to the Secretary of War the necessary authority to have the roads constructed on the reservation, for they have very poor roads there now, and for the building of all the new barracks, storehouses, etc., that are required. There has been expended at this post very little money in recent years. There are a few good buildings at the post, such as the forage storehouse, four sets of noncommissioned staff officers' quarters, quartermaster's stables, and hospital building, which can be retained under a new plan, and the buildings which can not are old and unsafe buildings and some temporary sheds built during the recent war. These can not be pulled down too soon. The amount provided for the reconstruction of this post is very moderate, but is believed by the Quartermaster's Department to be sufficient to carry out this necessary work.

For comparison, I submit the following table, showing the cost of a number of posts in different sections of the United States constructed in recent years. These tables show whether completed or not on March 10, this year.

The following is a summary of expenditures in this same line that have been made at Fort Hamilton, N. Y., in recent years:

FORT HAMILTON, N. Y.

Cost of buildings constructed since January 1, 1895, or under construction on March 12, 1900.

Buildings, etc.	Cost.	Buildings, etc.	Cost.
Forage storehouse*	$7,180.41	Plumbing in same	$3,250.00

7 temporary barracks for 431 men	7,378.00	Total	96,008.24

NOTE.—Of the above buildings, one double set noncommissioned staff officers' quarters and the picket guardhouse are now under construction.

It is probable the buildings checked thus (*) will be retained and utilized in the new scheme of improvement. The temporary buildings are cheap frame construction, and can either be torn down or utilized as storehouses, etc., in the new plan.

Now, I submit these figures only for the purpose of showing the necessity for the amount called for in the bill for this post, where it is estimated that 665 men and 25 officers will be required to furnish one relief for the armament, which has already been nearly completed at Fort Hamilton. There were good reasons, I have no doubt, for the establishment of all the posts that I have here named, and I do not at this time wish to raise any question about them, but it is evident to all that the post at Fort Hamilton is by far more important than any here mentioned. It is, I believe, the most important post in the United States. It was well demonstrated in 1898 that naval vessels could not make much headway against good modern land fortifications well manned.

In case of war we can not tie our Navy to one particular city, but the Navy must be free, as it was in 1898, to seek and destroy the enemy's vessels wherever found. Nothing could be accomplished by the Navy if they had to keep vessels in the harbor of important points like New York for the protection of the cities. A land defense costing but little more than one first-class battle ship could stand off half a dozen very effectively. Moreover, in speaking for this post, it is desired only to complete what has already been nearly done at great expense. The engineers have built the fortification. It now only remains for the Quartermaster's Department to build the post.

Section 3 of the bill gives the Secretary of War the necessary authority to get rid of any old material which can not be used to any advantage in the new work.

I desire to call the attention of the members of the House to the resolutions of the Brooklyn League and the resolutions of the municipal assembly of New York City and the letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the indorsements from the War Department printed in the report of the Military Committee on the bill.

[Extract from resolution of Brooklyn League, January 24, 1900.]

Fort Hamilton, situated as it is, is the most important military post protecting New York Harbor, forming the central fortification, and being the point at which would be located the greatest number of batteries of artillery in case of war, and also being the strategic location of a supporting army.

The present buildings are the result of a piecemeal growth, having been built from time to time as necessity demanded. They are scattered all over the reservation, and are in most instances either brick structures, entirely inadequate for even present needs, or of wood and crowded with valuable quartermaster supplies, which are liable to be destroyed by fire at any time. A large number of men are now quartered in wooden structures, covered only by thin sheathing, which serve very inadequately to protect them from the inclemency of the weather, and the heating and drainage arrangements of the buildings are to all intents and purposes nil. The barracks are located from one-eighth to nearly one-half a mile from the fortifications, and in the haphazard process of building they have so encroached upon the parade ground that it is very circumscribed in dimensions and entirely inadequate for the use to which it is put.

Even the best of the present buildings are badly in need of repair and are much too small, and if any patchwork efforts are made the expense will be very large, and the renewals from time to time would be so expensive that in a short period the outlay will be as great as the proposed appropriation now asked for. The reservation is very uneven, being low in places and at others rising into unsightly mounds of earth, notably the old redoubt, which was built under ancient military science for army occupation. * * *

Resolved, That the municipal assembly of the city of New York hereby approves the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman B. F. CLAYTON, known as House of Representatives bill No. 876, which authorizes the Secretary of War to reconstruct the post of Fort Hamilton according to a new and appropriate plan, and requests the Representatives of the city of New York in Congress, the Senators representing the State of New York, and the members of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House of Representatives to give consideration to the facts recited above, in addition to those showing the necessity of an improvement of the post for military reasons, and to use their best efforts in furthering the passage of said bill.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 2, 1900.

MY DEAR MR. CLAYTON: Referring to your letter of November 14, the bill (H. R. 876) authorizing the reconstruction of the post at Fort Hamilton seems to meet with general approval by the officers of the Army familiar with that post. I hope that the bill will pass.

I send you copies of the indorsements of the captain and quartermaster at Fort Hamilton, of the colonel of the Fifth Artillery, commanding the post, and of Major-General Merritt, commanding the Department of the East, to whom the bill has been referred; and I send you also copy of an extract from the report of the Major-General Commanding the Army for 1895, which relates to this general subject, in which I hope you may be interested as well as in this particular post.

Very truly, yours,
ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. BERTRAM T. CLAYTON,
House of Representatives.

[Second indorsement.]

QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, November 28, 1899.

Respectfully returned to the adjutant, Fort Hamilton, N. Y.

The inclosed bill covers, it is believed, every contingency required to enable the military authorities to plan and construct a post suitable both to the military requirements and to the surrounding city improvements as begun by the municipal authorities of the borough of Brooklyn, city of New York.

The condition of this post is such that the present time is the most favorable, for economical reasons, to lay out anew such a post as the future requirements will demand. The plans of defensive works are probably so far complete as to indicate what these requirements will be, and the work is so far advanced that in one year from this date they will be nearly finished.

The present buildings have been so located that expansion of the post to meet requirements is impossible on any plan consistent with sanitary requirements, drainage, police purposes, or appearances consistent with the prominence of the site within the corporate limits of the city of New York.

The barrack buildings are almost the most remote ones of all those at the post from the guns and works which the troops are to care for and serve in drill and in war. They have less than half the capacity required for the present and probable future strength of batteries of artillery.

The only brick structures at the post which answer the present requirements are the hospital, three double sets of noncommissioned staff officers' quarters, one quartermaster's stable, and one forage storehouse, while the four barrack buildings above referred to are the only other brick structures.

For report on the condition of the present buildings attention is respectfully invited to the "Annual report of inspection of public buildings," prepared by Lieutenant McGlachlin, Fifth Artillery, and transmitted with my signature after relieving him as quartermaster in April of this year.

A blue print showing the present arrangement of the post and principal defensive works, as well as the surrounding lands, is inclosed.

Also a drawing intended as a suggestion of the limits of ground and best general location of officers' quarters and barracks, as near to the ground covered by defensive works as the requirements of the latter will probably permit. Two alternative boundary limits are indicated thereon as dependent upon the retention of the old redoubt for use in plan of defensive works. If the redoubt can be dispensed with and leveled down, the earth removed therefrom would be useful in the necessary general grading and appearances would be greatly improved.

A list of buildings to fulfill requirements of the post is inclosed. Of these the hospital and noncommissioned staff officers' quarters might be left as at present, the quartermaster stable and forage storehouse of brick and wagon shed of wood moved to suitable site, the other buildings to be entirely new.

Some of the buildings for barracks and officers' quarters might be located on the plan, but left to be completed later, when demanded. They should, however, be included in the plan and space reserved for them.

S. E. ALLEN,
Captain and Quartermaster, Fifth Artillery, Quartermaster.

[Third indorsement.]

FORT HAMILTON, N. Y., November 29, 1899.

Respectfully referred to the adjutant-general, Department of the East.

The present reservation contains 166 acres, more or less, but it is of such irregular shape that a plan for the necessary buildings for a garrison can not be adjusted thereto.

The present buildings are an odd lot, located without plan, and the grounds have never been properly graded or drained. Situated within the limits of the city and in view of the progressive improvements by the municipal authorities, the whole condition is discreditable and calls for the reconstruction of the post on some definite and well-digested plan. I recommend that favorable consideration be extended to the bill proposed by Colonel CLAYTON.

JNO. I. ROGERS,
Colonel, Fifth Artillery, Commanding Post.

[Sixth indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE EAST,
Governors Island, N. Y., December 14, 1899.

Respectfully forwarded to the Adjutant-General of the Army. Attention invited to the second, third, and fifth indorsements upon the within letter to the commanding officer, Fort Hamilton.

I concur in the recommendation of Col. John I. Rogers, Fifth Artillery, commanding Fort Hamilton. The defenses at Fort Hamilton are nearing completion; the present buildings are old, inadequate, and badly placed, and provision should be made for a sufficient garrison to man the works.

The time seems a good one for laying out the post on some consistent plan and one comporting with the importance of this post and the dignity of its surroundings.

W. MERRITT,
Major-General, U. S. A., Commanding.

[Extract report of the Major-General Commanding Army for 1895.]

I can not, therefore, too earnestly recommend that ample appropriation be made for the construction, as soon as practicable, of all the high-power guns and mortars, with the emplacements, mortar beds, barbette, and disappearing carriages, called for in the general plan of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications and also the Board of Engineers, as well as in the recommendations of the chiefs of engineers and ordnance on this subject. I am aware that the Government is required to make large appropriations for civil and military purposes, and that the expense of constructing modern high-power guns, mortars, gun carriages, and emplacements is very great.

To meet these requirements I would recommend that to wholly or in part provide for the necessary appropriations called for in this estimate authority be granted for the sale of such military reservations as have been abandoned and are no longer of any strategic value. I think it would be advisable that the selection of such reservations be made by the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, or a similar board of experienced officers, with the approval of the honorable the Secretary of War, and that such abandoned reservations be judiciously disposed of, and such funds resulting be used, as far as practicable, in payment for guns and gun carriages already contracted for and for which the Government has obligated itself, and for such as may be required in the future.

To this end I earnestly recommend the construction of suitable buildings for the necessary garrisons to man the guns and mortars already in position and those to be constructed and placed in position.

And in addition to these indorsements I desire to read the following from the Chief of Engineers, from Major Marshall, Engineer Corps, from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, and the indorsement of the Major-General Commanding the Army. These indorsements, received since the report of the Military Committee was made, add very much to the argument in favor of the bill.

The legislature of the State of New York has passed resolutions indorsing and urging this improvement.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, January 27, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith H. R. 876, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, "A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to reconstruct the post of Fort Hamilton, N. Y., according to a new and appropriate plan, to purchase or acquire by exchange, or both, the necessary ground adjoining the Government reservation, and to erect buildings," referred to this office for remark, and to submit the following report:

The main line of defense of New York Harbor against a naval attack is located at the Narrows, and consists of powerful batteries located at Fort Hamilton, on the Long Island side, and at Forts Wadsworth and Newton, on the Staten Island side.

Owing to its small extent it has been found necessary to occupy the entire water front of Fort Hamilton Reservation with defensive works, thereby restricting the area available for building purposes. Owing to the magnitude of the defenses a garrison of considerable size will be required for their proper service.

It appears that a reconstruction of the post is necessary to meet the conditions brought about by the construction of the modern defenses already completed and in process of construction, and that the object of the bill is to enable such reconstruction to be carried out in the best manner. Inviting attention to the accompanying report and blue print, submitted by Maj. W. L. Marshall, Corps of Engineers, in local charge of the defensive works, it appears that the post quartermaster desires an area beyond the present eastern limits of the reservation, for which an area at the extreme north end and a strip along Fort Hamilton avenue may possibly be exchanged in part payment. I am not informed as to the details of the proposed plan of reconstruction, but the interests of the defensive works will be sufficiently conserved if the area recommended by Major Marshall and indicated on the map be reserved for fortification purposes. I have no suggestions as to changes to be made in the bill. It is suggested that it would be well to obtain the views of the department commander, the Quartermaster-General, and the post commander upon this subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. WILSON,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

Hon. ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
New York City, January 25, 1900.

GENERAL: I have the honor to return herewith the bill (H. R. 876, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session) entitled "A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to reconstruct the post of Fort Hamilton, N. Y., according to a new and appropriate plan, to purchase or acquire by exchange, or both, the necessary ground adjoining the Government reservation, and to erect buildings," with the following report as required by Department letter addressed to Colonel Benyaurd, dated December 11, 1899.

The post needs reconstruction, and the bill is drawn to give the United States agents latitude in rectifying to best advantage the post boundaries. It is believed that the park authorities of Brooklyn would like to widen Fort Hamilton avenue 20 to 25 feet, so as to have a sidewalk along the present line of officers' quarters, and the quartermaster at Fort Hamilton, in proposing the reconstruction of this post, has in mind cooperation with the park officials of Brooklyn if the post were so laid out that the road past the new officers' quarters proposed be in prolongation of the driveway through Meadow Park to Coney Island.

I send herewith the outline sketch of the entire reservation, showing the area needed, in my opinion only, for defensive purposes; that which may be used for garrison purposes and that which may be exchanged without detriment; provided it may be accepted in whole or part payment for land (also indicated) to be obtained by exchange, or by exchange and purchase.

With reference to the lands I have marked as necessary for defensive purposes, I have to say that part of the glacis of the old fort lies outside of this area, and also an old redoubt. The land front of old Fort Hamilton and this redoubt were for the land defense in the days of the old smoothbore muskets and guns, and in my opinion are now of little value. Fort Hamilton, if land defense is necessary, must be defended, if at all, by supports farther in rear of the batteries, with the quarters for the garrison within and not without the line of defense. The redoubt is now used "for garrison purposes," as a post bakery is therein installed. For the purposes of reconstruction of the new post it is desired to raze this redoubt and grade around it. There has been indicated near this redoubt a post commander's station and a battery commander's station. If it be razed these stations must be raised on towers or mounds.

I suggest that the disposition of this redoubt be referred to the Board of Engineers to determine the question of its relative value for defensive or garrison purposes.

With reference to the land that is marked as admitting exchange, I have already spoken of the 25-foot strip along Fort Hamilton avenue for a sidewalk. It might possibly be exchanged for streets to be vacated in the area to be acquired. The trapezoidal area on the extreme northeastern limit of the post is a number of feet below the street grade, having been used for barrow pits to get earth for filling in low places on the reservation. It may possibly be disposed of by exchange in part payment for the area desired by the quartermaster of the post on the eastern side of the reservation.

I have no changes to suggest to be made in the bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARSHALL,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. JOHN M. WILSON,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A., Washington, D. C.

[Seventh indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 5, 1900.

Respectfully returned to the honorable the Secretary of War, inclosing H. R. bill No. 876, Fifty-sixth Congress, which provides for sale of old buildings and appropriates $50,000 for purchase of additional land and $500,000 for erection of new buildings at Fort Hamilton, N. Y., with the following report thereon:

There can be no doubt but that much work must be done at Fort Hamilton to properly provide for the garrison necessary to man the modern armament, and any such improvements undertaken should be planned with a view to a complete scheme for a complete post suited to modern requirements and the location within the limits of by far the largest and most important city in the country.

The provisions of the bill herewith, if enacted into law, would permit the Department to do this.

I have no suggestions to offer in the way of changes in the bill, except that it might be well to more clearly authorize the Secretary of War to sell or exchange for other land such portion of the present reservation as, in his opinion, is not needed for either garrison or defensive purposes.

The bill in its present shape confers this authority by implication only.

M. I. LUDINGTON,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. A.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
Washington, D. C., March 12, 1900.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War, recommending that the amount mentioned in bill H. R. 876, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, be appropriated for the purpose indicated therein.

NELSON A. MILES,
Major-General Commanding.

The four or five millions of people in New York City and its suburbs, with their billions of dollars of property right on the water navigable by the largest vessels, are fully alive to the great importance of the fortifications situated at the Narrows, the gateway from the sea to New York City.

The two fortifications at the Narrows, and especially the one at Fort Hamilton, would in time of war be utilized to prevent anchorage of fleets in Gravesend Bay and in the deep water south of Coney Island, and, above all, they form the inner line of defense at the southern entrance to New York City.

The people of Brooklyn take great pride in this post at Fort Hamilton, and the city has shown a very liberal spirt in making improvements surrounding this post. They feel that, both on the ground of safety to the city and of the obligations of the Government to keep up this property in conformity with the character of the city in which it is located, the reconstruction of this post should be undertaken without further delay. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

[Mr. RIDGELY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

After a pause, during which no member addressed the Chair,

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that anybody on this side wants to speak now. We are letting this debate run to allow the minority a hearing. If no further debate is desired, I will call for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] wants to occupy an hour. I think he will be here shortly. I hope gentlemen on the other side will use some of their time.

Mr. HULL. I will remind the gentleman from New York that we can extend the time for debate under the five-minute rule. I do not want to cut anybody off, but I do not believe we ought to neglect our opportunity to legislate.

Mr. SULZER. There are several gentlemen here who desire to talk on this bill—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX]——

Mr. HULL. Let some of those gentlemen go on. It is not yet 4 o'clock.

Mr. SULZER. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] that he now proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] will be recognized.

[Mr. COX addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ATWATER. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say a word upon this bill, but I believe the sentiments of the people of the district which I have the honor to represent are entitled to be heard on this question. North Carolina in its history has ever been true to the call for the defense of what she believes to be right. In the war that we have just gone through with with Spain she was equal to the emergency. Believing that our cause was just, that the oppression and the starvation of the people of Cuba by the Spanish Government was cruel, our people responded to the call of the Chief Executive. We believed that when we had conquered Spain and provided a way by which the Cubans could have independence and freedom, when peace was restored and Spain was driven from those islands, the Army would be reduced and unnecessary expenses would stop. But when it was attempted to extend our dominions over other islands, that were not thought of when the first call for troops was issued, the people of my State believed it to be an unjust war.

Had the President defined the present position of the Administration at that time we believe that the people of this country would not have been in favor of his policy, and we would not be called upon now to make large appropriations for the Army. If after Admiral Dewey had captured the Spanish fleet at Manila he had put on all steam and gone to the shores of Spain to conquer the remainder of the Spanish navy, every man in this country would have rejoiced; but the attempt to subdue the people of the Philippine Islands has never met with the hearty response from the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent. I believe that if the President of the United States were to define his policy to-day and to say to the Philippine insurgents, "If you will lay down your arms, civil government will be given to you," I believe that in less than three months all armed resistence in the Philippines would cease and peace would be restored, so that our troops could be recalled from that country, where they are dying, not only from rebel bullets but from disease.

I believe, as an American, that we ought to define our position and let those people know that we do not intend to take their islands as our possessions. I believe we would be a hundred times better off without them than with them. I believe that if this policy is continued Congress will be called upon year after year to make appropriations for the Army to maintain a government in those islands. I, for one, believe that it is the duty of the Chief Executive to call a halt; to give the people in those islands to understand that we do not intend to crush them; but that a nation which is powerful enough so that it can afford to be generous will give them their freedom and the right to self-government. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, if there is no other gentleman who desires to talk——

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I have no opposition to make to the features of the bill now before the House. I recognize that we have an army in the field, an army confronted with serious and grave dangers, and I would not say a word in antagonism to any reasonable plan or proposal to maintain that army until it has accomplished its work. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I will not address myself to the question of the appropriations embraced in the present bill, but to a question which may well be regarded as germane to it—our relations to and with the Philippine Islands and the course we should pursue concerning them.

I. WAR IS THE SPORT AND GAME OF KINGS.

Mr. Chairman, the war that has been going on in the Philippine Islands and the questions of public policy growing out of this war constitute grave and momentous issues for the American people, issues that may affect our destinies for all time to come. The American people come of a warlike stock, but they are not a war-loving people. The deplorable civil war between the States ended over thirty years ago. The war with Spain closed after a very brief struggle in the triumph of our arms. Peace jubilees followed at once all over the land. The good sense of the American people has steadily recognized peace as an inestimable blessing, and war, even when necessary, they regard as a great calamity. War is the sport and game of kings. Nobles and kings may well delight in war. They reap the honors and rewards. The heroism of the private soldiers all go to enhance the glory of monarch, nobles, and officers. The gallant deeds of the privates are known only to a few surviving comrades. The sacrifices and sufferings of the war, the grievous taxes paid, the impoverishment of the family, the loss to the wife and children of their sustaining prop and protector, the struggles of the maimed and crippled veteran to eke out a support, the burden of debt and taxation fastened on labor for generations to come—what has the monarch, the noble, or the rich contractor to do with all this? How can they sympathize with all these sufferings and hardships—they who have reaped only riches and fame from this widespread human misery?

If this be true in the case of the victors, how much worse is the case of the vanquished? The poor man, the peasant, the farmer, if he survives the war it is probably to find a desolated habitation, perhaps only a blackened chimney to remind him of a once happy home, a beggared family, and, it may be, wrongs to his helpless family of which I dare not speak. If to his own fury and passions the conqueror adds the specious plea that he is the chosen instrument of God's wrath to punish some alleged crime of another nation or people, or that it is his duty to carry civilization and religion to distant lands by the military arm, then you may expect to witness a double installment of man's malice. If you doubt this, read the history of the so-called religious wars of Europe and Asia and the story of Roman and British conquests. Recall the names of Verres and the Roman proconsuls, of Clive and Hastings, Pizarro and Cortez, and some others of our own day and generation who have plundered, scourged, and oppressed a subject population.

II. NO DISHONOR IN TREATING WITH ALLEGED REBELS.

Our Revolutionary war of 1776 was a righteous war, one of self-defense, and for the right to govern ourselves. At the outset our petitions for peace and justice were "spurned from the foot of the throne." We were told that "rebels" in arms could not be treated with; that we must lay down our arms and submit. The terrible contest went on and on with varying fortunes, until finally the King of England condescended to treat with us. Peace and independence were the result. Sir, there is no dishonor, there can be none, in negotiating with alleged rebels or insurgents. If there were such dishonor, then England might have held out indefinitely. We have ourselves often made treaties of peace with Indian tribes who had defied our authority. The brave and the strong can always afford to be generous. The story of that period supplies another moral. France had helped us greatly. At the close we were exhausted, almost helpless, but she asked no pecuniary reward and no surrender of any territory as compensation for her powerful succor, and still less did she dream of selling out her allies, the American colonies, to any country for a sum of money, or of buying England's title to our shores. She quitted the fight clean-handed, with her honor unstained. No Frenchman need blush for that page of history.

III. POWER TO MAKE WAR RESTS WITH CONGRESS.

The American statesmen of that day had pondered well the lessons of history. They had seen kings make war again and again regardless of the people's wishes. They, therefore, refused to trust the President with the war-making power. They would not trust it to the Senate, high as that body was to be, and then deemed most unlikely to be influenced by patronage. They would not trust the power of making war even to the President and Senate combined. I am aware, sir, that there are some politicians of our day who claim that the President and Senate combined can by a treaty make a war and can even empower Congress to legislate in United States territory outside of the Federal Constitution; but this is not the doctrine of the good and great men who created our form of government. They, indeed, allowed the President and the Senate to make peace by the form of a treaty; but this power to make war, so solemn, so awful in its responsibilities, they would confide only to Congress. Therefore, in order to make war, it is necessary under our Constitution to have the concurrence of the people's immediate representatives, chosen every two years, and of the Senate, a body chosen by the State legislatures and presumed to be more free from popular passion and excitement. Yet you have additional restraints upon the making war. If the President does not approve the act declaring war, two-thirds of each branch of Congress are necessary in order to overrule him and make it his duty to draw the sword. Sometimes a President is more conservative than Congress.

These limitations upon the war-making power are not mere empty forms. They concern the rights, the happiness, and the liberties of the people, to whom all public officials are not masters, but servants. Ours is or ought to be a government of public opinion. In order to ascertain that opinion, these forms were devised by statesmen compared with whom those of the present day fall very far short.

IV. CONSTITUTIONAL FORMS OBSERVED IN WAR WITH SPAIN.

In the war with Spain these constitutional forms were observed. The President did not desire war. He did not undertake to make war. It is only justice to him to say that he strove to avert war by making demands which he thought Spain would concede. Finally, he reported the whole facts of the situation to Congress, making no specific recommendation, and devolving upon that body the responsibility of making the dread decision of war or peace. Congress acted promptly. Congress demanded that Spain should relinquish her authority in Cuba, and directed the President to employ, if necessary, the land and naval forces of the United States in order to carry the resolution into effect.

It was foreseen that this action would involve a war for the liberation of Cuba. In view of this contingency, Congress was careful to embrace in the joint resolution a declaration of our motives and purposes in this armed intervention. This was done in the most explicit language. Repelling the idea of some persons that our motive was merely greed for new territory, Congress positively disclaimed any purpose to exercise dominion over the island of Cuba except for its pacification, and pledged the republic when that pacification should be accomplished to leave the government of the island to its own people. Nothing was said of the other possessions of Spain. Our country knew nothing of the Philippine Islands and cared nothing about the struggles and disorders in that remote locality. There was no struggle at all in Puerto Rico as in Cuba—no revolt, no reports of discontent with Spanish rule. Now, it could not be supposed that while rejecting the rich and beautiful island of Cuba, in order to avouch the purity of our noble endeavor for its freedom, we should make any reservations, whether mental or verbal, that we would appropriate other colonies of Spain as compensation for a war alleged to be begun solely for the cause of humanity and civilization. It seems to me that the declaration of disinterestedness asserted in respect to Cuba ought to have been regarded as an expression of the policy of the two Houses of Congress and of the American people in relation to the whole war and its incidents. The war was not to be waged for money or territory, but for honor, for humanity, for civilization, and, as was well said by an eminent Senator, to "abate a nuisance."

War followed the President's signature on the 20th of April, 1898, to these pregnant resolves of Congress. As soon as Spain learned of the President's signature to the joint resolution requiring her to withdraw from Cuba, she proceeded to terminate all diplomatic relations with the United States. She notified Mr. Woodford, our minister at Madrid, that the Spanish Government regarded this joint resolution as "equivalent to an evident declaration of war." This was done on April 21, 1898. On the following day, April 22, the President declared a blockade of certain Cuban ports, but he based this act and also his proclamation calling for volunteers upon the joint resolution by Congress of April 20 and upon an act of Congress approved April 22, 1898. It was felt, however, by all persons that as war was to ensue it ought to be preceded by an act of Congress. Following the spirit and text of the Constitution, the President on April 25, 1898, after reciting the precise situation of affairs, recommended to Congress the adoption of a resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain. Congress acted immediately on his suggestion, and that very day the President signed the resolution declaring war. Here was the authority for the war with Spain, in these two acts or resolutions of Congress dated the 20th and 25th of April, respectively, both passed pursuant to the Constitution. It was not a Presidential war or an act of usurpation, but a war made by the full authority of the American Congress.

I have been careful in reciting the various steps by which we went to war with Spain, because I wish you to compare them with the history of our present war in the Philippine Islands. Every step in making the war with Spain was in perfect accordance with constitutional forms. Congress declared war. Congress defined the causes and purposes of the war. These laws are inscribed on our statute book. The war thus constitutionally declared was supported by the American people regardless of party. The valor of our troops and sailors was worthy of our traditions as a martial people and was crowned with speedy and brilliant success.

But consider the war now being waged against the people of the Philippines. Was that war declared by Congress? Everyone knows the contrary to be the truth. Were its causes and purposes defined by Congress? Never! The legislative body could easily have been convened last spring. Under our Constitution, Congress can not meet in special session without a call of the President, but that act of assemblage by Congress would be a less stretch of power than the initiation of war or hostilities without the authority of Congress.

V. CONGRESS SHOULD HAVE BEEN CONSULTED.

The President could have summoned Congress to meet in March, 1899, to deal with all questions growing out of the Spanish war, but he would not do so; and thus this war in the Philippines, begun irregularly, has gone on day by day, with its catalogue of suffering and bloodshed, assuming as it progressed larger and larger proportions, until the Administration was obliged to employ 65,000 armed men in a war against a people on the opposite side of the globe! And all this is done without formally consulting Congress or the American people! I ask you, is this consistent with the American Constitution? Does it not violate that sacred instrument in one of its most vital provisions—the regulation of the great war-making power? I admit that when Congress is not in session we may be assailed and our rights invaded by a foreign government, and that in such cases the President is bound to protect American interests and, if necessary, to employ force for this purpose; but it is equally his duty in grave and serious cases to convene Congress at once in extraordinary session to pass on the question of war and peace. His functions in such emergencies are defensive. It is for Congress only to convert defensive hostilities into war. In a monarchical government the sovereign may decline to summon the national legislature to his aid. He may deem himself wise and great enough to take into his own hands the question of war and peace. But our Government is not a monarchy. It is a republic; and we must reason strictly on that basis if we desire to preserve our birthright of freedom.

It may be said, however, that Congress was in session on the 4th of February, 1899, when hostilities began in the Philippines. This collision was a very serious event—an armed conflict with a people who but a short time before were as friendly to Americans as they had been hostile to Spain, and who had waged a noble battle for freedom which all of us had applauded. If, when this sad event occurred, the policy of the Government was to refuse all peace negotiation and to conquer by the sword the nine or ten millions of people residing in these islands, it was unquestionably the duty of the President to submit the facts to Congress and announce his plans for their consideration and decision. This is substantially what he so wisely did in respect to Cuba.

If he considered that, with only one short month of the session remaining and the great annual appropriation bills still not framed into laws, the Fifty-fifth Congress would not have the time required for the proper consideration of these great and new questions, it was easy for him to summon the Fifty-sixth Congress. That Congress had been chosen and could have been assembled in two weeks or even less time. In both bodies of that Congress there was a majority of the President's party friends. Surely it will not be said that in such a body as that there could not be found the wisdom to grapple with the problem. Remember that the war with Spain was closed entirely in 1898. Spain had submitted to our demands. The treaty of peace with her was ratified by the United States Senate early in February, 1899, and very soon afterwards by the Spanish Government. Obviously the time had now come for Congress to adjust all the questions growing out of the Spanish war—the disposition of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and, more particularly, the Philippines—when prompt action by Congress might stay the further effusion of blood. In a public address, delivered at Boston the 16th of February last, the President declared that the final disposition of the Philippines belonged to Congress. By failing to summon Congress together he made himself the actual master of the situation.

Look at the precedents. Mr. Lincoln called Congress together in 1861. When in May, 1846, hostilities occurred on the Rio Grande between our forces and those of Mexico, President Polk laid the facts before Congress immediately and recommended the policy which Congress then adopted. Mr. Madison asked the consent of Congress before making war against Great Britain in 1812, although acts of hostility had previously occurred, and our flag had been fired upon. The examples of Presidents so distinguished ought to govern us, even if we had no written Constitution and were groping in the dark for the path of duty. If the Executive may conduct a foreign war for nine or ten months without the authority or direction of Congress, why may he not, on the plea of necessity or emergency, impose new taxes and customs duties, or perform any other function expressly assigned to Congress by the Federal Constitution?

VI. EVENTS PRECEDING HOSTILITIES.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to detain the House by reciting at length the history of events in the Philippines prior to the collision which in February last year led to the present unhappy conflict. That history in all important respects is reported in Senate Document No. 62 of the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress. This document and the dispatches to the press tell the story of a general revolt against Spain in the island of Luzon, and a general occupation of the country by the insurgents prior to Dewey's destruction of the Spanish fleet on May 1, 1898. That document informs us how the insurgents in large numbers were encamped near Manila and threatening that city. Before Dewey sailed from the coast of Asia, overtures had been made by the United States officials at Singapore and Hongkong for the cooperation of Aguinaldo in the fight against Spanish power.

They arranged for an interview between Commodore Dewey and Aguinaldo before Dewey sailed. Dewey telegraphed in reply, "Tell Aguinaldo to come at once." It was pursuant to these arrangements for cooperation and alliance with the Americans that Aguinaldo went to Manila. Arriving there soon after Commodore Dewey's victory of May 1, 1898, he put himself in cooperation with Dewey and received arms and other aid from him. He put himself at the head of the insurgent forces and movement. He armed them largely with his own means, and at a time when the Americans had no land forces there he had driven the Spanish forces into Manila and closely invested the city on the land side, cutting off their supplies of food and water supply and harassing them with constant attacks. He was a friend and an ally—a valuable ally to the United States forces, for it was a good while before enough of our troops arrived at Manila to render his further cooperation unnecessary. All this time the relations of the United States officers and of the Filipinos were most friendly. It was at this time—the 29th of August, 1898—that Commodore Dewey wrote the Navy Department:

> In a telegram sent to the Department on June 23 I expressed the opinion that these people are far superior in their intelligence and are more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races. Further intercourse with them has confirmed me in this opinion.

These favorable opinions of the Filipinos are confirmed by the recorded testimony of President Schurman, Professor Worcester, Mr. John Barrett, Gen. Charles A. Whitten, Gen. Charles King, and a number of eminent Americans familiar with the islands and their inhabitants.

On June 12, 1898, the Filipinos proceeded to hold a national council and to form a provisional government. They were then investing Manila on the land side. They had probably more men in arms than the colonies had at any one time from 1775 to 1783 in the struggle with Great Britain. A few days later, on June 23, Dewey telegraphed that this people were more capable of self-government than the Cubans. Is not this dispatch a proof that he was then in sympathy with their movement for self-government and independence? He certainly expressed no disapproval of the steps they were taking, nor did any other Army officer or official then representing the United States Government.

The Filipino government was formally proclaimed on the 23d June, 1898. A congress was provided for, which was to assemble at Malolos, in Luzon, about September 20, 1898. This was an independent government. Its formation was matter of world-wide notoriety. Its existence was known in Washington City almost as well as at Manila. Yet no protest or objection was made against it by our Government or any of our officers. Generals Anderson and Merritt did not say a word against it. If there was any purpose on the part of our officials to hold on to these islands, or even to Luzon, would it not have been the fair thing to notify these people that they were going too far? Was it not natural and reasonable for them to assume that they would be allowed by us to indulge their ardent aspiration for a government of their own choice? How could they look upon us as mere vulgar conquerors and imitators of the Spaniards? They had a highly educated class among them who were probably familiar with our public declaration of disinterestedness in respect to Cuba and who concluded that we would pursue a like policy in regard to them. They had indeed done far more to achieve their independence than the Cubans had done. They held then all of Luzon save a few square miles containing the city of Manila. All their manifestoes and public declarations evinced a profound respect and admiration of the American Government and people.

It is somewhat difficult to fix the precise time when the scheme of annexing the Philippine Islands was resolved upon. At the very outset the British press sought to commit us to the retention of the Philippines and to the imperial policy. It has been asserted that British diplomacy was exerted to the same end, possibly with a view to a broader and more far-reaching alliance by which her interests were to be promoted and guarded. All this ran counter to the wise counsels of Washington and Jefferson. If the President agreed with this policy he did not declare it to Congress when it met in December, 1898. In his annual message, dated December 5, 1898, he said that he—> would not discuss at that time the government or the future of the new possessions which will come to us as the result of the war with Spain. Such discussion will be appropriate after the treaty of peace shall be ratified.

The spirit of this remark was wise and in conformity to the genius of our institutions.

It is true that as early as October 31, 1898, our commissioners at Paris demanded of Spain the cession of these islands, but the fact was not officially made known to Congress until by the President's message to the Senate of January 4, 1899. The terms of the treaty were, however, generally understood, prior to this, to include the cession of the Philippine Islands by Spain for the sum of $20,000,000, and this fact, coupled with some of the President's public addresses, was well calculated to alarm and disquiet the Filipino people. Thus the relations of the two parties in Luzon, though not hostile, became much strained, not to say unfriendly. But no formal issue had been made. The President was not yet formally committed to annexation. The treaty itself had not been ratified. The Senate might perhaps amend it, or, if the Senate preferred to ratify it as it stood rather than run the risk of prolonging a costly war with an unsettled state of affairs following, the President might still turn over to Congress the momentous question of settling the destinies of the nine or ten millions of people living in these islands. It was an easy matter to make the payment of the twenty millions a basis for the native government surrendering to us such naval station or stations as we might desire and reimburse us the twenty millions as their revenues might permit. This sum was a small amount compared with what we had expended in order to free Cuba from Spanish rule.

The Filipinos would probably have been only too happy to make such arrangements with us and maintain their self-government under an American protectorate. These people probably reasoned on these lines of thought, for all during the month of January, 1899, they maintained a diplomatic representative at Washington City. He was not received, though he represented a people who had been our allies during the war with Spain. I mean allies in fact and in friendly feeling and with a cordial understanding.

VII. THE FATAL COLLISION.

I come now to the unfortunate collision which ensued between the American troops and the Filipinos on February 4, 1899. It was an affair of outposts. There is much dispute as to who were the aggressors, into which question I do not care to enter. But there are some historical facts pertinent to this event which are undisputed. The treaty of peace with Spain ceding us the Philippines, to which she had only a technical and a paper title, without any actual possession whatever, was signed on December 10, 1898, at Paris. On December 21, 1898—that is to say, before the treaty was communicated to the United States Senate—the President issued positive instructions to the Secretary of War to be promulgated in the Philippines. He stated therein that the destruction of the Spanish fleet, followed by the capture of Manila, had practically effected the conquest of the Philippine Islands; that Spain had ceded these islands to the United States, and that under the rights of sovereignty thus acquired the "actual occupation and administration of the entire group of the Philippine Islands" had become "immediately necessary," and that "the military government previously maintained by the United States in the city, harbor, and bay of Manila was to be extended with all possible dispatch to the whole of the ceded territory."

Now, at this very time the military lines and occupation of the Filipinos covered nearly the whole of the island of Luzon—all of it, indeed, save Manila and a very few square miles near by, which constituted hardly a hundredth part of the whole island. The Filipino government had been in actual operation over six months, with its capitol located at the city of Malolos, in Luzon, and governing the island, with the full consent of the United States authority. The language of the proclamation undoubtedly meant that these people were to give up their own government, disband their armies, and submit implicitly to the United States military forces of which General Otis was the head. If they should not at once and unanimously give up their government and disband all their armies, conflict was inevitable. In case of resistance "firmness" and "severity" were to be employed. Such language can have but one meaning. The Filipinos, or many of them, probably construed it to mean war. Certainly such an interpretation on their part was very natural.

It deserves to be specially noted that this document was not sent to the United States Senate until the 4th of January, 1899. It was then sent in as a confidential document or with confidential papers. It was promulgated in Manila on the same day it went to the United States Senate.

Would it not have been a wiser course, instead of this order requiring "immediate" action by our army in Luzon, for the Executive to maintain the status quo in the islands, holding on to Manila and any other point then in our actual possession, and leaving to the Filipinos, our late allies, the temporary occupation of the remainder of the island, which by their heroism and sacrifices they had wrested from Spain? This state of things had existed for over six months with peace and good will. Surely it could well be suffered to continue at least until the Senate should have acted on the treaty and until Congress should make some decision as to the future of these islands, as was apparently contemplated by the President in his annual message to Congress. What public interest would have suffered by a course of patience and conciliation?

With this proclamation, so well calculated to alarm and irritate this people who had indulged a fond dream of independence, it is indeed strange that the Filipino leaders should have been able to restrain their followers as long as they did. Even after the collision of February 4, 1899, there is ground for the belief that the leaders would have been very glad to make a pacific arrangement, but there was no disposition to accept anything but their unqualified submission. I shall not recite the history of the war. Our armies were reenforced to the number of 65,000 men. Our Navy gallantly cooperated. The American soldiers showed, as all expected, that they knew how to fight for their flag. The Filipinos have shown that they also know how to make sacrifices and, if need be, to die for their independence. Both sides have suffered greatly.

The island of Luzon has been overrun with the usual waste and havoc, and the Filipinos are now split up into small bands. Resistance is not yet extinguished, but it may be extinguished. On the other hand, some of our best military men say that the war will go on indefinitely. The manner in which ten or fifteen thousand insurgents in Cuba kept up a contest with Spain and her army of 200,000 men for ten or more years shows the great difficulty to be expected in suppressing resistance in a tropical country, with jungles, morasses, swamps, and mountains for the natives to retreat to and make a stand. It is utterly vain now to attempt a prophecy about the military situation. I should be glad if this suffering and misery could be brought to a close, but I fear the end is not yet near at hand.

Much as I deplore the waste and havoc of war, the loss of valuable lives, the burden of grievous taxation and increased public debt, there are, to my mind, other evils which may come to us from this unfortunate situation. We are confronted with the serious question whether we are to leave these people to their own government or whether we are to rule them as subjects. It is not now proposed by anybody to admit these people to our citizenship or to allow them to become at any time a governing power in our confederated Republic. No, sir. The proposition is to treat them as subjects, perhaps by the military arm, perhaps by the form or pretense of a civil government, the latter to be reenforced by the sword if necessary. How many troops are to be used for our permanent army of occupation we are not told; nor the cost, nor how long this state of things is to last. But it is obvious that the leaders of the Republican party are fully committed to the plan of holding these islands by the strong hand of power at any and all cost of blood and treasure. They even go so far as to assert that Congress has a right to legislate for these islands outside of the Constitution. In their creed our noble Constitution is a movable feast, and not the daily bread by which the spirit of liberty is to be fed. Yet many of those who now uphold this strange doctrine not long ago stood up in this very Hall and swore before God to support and obey the Constitution of the United States.

VIII. THE PLEA OF A LARGER TRADE WITH THE ORIENT.

The pleas upon which we are to adopt this new policy of conquest and empire are utterly devoid of truth and logic. Such especially is the claim that our trade with the Orient will be largely enhanced and become exceedingly profitable. It is said that we must have new markets and that the trade of these islands is but a stepping-stone to that of China. It is over 600 miles from Manila to Hongkong, and it is hard to see any connection between the trade with Manila and that with China. Vessels going to China do not touch at Manila; it is far out of the way. I admit, I recognize the great importance of our present trade with China. I admit and can easily foresee that if our rights and interests are properly cared for our prospective trade with China may swell to grand proportions, and perhaps in time equal or surpass our present trade with Europe. Why do I say this? Because China is inhabited by four or five hundred millions of an industrious, energetic race, who live in a temperate climate like our own and who are just beginning to adopt the industrial arts by which a people become rich and powerful. They are keen traders and industrious artisans.

At present the body of the population live on very scanty wages; they produce very little per capita. Consequently they have not a great deal at present to offer in exchange, and all commerce rests on an exchange of surplus products. Their production will increase rapidly—perhaps I may say dangerously—and with the surplus products to export they will be able and willing to import. But, sir, I am reminded that it is already announced that the State Department has concluded arrangements with foreign powers by virtue of which if they hold or acquire territory in China, or have what is called "spheres of influence" our wares and merchandise are to suffer no prejudice, but are to be admitted freely into China, as heretofore. I fear very much that such understanding may have very little practical value when the crisis arises.

If, however, I am mistaken in this and our future commerce is well guarded, then we may dismiss the Philippines as a factor in the China trade. If, however, as may well turn out, our trade in and with China is to be discriminated against by rapacious European powers who are now actively grabbing Chinese territory, then our power to protest and repel such injustice and injury to our trade will not be augmented by our being loaded up with a rebellious set of colonies in the Philippines, which we are to watch, guard, and keep in order. The energies, the money, the military and naval power already expended in the conquest of the Philippines might very well be reserved for employment in the great and important problem now looming up before us, namely: Are we to have the trade with China to which we are fairly entitled by reason of our varied products, the skill and energy of our people, and our favorable position on the Pacific Ocean? Does it not look, sir, as if we were sacrificing substance for shadow in our frantic struggles to absorb the Philippines?

IX. VALUE OF THE PHILIPPINES' TRADE.

The trade with the Philippines—how much is it worth? How much can it be worth to us as compared with our trade in other directions? Well, you will not, under a free-trade or "open-door" policy, have any special advantages. The European nations, by virtue of the Suez Canal, are nearer to the Philippines than we are or will be until perhaps a canal is built across the Isthmus. But assume that after annexing the Philippines we impose a tariff sufficient to give us the control of the whole import trade. It would give us very little. According to the last returns, when the island of Luzon was at its best, the total foreign trade was only about $30,000,000, and our profit on it would be a mere bagatelle compared with the cost of ownership—the Army and Navy needed to suppress revolts and protect our new possessions. It may be said that this small trade of the islands, with nine or ten millions of people, was because everything was blighted or repressed by Spanish rule.

There may be something in this point, but I read that under Spanish rule Cuba was once a very rich island and had a very valuable trade. I beg you to remember that the great body of the people of the Philippines have very few wants. They are very near the equatorial line; the climate is hot. In such climates there is little demand for animal food. A little rice and bread goes a long way. Warm clothing is not required, nor much clothing of any kind. The body of the people live in very cheap habitations. They have very few wants. They can live comfortably and have all the necessaries of life on 5 to 10 cents per day. All tropical experiences and reports go to show that under such conditions the inferior races—the African, Indian, and Malay races—will not work any more than is absolutely necessary to make a bare support. They will produce no surplus for export. They do not care for your civilization or your artificial wants, the product of a high civilization. They will not work to accumulate. The Mongolian adventurers or laborers may be more industrious. They constitute a little over a twentieth part of the whole population of the islands.

Suppose, however, that by some magic you can recreate the people of Luzon and give them the wants and cravings of our own people and that they will then go to work and produce something wherewith to trade with you. What will it be? What can they produce that we will want? As the able gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] pointed out lately in this House, will not the new and augmented productions involve a dangerous competition with our own industries by a class of laborers who can live well on 10 cents a day while our laborers expect a dollar and upward? Look at their products. What are they? In the first place, there is the product of sugar. There was a time in our history when Louisiana produced one-half of the sugar the country consumed.

Now we have the competition of beet sugar—I mean the American beet-sugar industry. This is a fair rivalry, of which Louisiana does not complain. But you are letting in the cooly and slave or contract grown sugar of the Hawaiian Islands duty free, and you will soon let in free the pauper-grown sugar of Puerto Rico. Your next step is to develop sugar in the Philippines and crush out the beet-sugar industry of the Pacific coast and the cane sugar of Louisiana. Do you propose to carry the negro laborers of Louisiana to the Philippines after you have starved them out? Suppose you develop the growth of tobacco. Will that help the tobacco grown in Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, or Connecticut? Are the profits of this class, burdened so heavily already by your internal-revenue tax, so large that you must needs spend the resources of the whole Union in order to break them down by the competition of Malays and Mongolians?

X. INFLUENCE UPON MARKET FOR COTTON AND OTHER PRODUCTS.

It has been suggested by some inconsiderate people that we could have a profitable market for our cotton in the Philippines. It would be far wiser to send our coals to Newcastle. Living in a tropical clime, these people have little need for clothing and would consume very little cotton; but with industry on their part, or, what is more likely, on the part of Chinese and Japanese laborers, they can, in all probability, produce cotton of the best quality. They had produced long-staple cotton until the Spanish Government stepped in and arrested the production. They can resume this product and develop it, beyond a doubt. With the Chinese and Japanese, if not with native Malay labor, they can manufacture this cotton, paying 5 or 10 cents per day for their operatives. How would this sort of "expansion" benefit New England or South Carolina or Georgia or other States in which the manufacture of cotton goods is a profitable industry? Is this your "white man's burden" that you are so eager to assume?

I consider, sir, that the argument of the Representative from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is conclusive on this subject, and that if the production of these islands is to be stimulated, it will be on agricultural lines and will form a competition with home industries that are now barely able to maintain themselves under a system of taxation that has little regard for the farmer or the planter.

There is one other industry in which our people are even more likely to suffer. I refer to the hemp-growing industry, a most important one in some of our Western States. This industry has already been developed in Luzon; and if peace ever comes, then, by the aid of Chinese labor, it will be a formidable competitor with our own hemp-growing industry.

XI. TROPICAL TRADE.

Sir, there is a wide misapprehension in respect to the relative value of a tropical trade. In order to estimate it properly, it may be well to consider where our exports go to. It will be found, sir, that they go chiefly to countries lying in temperate regions—to races like our own—energetic, intelligent, industrious, and who have developed the wants and needs of a high civilization. Now, for the calendar year 1898 our total exports were $1,255,546,266; for the year 1899, they were $1,275,499,671. I take the latter year. Of this last sum we sent to Europe, $959,234,520. We sent to France, $70,107,127; to Germany, $161,405,852, and to the Netherlands, $83,601,438. To Great Britain we sent $509,958,335. We sent to British North America, $88,284,778.

Now, compare these exports with our exports to tropical countries: To Brazil, with its enormous area and varied production, we sent $11,453,997; to all the West Indies, lying right at our door, $44,071,055; to Cuba, although at peace, we sent only $24,861,261. It may be said that Cuba was still suffering from the war. Then turn to Mexico, peaceful, orderly, and progressive. She took from us only $29,309,802. It is a very large country, with considerable variety of soil and products and with our railroads running through the country, but she needed only twenty-nine millions of our exports. Mexico is a tropical or semitropical country, and her people have different wants from our own or from Canada, to which we sent some $88,000,000.

To the Philippine Islands we exported $69,459 in 1897. That was prior to our war with Spain. In 1898 we exported $147,846, and last year only $1,663,213, though we had a large army there. There is nothing to prove that we can ever expect to have a large export trade with the Philippine Islands compared with what we may expect with South America, Brazil, Cuba, Mexico, and Central America. As compared with our export trade to Europe and our prospective exports to China, the possibilities of our export trade with the Philippines are absolutely insignificant. But if tropical trade is to dominate our imagination and control our policy, it would be far better to see what we can do in the West Indies, or Mexico, or Central America, or in South America, or tropical Africa, instead of wasting our blood and treasure in building up customers in Luzon. Our present policy there may lead to some large demand for mourning goods, but that wretched people will not be able to buy them.

I repeat it, sir, we should avail ourselves of our great natural advantages and proximity to Cuba and the West Indies, to Mexico, Central America, and the South American governments. Our political relations with Mexico and South America are cordial. Practically these governments are, by virtue of the Monroe doctrine, placed under an American protectorate. We say to Europe, "Stand off; no land grabbing there." With such relations, with a study of their markets and requirements, our people ought to be able to absorb much the larger portion of the trade with South America, the West Indies, and Mexico. Here is a prize indeed, but let it be pursued by the arts of peace. The sword is not needed. Let American skill, invention, and genius solve the problem. There may perhaps be legislative aids to such trade, which I have not now the time to discuss. But I hope that there will be no effort by our Government to develop trade with those countries at the expense of our own struggling agricultural industries.

XII. A SUMMARY.

In the remarks I have submitted I have endeavored to show that, starting out with the proposition that war, even when necessary, is an awful calamity and sacrifice, we have drifted into this present war against the people of the Philippines without any necessity and occasion for it; that they were our allies in the fight with Spain; that they were most friendly and cordial toward the Government and people of the United States; that the government they set up at Malolos, in the island of Luzon, was organized without objection from our officers in Luzon or from the Washington Administration; that they had every reason to suppose it would be recognized; that this government operated for over six months all over the island of Luzon save a very few square miles including the city of Manila, and that the attempt to overthrow it and substitute therefor a military government of the United States Army was an act premature and tending to conflict, and was never authorized and approved by Congress, to which body, under our Constitution, belonged the settlement of the whole matter. I recall these facts, not with any feeling of acrimony or to impute bad motives to others, but to show that the policy pursued has been most unwise and unfortunate.

At this stage of affairs, after a year of costly war in Luzon, we are confronted with the grave questions: Are these islands to be permanently held as a part of our possessions either as a subject colony or as an incipent State or States of the Union? Very few persons, if any, propose the latter scheme at this time, but as there are no limits to human folly some will probably urge it in the future. The great body of the so-called "expansionists" propose to hold the Philippines as dependencies and to govern them as England governs India, Ceylon, and Jamaica—that is, by military force—or as France dominates Madagascar. The advocates of this plan rest their case chiefly on the commercial argument that this "forcible annexation" would promote our trade with China and would also give us a valuable trade with these islands themselves.

I think that I have shown successfully that there is nothing in the so-called commercial argument; that the only trade possible with the islands, if it could be developed, would be to stimulate dangerous competition with our own agricultural industries by the growth of hemp, sugar, tobacco, and cotton; that so far from aiding our trade with China the retention of a colony of rebellious subjects would, by requiring an army and navy to be kept there, embarrass us in the attempt to enforce our rights and interests in respect to the great prospective trade of China, and finally, that there are large and fertile countries to the southward, such as Cuba, Mexico, Central America, Brazil, and others far more worthy of our attention and where trade would be more easily secured.

The commercial argument, therefore, is opposed to all our experience and to common sense and is shown to be worthless. It has rested on the pure assumption of hasty and ignorant declaimers. Unless this argument can be shown to be perfectly well founded, it can not be counted against the cost of the war, the evils of a colonial system, the growth of militarism, and the serious injury to our form of government—the abandonment of the republican idea and the adoption by us of European ideas and methods of government. It must also be considered that if we are going into the business of land-grabbing and conquest in Asiatic waters, we weaken the position and arguments by which we have heretofore maintained the Monroe doctrine in North and South America. The two policies are absolutely contradictory. In the one case we forbid conquests and forcible annexation by others; in the other case we employ 65,000 soldiers and our Navy to work out a conquest over an unwilling people 7,000 miles off, who desire independence. We set the example of the very policy we object to in European governments.

XIII. COST OF THE WAR.

What, sir, is the cost of the war in the Philippines? All the orators who favor imperialism seem to shrink from giving us this important information. Is it because they do not regard the question of fifty or a hundred millions of dollars per annum as worthy of consideration by the American taxpayers, or is it because they feel that it would be a dangerous branch of the subject for them to discuss? We have no estimates from any of them on this subject. We are called on to plunge into this new policy without considering whether it will or will not increase the public burdens. I may remark right here that the estimates of cost from the opponents of imperialism have not been challenged, so far as I know. I believe, sir, that the Army of the United States, in proportion to its numbers, is more expensive than that of any other country. The estimate of cost per man, taking officers and men together, is $1,000 per man for a year. As we have 65,000 men in the Philippines, that alone would mean $65,000,000.

But when you consider that all your men, munitions of war, food, and other supplies must be transported 7,000 miles from our coast, it is apparent that the expense of the war must be fully one hundred millions per annum, especially if you include the unusual expenses for the Navy. This does not include the prospective expense from pensions. Considering the climate and the character of the service, this charge must be very large, even if there were to be no further combats or special exposure on the part of the troops. Probably no troops have ever had to undergo greater hardship and exposure since the days of the French invasion of Russia by Napoleon. The estimates of some good judges place the cost of this war at $150,000,000 per annum. One thing is certain, the actual cost of war almost always outruns expectations or estimates. No one ever dreamed the Spanish war would cost as much as it did.

It may be urged, sir, that the cost of the war and of retaining the Philippines will be much less hereafter. A people who have held our Army at bay for over a year and are still fighting us will, in any case, require a large army of occupation. Luzon is a large island. It is 40,000 square miles, and the country presents every facility for insurrectionary operations—more, even, than Cuba. It would be necessary to keep up garrisons all over the islands and to protect their communications. You would require fortifications, not only against the natives, but against all possible antagonists. You would need a strong naval force. The expense of occupation could not be brought much below a hundred millions of dollars.

XIV. QUI BONO?

But this is not all. After you have done it all—put down all resistance, conciliated the people you are crushing, and caused them to love you—have you not given a hostage to fortune? Is not Hawaii now at the mercy of any European government with whom you may have a war? Would not the Philippines be even more exposed? Can you say that you will have no war hereafter with any strong power? You have had actual hostilities with France in the past, and strained relations with Germany not long ago, and with Italy also. With Great Britain you have had two long and bloody wars and a number of difficulties leading to the very verge of war. You have still unsettled questions with her. What is your naval power? We are greatly inferior to France and Russia, and are outranked by Great Britain eight or ten to one. We are now about equal in sea power to Germany, but if the naval programme of the German Government be carried out we will be much inferior to that Government two or three years from now. Italy is perhaps not quite equal to us, but a combination of Italy and Austria is not unreasonable. If we fought one we would have to fight both. Japan will probably be stronger than we are on sea two or three years from now.

Those are not pleasant facts, but they are undeniable. So that unless we greatly increase our naval armament our new possessions will be cut off from us in case of war. It follows that no matter how clear our cause of quarrel, we will be hampered in case of war by this new imperial policy. In this connection it is well to reflect that two-thirds of our whole Army is now in the Philippines. A considerable portion of our Navy is also there. It would take much time and expense to bring them home. Is it not obvious that while we have by this unfortunate policy multiplied the chances of war with other powers we have really lessened our war-making power and diminished our security at home against a foreign foe? Instead of protecting our grand home country on the Atlantic and the Pacific, we shall have to guard Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines, or at least so much of the latter as we now occupy. There is a very large part of the Philippine group, say one-half of the whole, where we have made no attempt whatever at occupation. There the savage polygamist roams at will—his own sweet will.

I think, sir, that if we are to pursue the policy on which we are entering, a regular army of at least one to two hundred thousand men will be required and a navy at least four or five times what we now possess. More than that, we will need a British or some other alliance to guard against any possible combination against us. It would not be enough for us to be strong. We would have to combine with one or more powers. I need not tell you, sir, that such an alliance with England or other countries would involve concessions by us and bargains and sacrifices that nobody now could foresee. I believe that the advice of Washington to avoid "entangling alliances" embodies a sound national policy and is yet dear to all patriotic Americans.

I wish to say here that if three years ago any man had predicted that the United States Government would send an army of 65,000 soldiers across the seas to conquer a people of eight or ten millions of another race, with the purpose to hold them as a subject colony, he would have been regarded either as a madman or a slanderer of the American people and their Government.

XV. FACE TO FACE WITH MILITARISM.

We are now brought face to face with militarism. Some twenty years ago a great railroad president publicly advocated an army of 40,000 men. It was after a great strike of employees. The proposition was justly scouted as a monstrous departure from our traditional policy of a small standing army. Now we are invited to adopt the colonial system of European monarchs and the system of militarism and great armies which has been the curse of France, Germany, Austria, Russia, and all the Continent. Even England is not free from it. She is now busy sending 150,000 to 200,000 soldiers many thousand miles by sea to conquer two little republics in South Africa, and is spending at the rate of three or four hundred millions of dollars per year in an unnecessary war. It is this system of "militarism" which has driven so many good men to this country which we are now called on to imitate in this favored land. Sir, I fear that it means much more than foreign conquest. It means the subversion of our free institutions, the rule of the sword, and the reduction of our workingmen to the condition of vassalage exceeding that proposed for the Philippines. It means an absolute conquest of labor by the forces of capital.

XVI. GRAND RESULTS OF LEGITIMATE "EXPANSION."

An attempt is made to cover up this policy of imperialism and militarism by the employment of the mild phrase "expansion." Sir, there is no objection from any quarter to legitimate expansion, such as the expansion of this grand Republic from 1789 up to the advent of this unhappy war. It was an expansion in territory—contiguous and unsettled territory—expansion in wealth, commerce, population, power, science, invention, in all the wonderful arts of peace, by an intelligent, free, and liberty-loving population. This expansion has been the wonder and admiration of the world. It has lifted us from the position of a feeble Republic with some three millions of people in 1783 to the rank of a first-class power, able to face any nation on the earth in a just quarrel. Yes, "a world power"—not because we have coveted foreign territory all over the world, but because there was no power in the world that dared to do us a wrong. A "world power" because our political ideas and example had permeated the thoughts of men all over the civilized world, gained for the common people a better recognition of their rights, and pointed the way to the liberation and advancement of all mankind. A nation that could do this by purely moral force was more than a world power in modern vulgar acceptation.

When was there ever such expansion as ours? We subdued the forest and the field; we conquered all obstacles between us and the Pacific; we dominated the forces of nature or harnessed them to our chariot. We did all this without the sacrifice of our free Constitution, without wrong or injustice to other nations, without making a king out of a president or invading the grand sovereign power of the American people.

All honor to this expansion, an expansion not half completed, hardly begun, and destined to go on so long as American genius, force, and industry shall live under free institutions. But we must be careful not to suffer to be substituted for our American expansion the cheat, the bastard child of European imperialism.

XVII. THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE.

The large territorial acquisitions we have made on this continent were all made fairly and honorably. Our first acquisition was the great Louisiana purchase by Thomas Jefferson—a vast domain sold to us by France and practically unoccupied at the time we acquired it. There were in Louisiana—I mean the present limits of the State—a few thousand whites who freely accepted our rule, and outside there were large areas over which numerous savage and nomadic tribes wandered, camped, and fought, without order, progress, cities, farms or civilization. The country was contiguous to our western borders. It was the natural outlet for our advancing settlements, and was capable of being molded into great and prosperous States composed of a white and homogeneous population. We introduced no dangerous or incongruous elements into our political system. The acquisition of Florida was in like fashion. Texas was a free and independent State composed mainly of white people, which sought our political embrace. It has grown to be a great Commonwealth. California and New Mexico were occupied by our forces during the Mexican war. They were very sparsely settled. They might have been claimed and held by us as a war indemnity, but we paid Mexico for this territory, and now they are settled by a vigorous and enterprising white race of our own blood. In all this there was no vulgar greed of conquest. They were contiguous countries, practically unsettled and unoccupied, and were capable of being fashioned by immigration into homogeneous American communities, as they have been.

To assert that these honorable, natural, and wise acquisitions of territory on our own continent resemble the proposed forcible annexation of the inferior races, some 9,000,000 or more, inhabiting the Philippine Islands, 7,000 miles from our western shores and densely populated, is to insult the popular intelligence. What alien, hostile, and incongruous nations and organized communities did we subjugate in order to acquire Texas, California, Florida, and Louisiana? What peoples did we conquer, overrun, and ravage in order to deprive them of their government and to substitute our own?

Let it not be forgotten that the Philippine Islands are 7,000 miles away from our extreme western coast, that their total area is only 114,000 square miles, and that they are already more densely populated than Ohio or New York by a population who do not desire our rule, but are resisting it and sacrificing property and life itself to maintain their independence. Is not this policy one of imperialism? Will anybody say it is republicanism—the republicanism of our fathers? In what does it differ from the policy of British, German, or French imperialism? How does it differ from the British policy in India or in South Africa? We subjugate alien and inferior races many millions in number; we govern them by the sword as subjects, and yet we shrink from the little word "imperialism." It is not necessary, however, to discuss terms or phrases when you once discard liberty, set aside your free Constitution, and enthrone a government of force and despotic authority.

Is it true that empire is the real and final goal and outcome of all free republics? Is our old logic false, our Constitution a mistake or out of date, and the immortal Declaration an inconvenient reminiscence—a threadbare garment which fashion and interest require us now to discard? Is our creed henceforth to be the right of the stronger power, not the divine principle of justice? The Monroe doctrine, long so hateful to European monarchies—is it to be discarded as mere rubbish? For if the idea of foreign conquests and forcible annexations is to prevail, we will certainly find it very hard to hold on to the Monroe doctrine.

XVIII. OUR TRUE GLORY.

There is another and a better way than all this folly. Our true glory, our growth, our freedom consist not in conquest, subject colonies, or militarism, but in the paths of liberty, industry, and peace. Every great power desires our friendship. Pursuing our old methods, what have we to fear from any one of them? What need of a great standing army, of war and conscription, or of a great absolute government governing colonies by the sword, repeating all over the world the cruelties and the wholesale corruptions which have so often stained the pages of history and from which it was our proud boast that we were entirely free? We have reached, I believe, the turning point in our national history. We can stand by the old Constitution and the old ways, or we can enter upon the new paths—new to us, but long familiar to the infamous despots of the Old World. The new programme of colonies and imperialism involves a deadly conflict with the very genius of free government and with all the fundamental principles of our free institutions.

The issue is so momentous, so immediate and pressing, that it can not be obscured by questions of currency and tariff, however important they may be. The issue is before the American people to-day for their decision. Heretofore they have not had the opportunity to pass upon it, but they will ere long be heard from, and I can not doubt their verdict. It will be, I believe, for liberty, the Constitution, and the Union, without any admixture of imperialism, huge standing armies, militarism, conscriptions and wars, or entangling alliances with foreign powers. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

I should like to have an opportunity to conclude my remarks to-morrow.

Mr. HULL. Can not the gentleman conclude his remarks to-night?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I would rather not. I have some matter that I desire to produce then.

Mr. HULL. Would the gentleman be willing to have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD, so that he could fix it up in that way?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. I have some very good matter which I would like to present to the House upon a proper occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the balance of his time and yield the floor?

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. I want to say that I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] will come in in the morning, and after he has concluded, if there is no one on this side who wants to speak, I want to move to close debate.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman will not make that motion. There are several other gentlemen on this side who want to be heard.

Mr. HULL. It seems to me that we have this afternoon virtually gone through the time that they desired, and I believe gentlemen would have preferred to speak under the five-minute rule and extend their remarks in the RECORD. One gentleman said his only object in jumping in was to fill up the time. Now, I submit that the Committee on Military Affairs is exceedingly pressed for time. It has an investigation on hand that is costing the Government at least $100 a day, and with a vast amount of work that it ought to do, and which in justice to Congress ought to be submitted to it, the sooner we get through with this bill the better it will be for the Government and all parties concerned.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In reply, Mr. Chairman, to what the gentleman has said, a number of gentlemen on this side of the House who desired to speak really on the bill were not prepared after 4 o'clock and did not know that an opportunity would be given to them to speak this afternoon, and for that reason there was some little difficulty for a few moments in getting a speaker; but there are gentlemen on this side who desire to be heard and ask for the time.

Mr. HULL. In the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule they could obtain a reasonable time. There will be no disposition to hold members down strictly to the rule of the House in regard to what they may say in the five-minute debate, and believing there would be a liberal construction in the committee, I am anxious to permit a full enough debate in this way.

Mr. SULZER. I trust my friend will carry out the agreement made this morning in the committee.

Mr. HULL. That agreement can not be carried out, because it can not be carried out in full.

Mr. SULZER. So far as we are concerned, we are willing to carry it out the same as it was agreed upon in committee.

Mr. HULL. So far as debate has been had, no gentleman on this side has demanded any time, except the time that I took for the purpose of trying to explain the bill, and I do not know of any gentleman on this side who wants time.

Mr. SULZER. I know of three members of the committee who each want an hour.

Mr. HULL. I want to serve notice on my friend from Louisiana, so that if any motion is made to-morrow he can not say advantage was taken of anybody.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman knows that this bill carries about $112,000,000 or $115,000,000.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And the members of the committee who desire to be heard ought to be heard upon it.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And they do desire to be heard on this bill.

Mr. HULL. Now, I will say to my friend that of all the members of the committee that I have talked to, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] told me when leaving, as he had to leave to-day, that if he could have twenty or twenty-five minutes under the five-minute rule it would amply suffice for him; and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] said he was not ready to speak to-day, and if he had an hour that would amply suffice him; and these are the only gentlemen that have made any requests to me on the matter.

Mr. SULZER. I want my hour; I want the gentleman from Iowa to understand that.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. To avoid any further controversy, Mr. Chairman, I can continue my remarks to-night; but I am not so well prepared, and I am afraid they will not be so interesting as they might be if I postponed them until to-morrow.

Mr. HULL. I am willing to remain a half or three-quarters of an hour in order that the gentleman from Louisiana may finish his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. HULL. I want the gentleman from Louisiana to understand that I would not cut him off to-morrow if the general debate is to last indefinitely. That is the only question. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York does not demand the floor and the gentleman from Iowa moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 8582, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REPRINT OF ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I understand that it is impossible for members of the House to get copies of the bill, the edition having been exhausted. I ask unanimous consent that a reprint of the bill be ordered, so that it may be here to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for a reprint of House bill 8582, being the Army appropriation bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the Army bill be concluded at half past 2 on Wednesday next.

Mr. HULL. I object to that, Mr. Speaker; we do not need so much debate.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4854. An act granting a pension to James L. Whidden;

H. R. 6031. An act granting an increase of pension to James W. Carmody;

H. R. 3809. An act granting an increase of pension to Elisha B. Seaman;

H. R. 206. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaac D. Smith;

H. R. 1944. An act granting an increase of pension to Eli C. Walton;

H. R. 5126. An act granting an increase of pension to James J. McMains;

H. R. 541. An act granting a pension to Ellen Norwood;

H. R. 2382. An act granting an increase of pension to Eli Overhultz;

H. R. 7114. An act granting an increase of pension to John S. Parker;

H. R. 7896. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel Lybarger;

H. R. 5180. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Adams;

H. R. 4298. An act granting an increase of pension to John M. McCord;

H. R. 539. An act granting a pension to Louisa S. Wilson;
H. R. 4961. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret Gangloff;
H. R. 6911. An act granting an increase of pension to James R. Sawtell;
H. R. 5949. An act granting a pension to Frederick Weber;
H. R. 1989. An act granting a pension to Marie Wiersang;
H. R. 4441. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel C. Krickbaum;
H. R. 2802. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Brisbois;
H. R. 5346. An act granting an increase of pension to George White;
H. R. 3966. An act granting an increase of pension to David Talmon;
H. R. 5544. An act granting a pension to Lona A. Morgan;
H. R. 6092. An act granting a pension to Louisa Stearns;
H. R. 7368. An act granting an increase of pension to Sherman D. Plues;
H. R. 3470. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Weeden; and
H. R. 2389. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward Boyle.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for an additional clerk in the office of the Commissioner of Education—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for royalty for telescopic sights furnished the War Department—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the draft of a bill relating to cession of the Pipestone Reservation, in Minnesota—to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BROSIUS from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1118) for the better control of and to promote the safety of national banks, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 770); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9879) to detach certain counties from the United States judicial district of northern California and to annex such counties to the United States judicial district of southern California, to divide said southern district of California into two divisions, and to provide for the holding of terms of court at the city of Fresno and city of Los Angeles, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 771); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred House bill 9492, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 9995) levying certain taxes for the education of children residing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 772); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6959) to amend an act approved January 5, 1893, entitled "An act granting increase of pension to soldiers of the Mexican war in certain cases," so as to extend the provisions of said act to all Mexican soldiers pensionable under law, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 773); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7418) granting an increase of pension to George Garrett, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 774); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CRAWFORD, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2734) granting an increase of pension to Dolly L. Harroll, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 775); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2621) granting a pension to Ida Wiederhold, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 776); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDRICH: A bill (H. R. 9990) to establish a diplomatic, consular, and civil-service college of the United States at or near Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

CASSIUS M. BARNES, GOVERNOR OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate all papers on file in the Department of the Interior, including all charges, affidavits, letters, protests, and exhibits against Cassius M. Barnes, governor of Oklahoma Territory, filed since March 4, 1897, prior and subsequent to his appointment as such governor, together with the opinion of the Assistant Attorney-General and recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, if any, concerning such charges.

STENOGRAPHER FOR COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report hearings upon matters that may be pending before said committee, the expense to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the necessary expenses of the inquiries already made by said committee be paid from said fund.

READJUSTED SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS IN MAINE.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, directed to report upon a schedule to the Senate the readjusted salaries of all postmasters who served in the State of Maine between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, whose names as claimants appear in the Court of Claims in the case entitled David Vinal and others vs. The United States, No. 18236, each such stated account to conform in all respects to the order of the Postmaster-General published by circular under date of June 9, 1883, and to the requirement of the act of March 3, 1883, as said requirement was published by the Postmaster-General in the newspapers of the country under date of February 17, 1884, and with such report transmit to the Senate a full copy of the text of the construction by the Postmaster-General of the act of March 3, 1883, embodied in the said circular and publication in the newspapers and in circular form No. 1223, the text of each of which under date of November 8, 1897, was transmitted by the Postmaster-General to the Attorney-General for use in the case of Jane Yarrington and others vs. The United States, No. 16345.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. STEWART. I submit an order for which I ask immediate consideration. I will state that I have had an estimate of the cost of printing the report referred to, and am informed that it can be done for $500.

The order was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 4,000 copies of Senate Report No. 711, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, on the public schools of the District of Columbia.

LEVI C. FAUGHT.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill returned from the House granting a pension to Levi C. Faught may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following bill, recalled from the House of Representatives.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 477) granting a pension to Levi C. Faught.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill was read a third time and passed be now acted upon.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a bill for a blind ex-soldier. It has passed in a form that probably would result in the Bureau of Pensions not granting the pension. I move to amend it by adding to the bill the words: "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Guards," in line 7, insert "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3419) making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota. [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. The amendment will be again read.

Mr. CARTER. At the time the motion was made to proceed to the consideration of executive business yesterday afternoon the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] was addressing the Senate on this amendment. I observe that he is not at the present moment in the Chamber, and I therefore ask that the amendment be temporarily laid aside, to the end that he may be present when it is further considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana, that the motion to amend be temporarily laid aside? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

Mr. CARTER. I present an amendment to be inserted as indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, at the end of section 26, insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That, subject only to such general limitations as may be necessary to exempt navigation from artificial obstructions, all land and shoal water below mean high tide on the shores, bays, and inlets of Bering Sea, within the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be subject to exploration for gold and other precious metals by citizens of the United States, or persons who have legally declared their intention to become such, under such reasonable rules and regulations as the miners in organized mining districts may have heretofore made, or may hereafter make, governing the temporary possession thereof for exploration and mining purposes, until otherwise provided by law; and all permits heretofore granted authorizing any person or persons, corporation or company, to excavate or mine under any of said waters are hereby revoked and declared null and void.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the amendment just read relates to a subject on which some comment was made a few days ago in the Senate Chamber in connection with a resolution presented by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], calling upon the Secretary of War to advise the Senate what, if any, permits or privileges had been granted to any person or corporation to mine upon the coast of Alaska. In reply to that resolution the Secretary of War, by a communication dated the 23d instant, explains the conditions under which permits were issued, the extent or scope of such permits, and the purpose he had in view in issuing them.

The conditions existing at Cape Nome and along the coast of Bering Sea are unique. They were not in contemplation at the time certain laws were enacted for the regulation of persons or companies desiring to excavate under the shoal waters of the sea. For the purpose of preventing encroachments upon the navigable waters, the erection of structures tending to obstruct navigation, or excavations intended to injuriously affect navigable waters, Congress, it seems, from the report of the Secretary of War, passed this law on the 3d of March, 1899, to wit:

It shall not be lawful to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War prior to beginning the same.

The Secretary then proceeds to show the penalty provided by law for any violation of the section which I have just quoted. The penalty, in short, is that on conviction thereof—that is, of any of the acts enumerated in the statute—the person shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such punishments, in the discretion of the court.

The Secretary of War, believing that this act would injuriously affect and unnecessarily restrain citizens of the United States desiring to explore the shoal waters of Bering Sea for minerals, determined deliberately, as a course of policy, to issue permits to any citizens of the United States upon recommendation of the Chief of Engineers to explore this gold-bearing coast within the 3-mile limit. That his purpose was a laudable one and in harmony with the general sentiment existing in Congress there can be no question. He merely exempts by the permit a citizen who may desire to mine on that coast from the penalties which would be inflicted under the law if the permit were not granted previous to the beginning of the work.

In a personal interview I inquired of the Secretary of War the reason why a general order had not been promulgated authorizing all persons to prosecute investigations and explorations on that coast. In reply he cited the law, which provides that the work must be recommended by the Chief of Engineers, and in consequence of this recommendation being a prerequisite, each application must pass through the office of the Chief of Engineers and be separately passed upon by him. Under the law as it now stands the Secretary of War, in the exercise of the discretion given by the law, will exempt all citizens who may apply to him in the regular manner prescribed by the statute from the penalties inflicted on those who do not secure permits.

It is obvious that upon arriving in Bering Sea hundreds of persons may desire to avail themselves of the privileges of mining along the coast, but will be deprived of so doing unless at the hazard of incurring the severe penalties prescribed by the statute until they shall have had time to send an application to the Chief of Engineers, to be by him passed on to the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I did not hear the beginning of his remarks. What remedy does the Senator propose for the evil that is complained of?

Mr. CARTER. The remedy proposed is embodied in an amendment which I have presented, and which is now under consideration.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator be kind enough to have it read? I did not hear it.

Mr. CARTER. I would be glad if the Secretary would again report the amendment for the information of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read Mr. CARTER'S amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to suggest to the Senator that this amendment ought to include a provision nullifying any permits hereafter granted by the Secretary of War.

Mr. CARTER. No permit can hereafter be granted under the terms of the amendment in those waters, because by the express terms of the amendment——

Mr. ALLEN. Under what provision of law does the Secretary profess to have this power?

Mr. CARTER. The provision I have heretofore cited. I will cite it again for the Senator's benefit. In the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, this provision occurs:

It shall not be lawful to excavate or fill or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States unless the work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War prior to beginning the same.

On the next page of the report the Senator will find that a drastic penalty is provided for any violation of this law by the individual.

Mr. ALLEN. But what I was calling for is the law that gives the Secretary of War authority to grant mining permits between high and low tide.

Mr. CARTER. No permit has ever been granted by the Secretary of War for mining purposes. It so happens—it is a matter of common knowledge, indeed—that the purpose of dredging in those waters would be for gold, but the same permit is granted there that would be granted along the New Jersey coast to a farmer, or builder, or a person having use for sand, to excavate and carry away loads of sand from along that coast.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Are not all the mining lands of the United States, upland and tide lands, withdrawn from permits of this kind by other statutes?

Mr. CARTER. Not at all. The jurisdiction of the Secretary of War is extended over the navigable waters of the United States for the purpose manifestly of protecting navigation.

Mr. ALLEN. For the purposes of navigation and commerce.

Mr. CARTER. And in connection with navigation the right is given to protect the bottom of the sea, the lakes, the inlets, and shoal waters from excavation or intrusion or invasion by any person except by a permit from the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, suppose there is no necessity for improvement at this harbor, but a man goes to the Secretary of War and says, "There is gold underlying the waters there; there is no necessity for improvement for navigation purposes, but I should like to have a permit to go there and deepen the harbor and receive my compensation in the gold or precious minerals that I can find in the sand," does not the Senator realize that a permit granted under those circumstances is a mere subterfuge and does not come within the purview of this statute?

Mr. CARTER. I think that the permit comes within the purview of this statute precisely as a permit granted to a farmer on the New Jersey coast to build a pier out into the sea a hundred feet for his own accommodation would come within the authority of the Secretary of War under this section of the statute.

Mr. COCKRELL. But it gives no monopoly of that right.

Mr. CARTER. No monopoly was granted here. None was pretended to be granted.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, the power granted by this statute is a power to improve the harbor for commercial purposes.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator in that respect is in error. The authority granted here is for the purpose of preventing injury to the navigable waters of the United States and not for the improvement of them.

Mr. ALLEN. Injury in what respect?

Mr. CARTER. By placing obstructions, making injurious excavations, or in any one of the many ways in which navigation might be injuriously affected.

Mr. ALLEN. But, if the Senator will bear with me, it is not claimed that in any one of these instances there was any necessity for improvement or a necessity for any repairs to that harbor at that time.

Mr. CARTER. None whatever; nor was it expected that any repairs would ever be made along that coast.

Mr. ALLEN. Now, then, if there was no necessity for improvement, why does the Secretary of War, under this slimsy power or slimsy statute, which does not cover his case at all, grant permits the primary and sole purpose of which is to go into those waters and disturb commerce by mining?

Mr. CARTER. The Secretary of War did not give a mining permit, but gave such a formal permit as would relieve the individual obtaining it from the penalty of the statute that was manifestly not intended by Congress to apply under such conditions.

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose he knew that the permit was valuable only in consequence of the minerals, and that that was the chief purpose in taking out the permit. Is not that knowledge to be construed as a part of the permit, and is it not to be construed into a permit to mine?

Mr. COCKRELL. And excluding everybody else.

Mr. ALLEN. And excluding other persons from doing so?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, there was no exclusion and no intention to exclude.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did it not operate in that way?

Mr. CARTER. The Secretary of War merely relieved the individual who received the permit from the penalties of a statute which would inevitably and by operation of law apply to the individual if not protected by the permit.

Mr. ALLEN. Did not the Secretary of War thereby say, "You may go on and mine those sands ad libitum?"

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator from Montana to answer the Senator from Nebraska, as the Senator from Montana and I have both looked more or less into this question?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In the waters of Cape Nome, below the low-water mark, where developments have shown that the soil is rich and the sands are gold bearing, they have to be reached by boats and dredges, for, as a matter of fact, there is no navigation there; there is no channel to help or to injure. Those sands are far away from the possibilities of development by helping the channel by excavation or injuring navigation by their presence; but when prospectors for gold reached those waters they found the presence of a statute upon our books which never was intended to apply to such a case as this, for in the whole history of the world there never was a time when the rich alluvial sands under the ocean bore gold until here.

But this statute existed. It was a form of prohibition along our coast forbidding anybody to excavate or dredge except under the authority of the Secretary of War. It was a fiction so far as its applicability to these soils went; but it was an existing statute forbidding work. Whereupon the Secretary of War issued these permits, Congress not having acted. He issued the permits indifferently to every responsible person who applied for them, to do away with the formality of the statute. There seems to have been no favoritism, no desire on anybody's part to exclude anybody, but to open the land so far as could be in this anomalous condition, and to do away with the prohibition of the statute by giving permits alike to every responsible person who asked for them.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish the Senator would read that statute.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have it not with me, but the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has it.

Mr. CARTER. The statute refers to the prohibition and likewise to the penalty, and will be found in Senate Document No. 239, the response of the Secretary of War to the resolution of the Senate of March 21, 1900.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Montana, in the kindness of his heart, indulge me a moment, that I may reply briefly to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly, and with great pleasure.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, there is nothing in this statute, not a word, that would give the Secretary of War the power to issue mining permits. It simply provides that—

> It shall not be lawful to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War prior to beginning the same.

It is not claimed that the Chief of Engineers recommended this.

Mr. CARTER. It is claimed that the Chief of Engineers recommended it in every case. That is the fact.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, without consuming too much of the time of the Senator from Montana, who has been kind enough to give way to me, let me drop this observation: The purpose of this statute was to control the harbors, rivers, havens, bays, etc., within the limits of the United States, for the purposes of navigation. They were put under the charge of the War Department that they might be systematically improved where improvement was necessary, and that individuals and corporations might not run indiscriminately into the navigable waters of the United States, and by excavations disturb the channels and waters, thereby impeding navigation.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], I think, correctly states the fact that this condition is anomalous. There has been nothing in the history of the world like it. But, Mr. President, when these parties applied for permission to disturb the waters and the sands beneath them at Cape Nome, it was known that those sands were valuable for mining purposes solely. No person had recommended the dredging at that cape; there was no purpose on the part of Congress to make appropriation to dredge or to widen it, or in any respect to change it from its natural condition; but it was known that the wash of the rivers and creeks from the mainland had put into the sands of Cape Nome large deposits of valuable gold; and when these persons applied to the War Department to secure these permits, that knowledge, at least presumptively, was in the possession of the Secretary of War; and when he granted the permits, he granted them with the full knowledge that the purpose of the licensees was to go into the waters there and dig into those sands for minerals.

Now, do not both the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Montana believe that it would have been more in keeping with the dignity of a great Cabinet officer to have said, "This harbor does not need improvement at this time; there is no purpose of improving it; let this matter rest until Congress convenes, and let these sands be treated as a part of the mineral reserve of the United States," and withheld these permits and not given these special privileges?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator from Nebraska that we have by law again and again declared that the mineral lands of the United States are open to entry, prospecting, and occupation by citizens of the United States or those who have declared their intention to become such; and does not the Senator from Nebraska know that the lust for gold stops at nothing? Wherever there are valuable metals to be found—the Arctic region is not too far north, nor the Torrid region too hot for men to search for them—and to say to such men, to these hardy prospectors, "Until Congress acts you shall not get at these shifting sands under the water" would have been, first, to deny to the people their rights, and second, would have been a useless effort to prevent those hardy prospectors from doing what they would be sure to attempt. Does not the Senator think that what the Secretary of War did was the wisest possible thing—to issue permits, and not leave those people in the technical position of violating the law?

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President, the Secretary of War simply perverted a statute which was intended to protect the harbors and navigable waters of the United States and territory under the jurisdiction of the United States Government from disturbance by interlopers. He simply perverted that statute, which has no relation whatever to mining, into granting mining permits to a few individuals to go into the harbor and mine without restraint. However much it may be glossed over, that is what it is.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to know whether any of these permits covered any particular area of surface or are they general?

Mr. CARTER. The permits protect the persons within certain specified limits. The Secretary of War very wisely refrained from granting to any person an unlimited right as to the extent of country to disturb the waters of Bering Sea.

Mr. DAVIS. Was it to equally protect every person having a permit within certain limits?

Mr. CARTER. Unquestionably.

Mr. DAVIS. And not giving any exclusive privileges?

Mr. CARTER. Not giving any privileges or exclusive rights. It was not a permit to mine, and by no kind of contortion can it be made to appear so. It was an exemption from the penalties of the statute.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose some other person had gone on to the 2-mile limit granted to this particular individual. What would have happened to him?

Mr. CARTER. If he had a permit he would be exempt from prosecution—simply that, and nothing more.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose one man was granted a 2-mile permit, and possibly some interloper, having the lust for gold to which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] has referred, and which I presume exists, had gone on to that 2-mile limit. What would have happened to him?

Mr. CARTER. Why, Mr. President, 100 permits might have been granted to as many persons for excavating within the same square mile.

Mr. ALLEN. I know; but here are 2 miles granted to one individual.

Mr. CARTER. The individual in that permit named can not be prosecuted by the authorities of the United States for excavating sand within that limit; and if another person without a permit should go on it, he would become liable to the penalties provided by law.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose some other person having a permit had gone on the sands of a person holding a permit; what would have been his status?

Mr. CARTER. His status would have been that of any other person who disregarded the laws of the United States. Having the possibility of getting a permit, and having neglected so to do, he would incur the penalty, of course.

Mr. ALLEN. Was not the permit really the granting of an exclusive easement in the licensee?

Mr. CARTER. It was not, and can not be so considered. The licenses granted would have been granted to any citizen of the United States, or any person having declared his intention to become such, upon application to the Secretary of War in the manner prescribed by the law of the country.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator does not apprehend my question. A receives a permit extending over 2 miles——

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. And B, without a permit, trespasses upon the land embraced within A's permit. The Senator says B would be a trespasser and amenable to the law.

Mr. CARTER. Not as against A. He would be a violator of the laws of the United States, and could not protect himself, if prosecuted, by showing a permit.

Mr. ALLEN. Does not the Senator think it would have been wiser for the Secretary of War to have declared that all these lands, if they were to be opened by an order of his, should be open to the public indiscriminately?

Mr. CARTER. But if the Senator will read the statute to which I have repeatedly referred, he will find that the permit can only be granted on application presented through the Chief of Engineers and recommended by him. Permits can not be made by invisible people; the action of the Secretary of War can not have been based upon a dream.

Mr. ALLEN. No; but could not the Chief of Engineers have recommended the opening of the whole tide lands or the whole bottom of the cape?

Mr. CARTER. Not upon his own motion.

Mr. ALLEN. I know; but in the same way he did recommend it, could he not have recommended it to be opened up to all persons?

Mr. CARTER. I think the Secretary of War fairly construed the law, and I think the Senator will perceive that his contention is not well founded in that behalf.

Mr. ALLEN. I claim this law has no application whatever to the case.

Mr. CARTER. That is what the Secretary of War thought, and he thought therefore the penalties of the law ought not to be applied to persons going upon that coast.

Mr. ALLEN. Why did not the Secretary of War open the whole thing up to the people to go there indiscriminately, as miners go into any other mining camp?

Mr. CARTER. The Secretary of War undoubtedly felt that Congress, having given him warrant for action, expected him to act in all proper cases. It is not the province of the Secretary of War or of any other Cabinet minister or officer of the Government to do more than execute the law as passed by Congress and approved by the President.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to call attention to the language of the law in question. It does not seem to me that there was any occasion for any permit to be asked from the Secretary of War or from anybody else to excavate those sands. The law quoted by the Secretary of War himself is as follows:

> It shall not be lawful to excavate or fill or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War prior to beginning the same.

I do not believe by any legitimate construction that can be held to apply to every particle of shore line of the United States away from a harbor or the mouth of a river or a breakwater or a canal. One of these permits here given states that it is 12 miles away from the mouth of Snake River. It seems to me the operation of the permit is simply this: Where there is no law to forbid persons going and excavating these sands, the Secretary of War has been induced to issue an order which, in effect, says that under this law no one, except by permission, may go and excavate these sands. He issued an order to Mr. George Max Esterly, of Seattle, Wash., in these words:

> And whereas Mr. George Max Esterly, of Seattle, Wash., has applied to the Secretary of War for permission to excavate or fill within the following-described area in Bering Sea, near the mouth of Snake River, Alaska, commencing at a point 200 feet east of the junction of mean low-tide water on Bering Sea and the mean low water at the mouth and on the east bank of Snake River, which latter empties into Bering Sea about 12 miles a little north of west of Cape Nome, in Alaska; then extending along on the said mean low-tide line in a general westerly direction for a distance of 2 miles, and extending out 500 feet from the mean low-tide line, which work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers:
> Now, therefore, this is to certify that the Secretary of War hereby gives permission to said George Max Esterly and assigns to excavate or fill within the area described above in Bering Sea, near the mouth of Snake River, Alaska, upon the following condition:
> That the work herein permitted to be done shall not interfere with navigation or the rights of riparian owners, and shall be subject to the supervision and approval of the commanding general, Department of Alaska.

This permit begins 200 feet away from low water, at the mouth of Snake River, and runs 2 miles along the coast, where there is no river, no harbor, no canal, nothing on the face of the earth but open coast line. The Secretary of War has been induced to issue this order; and this Mr. Esterly will go in and say, "The Secretary of War says it is not lawful for any man to come here and excavate unless he does it by my permission. I am the only one who has permission; and you people who propose to come here and excavate and mine must, under the law, get out." The order of the Secretary of War has been obtained to put a meaning on the law that it has not, that it can not have, and that no court of justice anywhere in the world will give it.

It seems to me to be an absolutely indefensible outrage. I can not imagine any excuse for it. There is certainly nothing in the law to justify it, because it does not apply to an open coast line such as this, and can not be made to apply to it.

The next permit says:

> And whereas F. S. Wood, of Alliance, Ohio, has applied to the Secretary of War for permission to excavate and fill within the following-described area in Bering Sea, near the mouth of Snake River, Alaska, commencing at mean low tide 3 miles east of the mouth of Snake River, which latter empties into Bering Sea about 12 miles a little north of west of Cape Nome, in Alaska; and from said point extending 1 mile east along shore at mean low tide and extending out into Bering Sea 500 feet, thus covering a space of 1 mile by 500 feet, which work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers, subject to the condition hereinafter set forth:
> Now, therefore, this is to certify that the Secretary of War hereby gives unto said F. S. Wood and assigns permission to excavate and fill within the area described above, it being understood that this instrument is simply a permission to excavate and fill under said act, and is not exclusive within said area—

That language is not in the first permit. The first permit has no such words; and we all understand that a man thousands of miles away from the seat of government, hundreds of miles away from any court of justice, will claim that the order of the Secretary of War, putting those words in one permit and not putting them in the other, would mean that the other man had the right to claim that his privilege was exclusive, and to use it for himself alone, to the exclusion of everybody else. In addition, this second permit, this exemption from penalty by prosecution, makes it assignable, allows the holder to transfer his indemnity, which he derives from the Secretary of War, to anybody else who chooses to take it. It goes to F. S. Wood and his assigns, anybody to whom he proposes or chooses to transfer his immunity from prosecution.

It can go from him by assignment. That is a valuable right. What would be the use of having it assignable if any other man had the same right and there was nothing exclusive in it, excepting it be claimed that this man having gone to the Secretary of War and got this right, the other man could not come in? There would be nobody there to protect such people, no court there to vindicate their rights, but only such laws as the miners may choose to enact. It is a simple means of driving honest miners out of an opportunity to labor and to confer the prosecution of this whole business on a handful, or at least a few, people who are considered responsible.

I did not finish reading that paragraph. It continues:

and that it may be withdrawn as to future work at the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Why has the Secretary of War the right to withdraw this sort of a permit and forbid people the right of excavating sands along the shore line of the country? The law he quotes only authorizes him to interfere where there is a likelihood of injury being done to some navigable water, to a harbor, to a breakwater, to a canal, to a river. It is not intended, never was intended, and can not by any violence of construction be held to apply to the simple shore line of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the statement of the Secretary of War very clearly sets forth the reasons why the permits were granted, and, with the permission of the Senate, I will insert in my remarks the portion of the statement which is explanatory.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 23, 1900.

To the Senate of the United States:

I have the honor to reply to the following resolution of the Senate, dated March 21, 1900.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate whether any concessions or grants to excavate the gold-bearing bed of the sea at or in the vicinity of Cape Nome, in Alaska, or in other Alaskan waters, has been made to any individual or individuals, or to any corporation or association of individuals, by the Secretary of War, or by any other official of the War Department, and, if so, to inform the Senate upon what theory of power or authority, if any, such concessions or grants were made."

No concessions or grants to excavate the gold-bearing bed of the sea at or in the vicinity of Cape Nome, in Alaska, or in other Alaskan waters, have been made by the Secretary of War or any other official of the War Department. Numerous applications have been received by the War Department for permits to excavate in the bed of the ocean in the vicinity of Cape Nome, in Alaska, in the exercise of the authority conferred upon the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War by section 10 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, which provides:

"* * * It shall not be lawful to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War prior to beginning the same."

Section 12 of the same statute makes it a criminal offense to excavate without the required authority, however lawful the work may otherwise be, and provides that the offender "on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such punishments, in the discretion of the court." As this statute was designed solely for the protection of navigation, it has been the practice of the War Department to grant permits to persons desiring to excavate for any purpose when the work is not such as to injuriously affect navigation and is otherwise lawful. Permits thus granted are not exclusive; they do not preclude any number of similar permits applicable to the same territory; they are not grants or concessions, and they confer no rights whatever except immunity from prosecution under the statute above quoted secured in accordance with the terms of the statute and by reason of a compliance with the provisions thereof.

As there seems to be no legal reason why all citizens of the United States should not have the same opportunity to prospect for gold and acquire mining rights under the mining laws upon land under water as they have upon lands not under water, the Department determined, as a general policy in the exercise of the discretion vested in the Chief of Engineers and Secretary of War by this statute, to relieve all citizens applying from the obstacle interposed by this statute so long as their proposed operations do not in fact interfere with navigation. All applications made under this statute have accordingly, so far as it has been possible to dispose of them, received favorable action. No application of this description has been denied. Upon two, permits have been granted. Upon a third, papers have been prepared and were awaiting the Secretary of War's signature at the time of the passage of your resolution. Three others were approved by the Chief of Engineers and were in the hands of the Judge-Advocate-General for the preparation of the necessary papers. Eleven others are still in the office of the Chief of Engineers in process of examination upon the question whether they interfere with navigation. Four more just received are in the office of the Secretary of War, and will to-day be sent to the Chief of Engineers.

Unless otherwise directed by Congress, the Secretary of War will deem it his duty, in the exercise of the discretion vested in him by law, to grant permits in all of these cases and upon all other similar applications by citizens of the United States, provided that the work proposed does not injuriously affect navigation.

I annex hereto a copy of the form of permit prepared by the Judge-Advocate-General and used by the first two cases, and also an amended form which has been prepared by the Judge-Advocate-General for the Secretary of War's signature in the three cases mentioned, and which is being followed in the preparation of the papers in the other cases.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

It is true this permit was made to the person named and to his assigns. That was a very proper thing to do.

Mr. COCKRELL. One question. Does the Chief of Engineers, then, pass upon the right of that assignee or does the Secretary of War thus delegate this right of the Chief of Engineers and himself to this one man, so that he can pick out anybody he chooses?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I have no doubt the Secretary of War intended the most liberal issue and the most liberal and unrestrained use of the privileges of mining within the waters under his jurisdiction without any possibility of prosecution by the Federal authorities.

It has been the settled policy of this Government since gold was discovered in the country on the public domain to encourage the exploration, location, and development of mines. In the Cape Nome country the miners, in prospecting, came down to the waters of the sea, and there found that the rich gravel extended far beyond and under the water; but, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] has stated, at that point they were confronted by a penal statute of the United States, which said "thus far, but no farther." They found in the laws of the country what they believed constituted an authority in an executive officer to exempt them from the penalties to be inflicted if they invaded this sacred soil under the sea. They applied to the Secretary of War. Whereupon, recognizing the settled policy of the country to encourage rather than to retard the development of its mineral resources, and acting upon the inspiration drawn from that settled policy, the Secretary of War concluded that this penal statute was not intended to restrain the legitimate development of the mining industry. Actuated by that view, he issued these permits.

Now comes the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], and in glowing terms he informs us that the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War is complete over some of the navigable waters of Bering Sea, but not complete over other navigable waters of Bering Sea; or, in other words, the theory of the Senator from Arkansas would compel us to take a sounding line and determine by depth of water, if you please, where the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War ended and where nobody's jurisdiction applied. Are you to stop the Secretary of War where the water is 10 feet deep or 20 feet deep or 30 feet deep? Is his jurisdiction to be limited to 1 fathom or 10 fathoms? If the theory of construction and limitation upon his authority contended for by the Senator from Arkansas be true, then the exact line of his jurisdiction can never be determined until you have actually determined, first, the depth of the water which shall be the test, and then the depth of the water at the place where the party proposes to mine.

No, Mr. President, that is not a correct conception of the law nor a correct construction of it. The United States Government intended that some officer should have jurisdiction over navigable waters. In the wisdom of Congress that jurisdiction was placed in the Secretary of War; and it extends over all bodies of water within the 3-mile limit of the seashore and within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. President, it would seem that the exemption of an American citizen from a penalty, simply that, because nothing else was done, constituted a heinous offense, an outrage of the most gigantic proportions, according to the version of the Senator from Arkansas. These permits, according to the declared purpose of the Secretary of War, have been issued without limitation as to persons, to citizens of the United States or persons who have declared their intention to become such; and, further still, the Secretary of War says, in a clear, straightforward, manly, and unmistakable way, relying for authority upon the law, believing that under his oath of office it is his duty to execute it according to the light given him, he will continue to issue these permits until Congress shall otherwise direct.

Now, in the amendment here proposed we think we otherwise direct. We relieve the citizen upon that extensive coast of Bering Sea from the necessity of coming forward in each and every case and making an application through the Chief of Engineers; we allow every citizen and every person who has declared his intention to become a citizen to mine, explore, and excavate below mean high tide on the shores of Bering Sea within our jurisdiction, subject only to such reasonable limitations as may be necessary to prevent the actual obstruction of commerce, and subject to such reasonable rules and regulations as the miners themselves may prescribe. That is the sum and substance of the amendment. Its adoption is in harmony with the purpose of the Secretary of War, and will obviate the necessity for the issuance of innumerable permits, because it will give him general authority.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana always sheds light on any question he discusses; and I find that I see very much more clearly, and I think I understand much more fully the purpose and the origin of this permit system than I did before the Senator submitted his last remarks. He says, as I understand him, that these people in Alaska found this law, which would prevent their making these excavations, and they came down here and asked permission of the Secretary of War to be allowed to excavate. I had supposed up to this time that this thing was simply a blunder of somebody in the War Department. I think now it is perfectly clear that it was a deliberate scheme on the part of a few people who wanted to monopolize the whole of those rich gold-bearing sands, that they found this section of the statute, and choose to put a construction upon it which no court will put upon it, and which I do not believe the Senator from Montana himself will say that any Senator would put upon it, to wit, that it should cover and protect from excavation the sands along all the coasts of the country.

I wish to read that section of the statute again, and to call the special attention of Senators to it. It is as follows:

It shall not be lawful to excavate or fill, or in any other manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, etc.

Will any man say that this piece of open coast line is either a port or a roadstead?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Why not a roadstead?

Mr. LODGE. Why not a roadstead?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Because, being between the low-water mark and 500 feet below, it is utterly impossible for it to be a roadstead. You could not make a roadstead of it or conceive it to be a roadstead. A roadstead goes farther out to sea. A roadstead never comes within 500 feet of the shore line, because it is very shallow and it is utterly impossible to have a boat on it. I do not believe it is possible for that sort of construction to be put on that at all, but I do believe that this section of the statute was picked out as a pretext for the purpose of enabling these people, who wanted to monopolize all of this gold-bearing sand, to do so. They came down and got their permits from the Secretary, and one of which went to the extent of 2 miles away from the river, not touching the channel of the river, not going anywhere where this law would apply, and running 2 miles up the coast line. Then he will claim that every other man who chooses to shovel a shovelful of sand within those 2 miles is a trespasser, because he has not the permission of the Secretary of War. He therefore makes it his own and holds it.

After this had gone on some time it seems the Secretary of War put into another permit, application for which came along afterwards, that it was not exclusive; that he himself had the right to allow other people to go there, but that they could not go there unless they had the right from him. It seems to me to be the most unfair proposition I ever heard of to undertake to make this law, which was never intended to apply to such a situation as this, but was intended to protect the navigable waters of the United States, apply to a condition of this kind.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, with some of the observations of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] I personally am in agreement. It is a fact, however, that for months and months citizens of the Cape Nome district have been actively urging upon Congress and upon those of us who come from mining States some legislation—the devising of some method whereby this soil and the deposits under the low-water mark could be worked. I agree, and so I have no doubt the Secretary of War would agree, that any attempt by the summoning of this statute to his assistance to give to anybody an exclusive mining right would be in violation of law and unjustifiable.

Perhaps he might have met it. The obvious way to meet the situation would have been to issue a general proclamation declaring that outside of certain streams, or outside of certain portions of the harbor or the roadstead, the statute should not be deemed and held to apply; but there was an excellent reason for not doing this. That reason was that in the crowd and press of people in that district, where the law is imperfectly administered, where they are not yet enjoying a civil government, it might have led to friction and to trouble and to all sorts of contests and injury. There is land enough up there that is rich, I am told, and so I suppose the Secretary of War, to avoid the clashing of interests, sought not to grant exclusive rights, but sought to give everybody the right, and so to cover the ground that there should be as little conflict as possible. That is all. He was working under an imperfect statute concerning a case to which the statute did not apply. But all that the Senator from Arkansas has said is an argument in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana. I think all will agree to that.

But, Mr. President, I am compelled to suggest an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana provides that the miners of the mining district may make such rules and regulations as they see fit for governing the working of these deposits. As has been said before, the policy of the law, the open declaration of our statutes, is that the mineral lands of the United States are open to exploration and occupation and possession by all of its citizens or those who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States. This is an anomalous case. All of our mining statutes apply to lodes and to placer claims.

In lode mining the length of the claim is limited to 1,500 feet and its width to 600, but the law gives permission to the States and Territories and the rules of miners in the district to make the parallelogram smaller. The law also limits placer grounds to 20 acres in the possession of one person, or says an association of people may take a hundred and sixty acres, the policy of the law being to limit the mining claim to a small but sufficient area to secure its active development. The policy of this Government is, of course, to get out the precious metals from the earth, and prospecting is encouraged by limiting the area so as not to make it too small, but enough to protect the miner in its use. The law provides that these rules and customs of miners shall prevail subject to the general law which limits the maximum of the areas.

Now, the amendment of the Senator from Montana says that the rules as to the development of this area shall be in accordance with the rules and customs of miners in the district. If it should be so that but comparatively few people are there now to those who shall come hereafter, and if it should be that the policy of those now upon the ground should be to enlarge greatly the area which might be taken, the policy of our law in that respect might be overridden; and therefore I hope the Senator from Montana will permit an amendment providing that they shall secure the approval of the Secretary of War of the rules and customs of the miners in the district, and which, although, as I have said, the situation is entirely anomalous, shall perhaps as well provide that the rules and regulations for mining shall be, so far as is feasible, in accordance with existing law.

I do not suppose out in the open sea you could limit a man to 20 acres, but you could perhaps limit an association to a hundred and sixty acres. I do not know how they could anchor their claims. The boundaries would be difficult and fluctuating, and yet there ought to be an ability to declare some law that would be, so far as feasible, in accordance with existing statutes, and I do not think the miners of the district ought to arbitrarily make a final rule as to the area, the work required, and the other regulations which shall govern mining, but it should be done by the experts of the Interior Department, until after further investigation and development Congress may pass the necessary legislation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Colorado yield for a question?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. What would be the effect of that amendment on the regulations that the miners there have already prescribed and laid down?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The regulations as to mining in any territory where the laws of the United States prevail could not now exceed the existing area, I should think; but this amendment authorizes them to make rules which will arbitrarily govern.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator would then hold that any rule made up to this time——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Must be in accordance with existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Could not be in contravention of the provisions of existing law?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that they would form companies to work in the sea and get 160 acres, and that ought to be ample.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wonder if it is. I do not know how those seas are. I have seen waves that high; they looked so.

Mr. STEWART. I think if the Senator would amend it so that the extent should not exceed——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me ask the Senator, who is an experienced mining lawyer, whether he does not think the rules and regulations of miners should be first approved and regulated by the Secretary of War, and should be, so far as feasible, in accordance with existing law?

Mr. STEWART. I think you can do it in a word here. I think I would not confine them as to shape, the rectangular shape, by the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not?

Mr. STEWART. I will tell you why. The areas should not exceed a certain maximum. Take so much front and go on down. Fifteen hundred feet might not be sufficient in length, because the water might be shallow. I would let them vary the shape, but they should not increase the area above that allowed by statute.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me suggest an amendment.

Mr. STEWART. That was very common in California, I will say, where they had a mountain that had an ore bed in the gravel, and they would locate along for miles and miles, so many feet front, running into the hill without limit. They might have so many feet on the beach, running down without limit.

Mr. WOLCOTT. As far as the Sandwich Islands?

Mr. STEWART. But the area should not exceed the amount allowed by law—a hundred and sixty acres. They might make it, say, 10 feet wide, and arrange all that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Just keep right around the earth?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And come out at the other end?

Mr. STEWART. Limit the area, but let them fix the shape. I think I can amend it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suggest this amendment to the consideration of the Senator from Montana and the consideration of the Senate, and let us see if it meets the views of those interested in the mining feature of this bill:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to declare and publish proper rules and regulations whereby the auriferous deposits in Alaska which lie below the low-water mark of the ocean and its tributaries shall, if feasible, be open to exploration and development by citizens of the United States, which said rules and regulations shall, so far as is practicable, be in accordance with existing statutes as applicable to placer mining. The rules and customs of miners in mining district nearest said deposits shall, when not inconsistent with such regulations, be recognized and shall govern the working of said deposits. The authority of the Secretary of War respecting said auriferous deposits shall be limited to policing the same, and to protecting navigation as he is now by law empowered. Any grants or rights heretofore granted respecting said deposits by any authority are hereby declared void and of no further effect.

Mr. STEWART. The objection to the proposed amendment is that it can not be carried into effect speedily enough. The idea is very good, but we must reflect that there are ten or fifteen thousand people there who must be provided for before the Secretary could get the rules and regulations out there.

Mr. WOLCOTT. You can not telegraph them. Something has got to get there. A fellow has to carry them out. Why could he not carry the regulations out just as well as a copy of the law?

Mr. STEWART. I doubt whether the Secretary will be able to make rules until after he has made further examination. I think very likely he would be as much in the dark about the regulations as we, and if he were to take time, as such officers always do, to correspond, these regulations would not get there for six months or a year after the passage of the act. Many acts have been passed requiring the Secretary to make regulations, and I never knew them to get out inside of six months, and we could not wait for that delay.

I would suggest, and perhaps it can be framed, an amendment to limit the area, and allow the shape to be elastic; and with that addition I think the amendment of the Senator from Montana is perfect.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not make it a parallelogram of some kind?

Mr. STEWART. Well, a parallelogram.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Has the Senator from Colorado offered an amendment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I do not offer it. I was merely suggesting it to the Senator from Montana; but I apologize for having interfered with his course of conduct of the bill.

Mr. BATE. Is the area indicated in the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I say it shall be as far as practicable in accordance with existing law, and shall be under regulations declared by the Secretary of War, and that, subject to these rules and regulations, the rules and customs of miners shall govern.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was somewhat surprised to hear the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] say that it could not be a roadstead because it is within 500 feet of the shore. I know a number of roadsteads which are within my own personal observation every summer where boats ride, and they are roadsteads within 50 yards of the shore and sometimes much nearer. A roadstead—I find my impression is correct—is a place near the shore where vessels may anchor, differing from a harbor in not being sheltered. A roadstead may be an open roadstead, or it may be a sheltered roadstead. Hampton Roads is sheltered, but it may be an open road. It is merely a place where vessels may anchor. That is all it amounts to, and it may be within 500 feet or 500 yards or 2,500 yards. It is a very general expression. There are plenty of places where there are cities with ports which are merely open roads—that is, nothing but the open shore—and the vessel only gets anchorage.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was not conscious of saying it could not be a roadstead because it was within 500 feet of the shore.

Mr. LODGE. I so understood.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am sure ports may be within 500 feet of the shore. My understanding was that this permit was given to excavate for 500 feet from the shore, because that was about the width in which the sand could be easily reached and from which the water would in great measure recede, and the water would be very shallow in that place, along the coast, and I inferred that it could in no sense be a roadstead. If there is any statement that this is a roadstead, then, of course, the Secretary might have the right to grant these permits, but I do not suppose there is any roadstead or that anybody would say that there is a roadstead on any part of this ground. It would have to appear affirmatively that there is a roadstead before that could be the case. The definition of a roadstead, as I see it in Worcester's Dictionary, is an anchorage at some distance from shore, which, I think, is correct, and which, it seems to me, would not bring any of the proposed territory within this law, as quoted by the Secretary of War.

Mr. LODGE. The only defined point about a roadstead is that it is an anchorage. Judging from the map, there are no harbors within 50 or 60 miles of Cape Nome. There is nothing near the gold-mining strip. They have to take vessels there to land passengers and all that, and if vessels anchor off that region in Cape Nome, as they doubtless will, in order to land passengers and freight and all that, that constitutes it a roadstead.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no doubt about that, but I had no idea that where a vessel can anchor such permits would be granted.

Mr. LODGE. Anywhere where a vessel can anchor is a roadstead.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This would not reach any such place.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know about that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I say if it does not, the law does not apply.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the amendment presented by the Senator from Colorado I have read and glanced at merely, but in a general way I may state now the obstacles in the way of Congress in legislating upon this question. It has been held over and over again that the Government of the United States holds the tide lands along the shores of navigable waters of Territories in trust for the future State. We can not without a violation of that trust apply the general mining laws in such manner as to attempt to give a fee-simple title to the locator. This rule would apply not only to tide lands, but to the lands beyond the tide or low mean tide mark. The amendment pending provides for only temporary possession by the miners. It avoids reference to the mining laws because of the apprehension that by some course of construction it might hereafter be contended that title could be obtained to the tide lands under the general mining laws of the United States.

This amendment as presented merely grants unrestrained permission to miners to temporarily explore and possess these tide lands and shallow waters for mining purposes until otherwise provided by law. We allow a mere easement. It is true that in the enjoyment of the easement the estate may be to some extent despoiled, but we do not pretend to give a fee-simple title, nor do we use any language calculated so to imply. I believe that in the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado we might at some time in the future encounter construction which would lead to widespread litigation relative to this trust property. I think we ought to hold the trust sacred. Yet we are confronted by a condition where hundreds and thousands of our citizens are going forth to explore that country for gold, and it is the desire that we should permit them to go unrestrained upon the tide lands and over the shallow waters for that purpose.

In the Seattle tide-land cases the Supreme Court of the United States held that the land within the limits of the tide flats was not subject to disposition by Congress. We do not pretend to dispose of the fee or of the soil, but to permit a mere temporary use of both. I believe it is better to leave the disposition of matters of detail to the miners on the ground than to undertake to allow a clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, 6,000 miles away, to deal with conditions of which he has little or no knowledge. From last December until this the residents of Alaska district have been importuning Congress to pass some law which would govern and regulate the operations of miners on the tide lands. We have steadily refrained from attempting any legislation, because of a lack of knowledge concerning the subject. In our ignorance of what to do we might do that which would trouble the miners there and come back to trouble us here.

This amendment transfers from Congress to the American citizens directly in charge of the subject the power, which is but temporary, to govern and control their workings from day to day. No title can be obtained save of a possessory kind. That title the miners may provide, and I believe will provide, shall hang from day to day upon the possession of the individual in the actual work of mining. It would be a calamity; it would be an injury and an injustice to the prospectors in the country to permit A, B, C, and D, under general rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior, to stake out a portion of the shallow water and tide lands and then move back into the States after performing trifling assessment work. It is an inclement climate. It is not a pleasant place to remain any great length of time, if all reports be true, or if half of what is said be true.

The miner will go there by the earliest boat moving out from Seattle, Tacoma, Portland, or San Francisco; will press his way through the gorging ice of Bering Sea and reach the gold coast of Cape Nome. He will desire to go to work at once. Not a day can he afford to lose, because the summer will be short and a severe winter will drive him home. In the meantime, Mr. President, he will meet others situated exactly as he is situated; he will meet these other men from everywhere—from the States and Territories of the Union—men familiar with miners' meanings, men familiar with their system of legislating, and in the meeting which will result from common impulse rules and regulations will be evolved permeated with justice and specially suited to the situation.

Mr. COCKRELL. When is that meeting to be held?

Mr. CARTER. That meeting comes together in a mining camp as naturally as the rain falls from the sky.

Mr. COCKRELL. Suppose that, as soon as this bill passes, there are, say, fifty or a hundred men there on the ground. They immediately hold a meeting and lay down their rules and regulations to suit themselves only. What will become of the others who may come there?

Mr. CARTER. There is no place in this world where true democracy so prevails without taint of any sort as in a mining camp. The majority rules. Laws are modified and holdings are limited, claims are reduced according to the supreme will of the majority. And when the larger crowd come in and find upon the records of the miners' meetings of days or weeks before some rules or regulations in the interest of a job or a clique, they will assemble and wipe out such rules without ceremony or faltering. That is the way they do it. The Senator from Nevada knows of that. He passed through the early days of Nevada and California. My colleague, the Senator from Montana, knows of it, as does the senior Senator from Colorado. A dozen witnesses in this Chamber can bear testimony to the fact that in the miners' meeting you get the quintessence of simple justice.

The junior Senator frem Colorado would transfer this to an $1,800 clerk in the Interior Department, who I am sure does not know as much about it as any Senator in this Chamber, and there is not a Senator in the Chamber to-day who would dare sit down at his desk and attempt to prescribe rules and regulations to govern conditions of which he has only speculative knowledge. I think the amendment presented here may well and safely be adopted. I think its operation will prove satisfactory. The Senator from Nevada suggests, as does the Senator from Colorado, that we might provide that in no case shall rules and regulations allow the possession of a larger area than that prescribed by the placer-mining laws of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not that right?

Mr. CARTER. I think the Senator from Nevada is preparing such an amendment. I will gladly accept it, because it will be a limitation in the right direction. It will fix the maximum and the miners will fix the minimum.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator give us some information on this matter, if he has it? I have seen it in the papers somewhere, I do not recall where—I am interested in this matter only as one Senator here who has been listening to the debate—that the holders of these permits from the Secretary of War had been subletting them by issuing licenses to men at so much a day or something like that, and all others are arrested by the soldiers—Uncle Sam's bluecoats—who are there. If that be true, it would follow that anything the miners might do in a public meeting would have no effect upon the War Department.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me a moment, by referring to the document he will find that these permits were issued at a recent date. It will be impossible for any human being to reach the country to which they refer before the 1st day of next June.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; it was last fall that I saw the statement about the soldiers arresting men who did not hold permits of the licensees, licenses, or permits that had been granted by the War Department.

Mr. CARTER. There were no permits granted. I will state, however——

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me? I suggest an amendment to his amendment, to insert after the word "law:"

Provided, That the rules and regulations of miners shall not authorize larger claims than are allowed by the placer-mining laws of the United States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I desire to say a word or two in reference to some of the remarks which the Senator from Montana has made respecting this measure. It disturbs me to be compelled to differ with him upon any of the features of this bill concerning Alaska, over which he has spent so much time and which he has so intelligently presented to the Senate, but I hope Senators will consider before they vote on this amendment. When it comes to dealing with the waters of the United States below low-water mark, I think the executive department of the Government should supervise the rules and regulations touching its development. I do not think it should be left to the miners at miners' meetings to declare areas or to declare rules, except subject to the approval of the Government.

It is common and it is unjust to talk about an $1,800 clerk determining the action of one of the great Executive Departments of the Government. The amendment I offered was that the Secretary of the Interior should prescribe the rules and regulations governing the working of these claims. The Senator from Montana assumes that that means an $1,800 clerk. He served for three years as Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States, and we had some very important promulgations of rules very ably done. Were they done by an $1,800 clerk?

Mr. CARTER. Well, generally so.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If they were, an $1,800 clerk is very competent to deal with this question. But I know they were not. They were done by the Senator from Montana. Our officers who administer the affairs of that Department of the Government are able and intelligent.

The only suggestion I have heard that would militate at all respecting this amendment is the question of time. If the pressure is great, the Department will act with promptitude. I have no question, Mr. President, that everybody will be more contented if the Government of the United States here holds its hand upon the final control of the rules and regulations which may be made for working those claims. I therefore feel impelled to offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Montana. I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to declare and publish proper rules and regulations whereby the auriferous deposits in Alaska which lie below the low-water mark of the ocean and its tributaries shall, if feasible, be open to exploration and development by citizens of the United States, or those who have declared their intention of becoming such citizens, which said rules and regulations shall, so far as is practicable, be in accordance with existing statutes as applicable to placer mining, and shall limit the area of each claim to the acreage now allowed by law.

The rules and customs of miners in the mining district nearest said deposits shall, when not inconsistent with such regulations, be recognized, and shall govern the working of said deposits.

The authority of the Secretary of War respecting said auriferous deposits shall be limited to policing the same and to protecting navigation, as he is now by law empowered.

Any grants or rights heretofore granted respecting said deposits by any authority are hereby declared void and of no further effect.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana (Mr. CARTER) ought to prevail. I had some little experience about these matters in old times. The miners, as the Senator from Montana says, are about as just a set of men as I have ever seen assembled together. Rough, self-willed, they govern themselves by a vote of the mining camp. They will govern themselves in that same way in spite of any enactment that we make here, and they govern as justly as Congress could possibly do. They submit to the ruling of the majority. It is a rough rule, but, as a general thing, so far as I have ever observed, and I had more than two years' experience with them as a part of them. They administered their own laws fairly and equally, and they punished the man who violated them with a promptness that would be worthy of all imitation in the courts of the United States. It was done promptly. It is true there was not very much of the statute law in their conduct.

But what the Senator from Montana is aiming at is the right thing to do, because we ought to give sanction to a good government wherever we find it, and we ought to make that lawful which will take place whether you make it or not. Remember that the miners are separated from all other communities; they are off by themselves; they are a community to themselves; they are not interfering with people at a distance; they are not interfering with what is taking place 5 miles off. Their rules have no influence or control, except that they might be imitated. Mr. President, I want the amendment of the Senator from Montana to pass because it is going to be the law in Alaska whether you pass it or not, and I want their conduct to be lawful.

Mr. BATE. In view of what has been said, as many of us know knothing about mining interests or the mode of operating them and want to do what is right in this matter, I think it is proper now to have the amendment of the Senator from Montana read in connection with the one which has just been read, so that we may understand the question clearly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee calls for the reading of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana. It will be read.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that in that connection the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], which tends to perfect the amendment offered by me, should be read. I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. It is, after the word "law," to insert the following:

Provided, That the rules and regulations established by the miners shall not allow the location of mining claims larger in area than placer claims under the laws of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. I accept that, and it may be read in connection with and as part of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment of the Senator from Montana as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, at the end of section 26, insert the following:

Provided further, That, subject only to such general limitations as may be necessary to exempt navigation from artificial obstructions, all land and shoal water below mean high tide on the shores, bays, and inlets of Bering Sea within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be subject to exploration for gold and other precious metals by citizens of the United States, or persons who have legally declared their intentions to become such, under such reasonable rules and regulations as the miners in organized mining districts may have heretofore made, or may hereafter make governing the temporary possession thereof for exploration and mining purposes, until otherwise provided by law: Provided further, That the rules and regulations established by the miners shall not allow the location of mining claims larger in area than placer claims under the laws of the United States, and all permits heretofore granted authorizing any person or persons, corporation or company to excavate or mine under any of said waters are hereby revoked and declared null and void.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have offered a substitute, which I ask may be read, so that the two may be compared together, and then I shall ask for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to declare and publish proper rules and regulations whereby the auriferous deposits in Alaska which lie below the low-water mark of the ocean and its tributaries shall, if feasible, be open to exploration and development by citizens of the United States or those who have declared their intention of becoming such citizens, which said rules and regulations shall, so far as is practicable, be in accordance with existing statutes as applicable to placer mining, and shall limit the area of each claim to the acreage now allowed by law.

The rules and customs of miners in the mining district nearest said deposits shall, when not inconsistent with such regulations, be recognized, and shall govern the working of said deposits.

The authority of the Secretary of War respecting said auriferous deposits shall be limited to policing the same, and to protecting navigation as he is is now by law empowered.

Any grants or rights heretofore granted respecting said deposits by any authority are hereby declared void and of no further effect.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I much prefer the amendment of the Senator from Montana for several reasons. One is that much time will necessarily be consumed before any regulation can be made, and that will be very prejudicial, inasmuch as there is a large immigration now rushing there, and it is imperative to have at once law and order and the ascertainment of rights. Besides, I believe in leaving as much of the regulation and government of the people to themselves as possible. I have seen a good deal of what has occurred where the people made their own rules and regulations. In September, 1850, the question came up, What shall be done with the California miners?

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President—

Mr. STEWART. Do not interrupt me now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STEWART. No; not now.

Mr. LINDSAY. I only want to ask a question.

Mr. STEWART. I do not want to be asked a question now. I want to finish.

Mr. LINDSAY. All right.

Mr. STEWART. The question came up in the Senate of the United States what to do, and there was quite a discussion as to rules and regulations for leasing the mining land, etc. Finally it was suggested by Mr. Benton, and Mr. Seward concurred, and so did Governor Chase, who was in the Senate at the time, and after a colloquial discussion had gone on in the Senate, they concluded to let the miners alone. They were let alone for about twenty years. They built up a system of laws, and they met every emergency reasonably well. They made their own rules and regulations. Finally, after a lapse of about twenty years, those rules and regulations were adopted by Congress and they are now the law of the land, Congress making some maximum limitations and providing for obtaining patents, but still adopting the rules and regulations. That was done in 1866. Then it was perfected in 1872 as it now stands.

At that time there was a strong desire to have the law administered here. Those of us who live in that country contended, and contended very strenuously, that inasmuch as we were adopting the miners' laws we ought to leave the administration, the ascertainment of the right of possession, to local authority. So it was provided that the local court should have jurisdiction; that wherever there was a contest the case should be tried before the local court, and only that should come up here. It was intended that all the Department would have to do with it would be merely administrative. It is impossible for any person here, however intelligent, who has not been a part of the creation of those laws to administer them. The miners know a good deal more there than the lawyers do here about the laws, their application, and whether they are beneficial or otherwise. Even as to the regulations, they will make better regulations than can be made here.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me ask the Senator if he did not help devise the present mining law?

Mr. STEWART. I did.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And advocate it?

Mr. STEWART. I did.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then what is the matter with it?

Mr. STEWART. I drew it. What is the matter with it? It is a good law. Of course it is a good law if I drew it. I worked hard to procure it. That law recognizes the rules and regulations of the miners and enacts them into law. Congress did make more rules and regulations, but they are based on those. Their right to legislate is preserved in that law right through, and it has been most beneficial.

It has been so beneficial that there has been no disposition to change it. There has been no power to change it. Whenever there is any attempt to change it, even in some little matters where it is thought it would be proper to make a change, we find the people so jealous of it that they come in and protest. They are satisfied with it; it is based on their rules and regulations. That is the basis of it. I recollect very well when a case was before the Supreme Court whether there was any property involved, so as to give the United States courts jurisdiction. I simply stated the case and nothing else. I showed what we had done, and, in opposition to everybody, the court said they could not shut their eyes to what had occurred for twenty years of nonaction by the Government, and they affirmed it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada will suspend one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. Just one minute. Let me finish a sentence.

Mr. FORAKER. I will yield for a minute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be laid aside for a moment.

Mr. STEWART. The court recognized the persons who had gone there as trespassers as having legal rights contrary to law on account of what had grown up. So I think we had better trust the people. Inasmuch as the amendment of the Senator from Montana is in line with what has been so thoroughly successful, I am disposed to follow that Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be compelled to ask the indulgence of the Senator from Ohio for a few moments. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

INQUIRIES RELATIVE TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

In further response to the resolution of the Senate of January 17, 1900, requesting copies of communications between the Executive Departments of the Government and Aguinaldo or other persons undertaking to represent the people in arms against the United States in the Philippine Islands, together with other official documents relating to the Philippine Islands, and the conduct and events of the insurrection against the authority of the United States in the Philippine Islands, and having reference to my message to the Senate of March 5, 1900 (Senate Document, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, No. 208), and that paragraph of the resolution of January 17, 1900, reading as follows:

"And that the President be further requested to communicate, without delay, so much of such information as is now in his possession, or in that of any Department at Washington, without waiting to obtain so much of said information as may require considerable delay or communication with the Philippine Islands, and to communicate the remainder of the information as soon thereafter as it can be obtained"—

I transmit herewith the following additional papers:

First. Copies of English translations of minutes of insurgent meetings held at Hongkong, China, February 24 and May 5, 1898, respectively, and of a certain other paper, appended hereto, marked "I," said documents being found in insurgent public records recently captured by our troops in the Philippine Islands.

Second. Copies of documents containing information of the treatment of prisoners, either Spanish or American, by the people in arms against the authority of the United States. Said copies of documents are appended hereto, marked "II."

Third. Copies of papers and documents, or English translations of the same, found in insurgent records recently captured by our troops in the Philippine Islands, containing information as to aid or encouragement received by Aguinaldo and his followers from persons in the United States; as to what pamphlets, speeches, or other documents emanating from the United States and adverse to its authority and to its policy were circulated in whole or in part among the Filipinos in arms against the United States, among the other inhabitants of the islands, or among the soldiers of the United States. Said copies of documents are appended hereto and marked "III."

The bill (H. R. 7939) to amend an act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. K. CARROLL'S REPORT ON PUERTO RICO.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hold in my hand a document entitled "Report on the island of Porto Rico; its population, civil government, commerce, industry, productions, roads, tariff, and currency, with recommendations, by Henry K. Carroll, special commissioner for the United States to Porto Rico. Respectfully submitted to Hon. William McKinley, President of the United States, October 6, 1899. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1899." "——" "Treasury Department, Document No. 2118. Office of the Secretary."

This document has never been furnished to Congress, so far as I have been able to discover. It has never been in our document room. I think if it is of such value as to justify a special commissioner to go there and collate these data and submit them to the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, and to have the Government pay for its publication, it ought to be published so that it may reach at least Congress and all its members.

I therefore ask that 3,000 copies of this document shall be printed for the use of Congress, 1,000 of which shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House. I will prepare a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator any idea what the cost might be?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have sent for Mr. Smith, the Printing Office clerk, who can tell us, hoping that he would get here before I had to call it up. If it costs over $500, it will have to be a concurrent resolution. If it costs under $500, the Senate can pass a simple Senate resolution. I will make the resolution to correspond with the cost. I will get the information in a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will present the resolution later on, then.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: I submit a resolution which I prepared after consultation as to the cost of the document. We can print 1,200 copies for $500 or less.

The order was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered by the Senate, That there be printed for the use of the Senate and placed in the Senate document room, 1,200 copies of "The report on the island of Porto Rico; its population, civil government, commerce, industries, productions, roads, tariff, and currency, with recommendations, by Henry K. Carroll, special commissioner for the United States to Porto Rico. Respectfully submitted to Hon. William McKinley, President of the United States, October 6, 1899."

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHOUP submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6627) "making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5 and 7, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"And provided further, That the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which in their judgment the applicant is entitled to, and the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically and accurately set forth the physical condition of the applicant, each and every existing disability being fully and carefully described.

"The reports of the special examiners of the Bureau of Pensions shall be open to inspection and copy by the applicant or his attorney, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Interior may prescribe."

And the Senate agree to the same.

GEORGE L. SHOUP,
J. V. QUARLES,
JAMES P. TALIAFERRO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

S. S. BARNEY,
J. T. McCLEARY,
JOHN C. BELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT FOR PUERTO RICO.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) temporarily to provide revenues for the relief of the island of Puerto Rico, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, before proceeding with the consideration of the unfinished business, I think I should state to Senators that I have concluded not to ask a separation of the two propositions—one the House bill and the other the Senate substitute providing a civil government for Puerto Rico—but have concluded to proceed with the unfinished business in the state in which it is. In order that Senators might be fully advised as to the committee amendments, about which there was some complaint made the other day—in a good-natured way, of course—I had the bill reprinted, so as to show in the text all the amendments which have been adopted by the Senate, and also to show, in the way indicated in the note at the head of the bill, the amendments yet to be proposed, upon which I shall ask the judgment of the Senate as rapidly as they can be considered.

I understand the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] desires to speak on this bill. I do not know to what particular point he desires to speak; but there is one amendment under consideration, which has been discussed to some extent, which I should like to have disposed of. Still if the Senator would prefer to speak first, I will yield to him.

Mr. STEWART. I will make what remarks I have to make now.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; then I will yield to the Senator at this time to submit his remarks.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like, if I may be permitted, to offer an amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I should have called the attention of Senators to the fact that each Senator will find on his desk the reprint of the bill in the form which I have indicated.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to offer and to have pending the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is now an amendment pending. The Senator can have his amendment printed and have it lie on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. Can there not be more than one amendment pending at the same time to different parts of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No two amendments can be actually pending at the same time. The Senator's amendment will be printed and lie on the table, subject to his call.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, has the expenditure of blood and treasure in the Spanish war and in the war with the Filipinos been a criminal blunder? Will Puerto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines, if acquired and held by the United States, be a blessing or a curse? Will William McKinley be regarded by posterity as a benefactor for adding to the United States islands abounding in tropical products, or will he be execrated for a criminal attempt to subvert the Constitution and injure the industries of the people by the acquisition of pestiferous, poisonous, and worthless lands beyond the sea? These questions are now being discussed in the public press, in the pulpit, and at the firesides of the people.

The same sentimentality and narrow prejudice which embittered the discussion in the time of Jefferson, Monroe, and Polk, on account of the acquisitions of territory made by them, are potent factors in the opposition to the acquisition of the most productive and valuable islands in all the seas. Such opposition was anticipated. Fault-finders as well as broad-minded and practical citizens are the outgrowth of free institutions.

ELEMENTS WARRING AGAINST NATURAL GROWTH.

Unfortunately, there are other elements warring against national growth and expansion which never before appeared in discussions of this character. No agricultural interest ever before opposed the acquisition of more good land because it would produce what the people consumed at less cost than any land hitherto owned by the United States. The Louisiana purchase and the territories acquired from Spain and Mexico were much better adapted to the production of many farm products than the States of the Northeast, but no one opposed those acquisitions because the land was too good. The sentimental objectors contended that the land was worthless for any purpose whatever.

The strange phase of the present controversy is the opposition of the sugar and tobacco interests. It is asserted that those commodities can be produced in these islands for less than one-half the expenditure required in their production in other sections of the United States. This argument is about as reasonable as it would have been for Massachusetts to have opposed the Jefferson purchase because it would cheapen breadstuffs. Would the great mass of the people of the United States be injured if what the advocates of the sugar interests assert were true? If the price of sugar could be reduced 50 per cent, would the poor complain? The people of the United States are now compelled to pay to foreigners between ninety-five and one hundred million dollars annually for sugar which they could produce themselves if the islands wrested from Spain were in the peaceable possession of the United States. A protective tariff is maintained for the purpose of encouraging home production by keeping out foreign sugar. Why not protect the sugar growers of this country by the acquisition of islands where our people can produce sugar at less cost than any other people on the face of the globe? These arguments apply equally to the production of tobacco and all other commodities which are the natural growth of the new acquisitions.

THE ISLANDS FURNISH RICH MARKETS.

The export of gold, so long as that commodity is the only material upon which money can be stamped, is a standing menace to the business of the country and is watched with more anxiety than any other cause affecting the price of property. The buying of tropical products in foreign lands now absorbs more than two hundred and fifty millions of our annual exports. If this ever-increasing obligation to foreigners could be avoided by the production of tropical products in our island possessions, the United States would have the advantage, both financially and commercially, of any other country on earth. The people could then produce everything they consume, except luxuries to indulge the pride and vanity of the rich.

These islands, notwithstanding the robbery, tyranny, and extortion of Spanish misrule, imported annually more than $120,000,000 in value of foreign merchandise. It would be safe to anticipate with honest and stable government that American enterprise and capital would increase the consuming capacity of the islands more than fourfold, and the people of the United States would in the near future enjoy a market of from three hundred to five hundred millions a year for their surplus manufactures and farm products, and they would receive in exchange tropical products of equal value, including sugar, tobacco, and many other staple commodities.

Would not such a market furnish more employment for labor and benefit the farming and manufacturing interests of the country more than can possibly be done by tariff walls to force the production of tobacco and sugar on land designed by nature for the cultivation of the cereals, fruits, grasses, and other products of the temperate zone? Why turn these islands over to anarchy, discord, and ruin, or, what would be more injurious to the United States, to be occupied and their resources developed by some European power which would take advantage of their great productive capacity to compete with the tariff-nursed sugar and tobacco of the United States? Why should anyone argue that cheap sugar and tobacco produced in our own country would injure our consumers, or that the vast demand for our manufactures and farm products in these islands would be prejudicial to the laboring man by diminishing his opportunities for employment?

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENTS ADAPTED TO ISLANDS.

No promise has been made and no obligation will exist to create States in these islands until such time as the people shall determine through their representatives in Congress that new States beyond the seas would be beneficial to the United States. No reasonable person will pretend that our successors will not be as wise and patriotic as ourselves. No one denies that Congress has power to do many harmful things which might subvert the Government, but if the time ever arrives when patriotism is dead in the Congress of the United States, the danger of admitting new States will not be the most alarming danger.

Our Territorial forms of government, which have grown and developed with the growth and development of the country, are admirably suited to the government of these islands. It is the established practice of our Government to accord to the Territories as much self-government as they are capable of enjoying. Although by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo the United States agreed to form States out of the newly acquired territory, New Mexico has remained for more than fifty years under a Territorial form of government. The greater part of Alaska, measured by the time of communication, is vastly more remote than the Philippines. Congress has no difficulty in governing Alaska and applying to it so much of our Territorial system as circumstances justify. The only voice a Territory has in the government of the country is the voice of advice and consultation through a Delegate elected by the people, who has no vote in Congress.

The natives of these islands at the time of the acquisition from Spain will never be citizens of the United States without the action of Congress. The treaty with Spain expressly referred the matter of citizenship to Congress. But it can make no difference whether or not they are citizens; they will have no power to injure the Government of the United States until they have a voice in that Government by the admission of their islands as States. The citizenship of persons born in the islands after the acquisition can not injure our Government as long as such persons are not allowed to participate in its control.

NO FEAR OF CHINESE COMPETITION.

The attempt to alarm the laborers of this country by the false assertion that the acquisition of these islands will let in Chinese laborers is demagogism. Our exclusion laws apply to Chinese from whatever country they may come. The law that excludes Chinese immigration to this country can be made applicable to all our possessions and the Chinese residents of the Philippines may be treated in the same manner as the Chinese residents of the United States.

The suggestion that laborers from the islands who are not Chinese may migrate to this country and compete with American labor has no foundation to support it. Nature marks the line which laboring migration must follow. Witness our own country. The Swedes and the Norwegians find congenial homes along the Northern Lakes and Canadian borders. Germans follow along a little farther south. The Irish prefer the central regions of the United States as corresponding more nearly to the climate of their native land. The Italians generally go farther south and on the Pacific coast to find climatic conditions similar to balmy Italy. Never in all the ages has the population of the Tropics crossed the isothermal lines to inhabit and cultivate the soil of the temperate zones, nor have laborers from the north succeeded in cultivating tropical lands. Merchants, traders, bankers, and business men readily accommodate themselves to the climate of the torrid, temperate, or frigid zone. Business and professional men from the north enjoy southern climes, and the same is true of business and professional men of the south when they emigrate to the north. Successful labor follows but does not cross the line separating the tropical from the temperate zone.

MUTUAL BENEFITS RESULTING FROM RETENTION OF ISLANDS.

The resources of the United States in everything found in the temperate zones are inexhaustible and practically untouched. Modern machinery and the genius of American people can always produce more of the products and manufactures of the temperate zone than the people can use. These islands under American control and enterprise will produce vastly more tropical products than they can consume. The interchange of the products of the farm, the mine, and the factory for the sugar, coffee, tobacco, fruits, and other products of these islands will give employment to millions in the United States as well as in the islands. The storm of criticism and the rancorous vituperation of disappointed ambition will soon pass away, and when the American people are in full enjoyment of the new acquisitions they will view them as serenely and with as much satisfaction as they now contemplate the teeming population and the wonderful productions of the countries acquired during the Administrations of Jefferson, Monroe, and Polk, and posterity will wonder why anybody could have opposed the rich inheritance which the war against Spanish cruelty brought to the United States, as they now wonder why it was that the acquisitions of territory which we have heretofore made were opposed by persons otherwise considered sane and sensible.

The establishment of self-government and the inauguration of industry under the benign influence of the principles of the Declaration of Independence in the gems of the sea, which good fortune has placed within the reach of the American people, are delayed and embarrassed by the timidity of the friends of expansion and progress. The suggestion that there is some nebulous, open-door policy in the far East which would prevent the United States from extending our customs laws over the Philippines is a dream of folly which will not disturb the American people. The idea that the United States will hold the Philippines and maintain their ports free to all the world and at the same time separate them from our country by a tariff wall which would exclude them from our markets and deprive us of the benefit of their trade can not be seriously considered.

The contention that any of the islands which we wrested from Spanish rule would injure American industries on account of their productions is a pure invention. Some gentlemen seem to regard it as a matter of no consequence that the consumers are compelled to pay $250,000,000 a year for tropical products which these islands will produce, and that the farmers and manufacturers of this country would be deprived, by the loss of these acquisitions, of an annual market of from three hundred to five hundred million dollars.

SCHEMES OF AMBITIOUS STATESMEN.

Perhaps the most unfortunate opposition to expansion comes from the schemes of ambitious statesmen to connect their names with original methods of government unknown to the fathers of the Republic. They seem to assume that the principles of freedom and local self-government which have spread over the vast areas of territory already acquired are not suited to land surrounded by water; that human rights and the principles of government are different on islands from what they are on broad continents, and that while Jeffersonian Territorial governments were good enough for Orleans, Florida, and the great West, it is the duty of a rising statesman to invent some new form of government for the islands never before tried in the history of man. I implore them to consider if it is not possible that the heroic struggles for liberty and self-government which have established on the American continent the freest, the grandest, and the greatest Government of ancient or modern times may not furnish some lessons in the establishment of governments for the islands which it might be useful to study.

Impatience and haste are also obstacles to the accomplishment of the great work of establishing free and stable governments in our island possessions. It was a military problem in the beginning and must remain so until civil governments can be formed. The great virtue of the American system is that civil governments grow out of military enterprises, and God forbid that this order of things should be reversed and military government be established on the ruins of the Constitution. The government of Louisiana in 1803, after the acquisition of that country from France, was a combination of military and executive power while the President of the United States was inaugurating civil government. Florida was acquired in 1819, and it remained a purely military government until 1822, when Congress legislated, establishing civil rule, which had been previously inaugurated by Monroe.

California was acquired in July, 1846, when Commodore Sloat, at Monterey, raised the American flag, and the country remained under military rule without any interference on the part of Congress and very little on the part of the President until the admission of the State in September, 1850. The military officers in that country governed it, inaugurated the present State government without any action by Congress, and finally, when Congress was called upon to act, California had a firmly established State government with a constitution and a system of laws which compare favorably with the constitution and laws of any State in the Union. On the 9th of September, 1850, Congress accepted what the military officers and people had done and admitted California as a State of the Union.

UNWISE TO LEGISLATE WHILE CONDITIONS ARE UNKNOWN.

It is unwise to legislate for any of these newly acquired islands until it can be ascertained what legislation is necessary and beneficial. The war and the executive power of the Government have been and must continue to be the pioneers in establishing law and order and developing the condition of newly acquired territory before Congress can be possessed of the necessary information for appropriate legislation. Let the arm of the President be strengthened by Congressional authority, as was done in the case of Jackson and Monroe, and let the responsibility of initiating local self-government in the islands remain with the President, where the necessity of the situation requires it to remain. Leave him untrammeled, as other Presidents have been under like circumstances, and let him be responsible for progress in the right direction.

The appointment of a commission to aid in the establishment of local self-government in the Philippines is wise and necessary. Let Congress make it effective by arming the President with legislative sanction, that Aguinaldo and his deluded followers may know that the United States is determined to put down the rebellion and maintain its jurisdiction in every island of the archipelago. Already we hear that guerrilla warfare has been commenced under the belief that the United States is not in earnest, that the President will not be sustained, and that Aguinaldo's dictatorship will ultimately be recognized.

QUESTION ABOVE PARTY.

This is a question above party. It is a question of country. Whatever of hesitation, of selfish or unreasonable opposition may be made to acquiring Puerto Rico, Cuba, and the Philippines, there can be but one result. These islands will, with the approbation and consent of the American people, become a most important and valuable part of the United States. When all questions of the acquisition of these islands shall have been settled, peace, order, and local self-government established, the United States will have inexhaustible resources in everything needful and useful which can be found in any part of the world. The people of the United States will then be as proud of their whole country as they are today of any part thereof, and will enter into friendly commercial competition with all the nations of the earth without the slightest apprehension or fear of the triumph of free institutions for the benefit of the human race. The necessities of our people will then be supplied in our own country without depending on foreigners for moral, material, or military support.

The Jeffersonian bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and reported by the committee will give President McKinley the same support in the Philippines as Jefferson and Monroe had in the countries acquired during their Administrations. The bill should become a law with Puerto Rico included and remain in force until the pioneer work in the new acquisitions is done and before any form of government or system of revenue is provided by Congress. The premature contention over details, without a full knowledge of what ought to be done, has already created excitement and unrest in the country prejudicial to the peaceful, speedy, and successful establishment of law, order, and local self-government in our new possessions. If I were permitted to give advice, I would suggest the propriety of amending the Spooner bill so as to include Puerto Rico, pass the appropriation bills and other necessary legislation, and adjourn Congress, and let the people decide whether the policy of expansion inaugurated by the fathers of the Republic shall be continued until the United States is as independent of all other countries for material resources as she is and has ever been independent in her political career.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 23, after the word "also," it is proposed to insert "as to railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises."

Mr. FORAKER. Since Senators now have a different print of the bill, I will state that the proposed amendment is in line 3, on page 24, according to the reprint.

Senators may remember the nature of this amendment. Possibly some of them were not in the Chamber when it was under consideration a few days ago; and for the benefit of those, let me say that this is the clause as to the granting of franchises. The provision on that subject, as found in the bill reported by the committee, was that franchises in Puerto Rico should be granted by the executive council, subject to the approval of the governor, and subject also to the approval of the President. That required every franchise, whether it was important or otherwise, to be sent here to be acted upon by the President.

It was thought, after some consideration had been given to the subject, that it would not be necessary to send here for the President to act upon any but the most important ones, such as railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises; and the purpose of this amendment is to make it unnecessary to send here for the action of the President any franchises granted in Puerto Rico excepting only those relating to these three subjects—railroads, telegraphs, and telephones. All other franchises, such as those for electric lighting, gas lighting, or any other kind which may be thought of, will be acted upon and disposed of by the executive council, with the approval of the governor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to know what will be the effect of passing these amendments in this way, whether the Senate will be thereby concluded; in other words, whether the action of the Senate in making these amendments is a final action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not. The amendments now being made to the bill are being made in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, but it will be open to amendment after the bill goes into the Senate; and, then again——

Mr. PETTUS. But not as in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask is it conclusive on the Committee of the Whole, as the Chair rules?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it is open to all manner of amendments as in Committee of the Whole; to any amendment.

Mr. PETTUS. I have some amendments to propose—that is, amendments which I have had printed and which are now upon the table, in reference to this very matter—and I want to know whether I can have them acted upon when the committee get through with their amendments?

Mr. FORAKER. With the permission of the Chair, if the Senator will allow me, I understand the amendment which the Senator has given notice he will propose is one requiring all these franchises to be acted upon by the legislative assembly.

Mr. PETTUS. And the governor and the President of the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. And the governor and the President of the United States—by all of these officials. I think, therefore, it relates to this same matter, and that our present action would include action also upon the Senator's amendment. I did not speak of his amendment, because I supposed the Senator from Alabama would present his amendment in this connection.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I understand the force of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is to place in charge of the territorial council and the governor all franchises excepting those for railroads, telegraphs, and telephones, which are to be in their charge and in the charge of the President of the United States—that is, as respects the three last named, they will require the approval of the President of the United States before they can become effective. So that the force or the legal effect of the amendment is to deprive Congress of all jurisdiction over the subject of granting franchises in the island of Puerto Rico. Is that correct?

Mr. FORAKER. Well, Mr. President, that is probably the result of it, though that never occurred to me before in connection with the amendment. Of course, all legislation by the legislative assembly is subject to the approval of Congress and may be annulled by Congress when reported, but there is no provision here as to franchises that would be granted by any authority other than the executive council and the President. This provision requires that all these franchises that the President may approve shall be reported to Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. I know; but what has Congress to do after they are reported, if they are first approved by him?

Mr. FORAKER. The Congress, I presume, could do whatever it might see fit to do about the matter.

Mr. ALLEN. Under the terms of this bill, if it shall become a law, a franchise can be granted to a railroad or a telegraph or telephone corporation by the council and governor of Puerto Rico and approved by the President, and that deprives the Congress of all jurisdiction, and there would be no revisory power in Congress whatever, because it amounts to a contract between the Government and the recipient.

Mr. FORAKER. I supposed when we were drafting the bill, and that is the opinion the committee had, that the safeguards provided were sufficient. If the Senator thinks that Congress also ought to be empowered to take action in the matter, I personally have no objection to that kind of a provision being inserted in the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Section 30 provides:

Provided, however, That all grants or franchises, rights and privileges, or concessions of a public or quasi-public nature shall be made by the executive council, with the approval of the governor, subject also, as to railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises, to the approval of the President of the United States, who shall report the same to Congress.

It leaves it in this condition, that if the council and governor of Puerto Rico and the President of the United States shall approve a charter for a railroad, or a telegraph, or a telephone company, it is conclusive upon the Government irrevocably, and can not be amended or altered or changed in any respect during the life of the charter; and Congress has nothing to do with the matter, except to receive a mere nominal report from the President of the United States, which he may or may not make. We have no power to require him to make it.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I will say that I have no objection to this provision being amended so as to read as does the conclusion of the preceding section with respect to legislation:

Provided, however, That all laws enacted by the legislative assembly shall be reported to the Congress of the United States, which hereby reserves the power and authority, if deemed advisable, to annul the same.

I have no objection to having those words inserted at the end of the section.

Mr. LINDSAY. Or modify.

Mr. FORAKER. So that it shall read:

Who shall report the same to Congress, which hereby reserves the power to annul or modify the same.

If that will answer the objection, let those words be inserted. I think the objection is well taken.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest this:

Shall report the same to Congress; and said franchises shall not have any legal force or effect until approved and ratified by Congress.

Mr. FORAKER. I would only suggest this difficulty about that phraseology: It might unreasonably delay enterprises and the development of the island. I think if we put it in the form in which the power of Congress to annul is usually reserved, and that is the form that comes at the end of the preceding section——

Mr. ALLEN. I would be perfectly willing to trust the Senator from Ohio to reform it at his leisure, so as to preserve the right of Congress to pass upon these franchises.

Mr. FORAKER. I can insert it now if that language will be satisfactory to the Senator, and I will say to him that I should have inserted it without any suggestion if it had occurred to me.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not pretend to know what the force of that language will be; but I do want to observe——

Mr. FORAKER. I do not hear the Senator from Nebraska, there is so much noise in the Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not profess to know what the force of the language will be which the Senator proposes to use in the amendment; but I think, all the way through this bill, in every section and in every provision, most ample safeguards ought to be preserved to Congress to revise and control the government of Puerto Rico and its domestic institutions in all respects. There can be nothing clearer than that the government of Puerto Rico must be such as Congress may prescribe.

Congress has the sole power of prescribing a government for the island. It is not within the power of the President of the United States to prescribe a government for Puerto Rico or for any other of these newly acquired islands except as he derives the power to institute a military government incident to military occupation. Now, if that be true, and we being in the transition state from a military to a civil government in Puerto Rico, the greatest caution ought to be observed in the drafting and passage of bills affecting the people and territory of that island in preserving our revisory control.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I will read the amendment which I propose about this matter. It is lying on the table. It is in this section to insert "legislative assembly" instead of "executive council." My purpose in proposing that amendment was the very matter that is being talked about. This section in reference to the action of the legislative assembly provides that Congress may repeal any action of the legislative assembly, and I wanted to have these franchises granted by the legislative assembly and thereby subject them to the revision of Congress. Now, if the Senator will add at the end of that section that all franchises granted in Puerto Rico shall be subject to revocation or modification by Congress, I do not care anything about this amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Let me ask the Senator if he would require that as to minor, unimportant ones, or simply as to the important ones?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir; as to all of them. These franchises are more the subject of fraud than any other species of property in the United States. They are more the subject of fraud in the cities than anything else in the cities, and they ought all to be subject to the revision of Congress, and to put that sort of power into a council without having any control is simply to abandon these valuable properties, because they are properties, to those who succeed in having influence over the men in power in that island. They ought to be subject to the revocation and modification of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's amendment will be in order as soon as this amendment is disposed of.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Alabama has stated that if I would make a certain change he would withdraw his amendment. I am perfectly willing to do so. I want to ask the Senator if the language which I propose to offer now will be satisfactory; and I am obliged both to the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Alabama for calling my attention to the matter. It was the purpose of the committee to guard the granting of franchises, because they appreciate that that is a very important matter, and they would have left it to the legislative assembly except for the fact—I think I ought to say this in justice to the committee—that the legislative assembly can not be in session more than sixty days in any one year. The granting of franchises is something that may come up at any time, and the executive council and the governor will always be there to act upon such applications.

I propose, if the Senator will follow me, so to amend that the clause will read as follows:

Subject also as to railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises to the approval of the President of the United States; and all franchises granted in Puerto Rico shall be reported to Congress, which hereby reserves the power, if deemed advisable, to annul or modify the same.

Mr. PETTUS. Why "if deemed advisable?" Just say it reserves the power.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not object to that. I took the language out of the other statute. That is how that came in. I will say:

And all franchises granted in Puerto Rico shall be reported to Congress, which hereby reserves the power to annul or modify the same.

I ask that it may be read at the Secretary's desk, so that there may be no mistake about it.

Mr. PETTUS. I have no objection to that, and withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio who has charge of this bill if it would not be well enough to strike out subject "to the approval of the President of the United States." It is not usual for Territorial legislation that comes here to be revised or approved by Congress to be treated in that way.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to its being stricken out, as we propose now to bring it under the review of Congress.

Mr. MONEY. I think it better, if the Senator will permit that amendment. It is putting the cart before the horse. The President's approval comes after the Houses have acted and not before.

Mr. FORAKER. I presume it would have to be transmitted through some official. The provision as to the President approving came about in the way I have indicated. It was thought impracticable to give the power to the legislative assembly, because it is in session only sixty days in the year, and here were the executive council, and the governor, a part of the council, in session all the time, so that applications might be granted at any moment, or rather might be acted upon at any moment.

Mr. MONEY. Then it will come just as it does in the case of legislation from other Territories.

Mr. FORAKER. I wanted to say to the Senator that my purpose in offering this amendment was to avoid imposing upon the President the necessity to deal with every minor franchise.

Mr. MONEY. I will suggest, if the Senator will accept the amendment, to strike out "to the approval of the President of the United States, who shall report the same to Congress." Let it come through the usual channels.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. MONEY. Of course you can arrange the phraseology so as to make it conform. That is the idea, that it is to be reported in the usual way, as in the case of other Territories.

Mr. FORAKER. Then it will be unnecessary to say anything about railroad, telegraph, and telephone franchises, but let the provision read, commencing in the middle of line 2:

With the approval of the governor; and all franchises granted in Puerto Rico shall be reported to Congress, which hereby reserves the power to annul or modify the same.

That is satisfactory to me, if it is to others. Now let the Secretary state it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 22, section 30, after the word "governor," it is proposed to strike out the rest of the paragraph and insert:

And all franchises granted in Puerto Rico shall be reported to Congress, which hereby reserves the power to annul or modify the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, inasmuch as the bill has been reprinted, and that was the last of the amendments that had been brought before the Senate when we were formerly considering the bill, I ask that we may go back to the beginning of the bill as now reprinted and consider amendments as indicated in their order. The first amendment proposed will be found on page 4, and it is to insert, in line 16, after the word "citizens," the following:

Of Puerto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection.

This is the clause that fixes the civil and political status of the inhabitants of the island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerks at the desk have no copies of the new print.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Ohio. We have been over this bill once and put into it the amendments that are called committee amendments. Now the bill seems to be perfected in such form as the committee want it, as I understand.

Mr. FORAKER. Not yet. We went over the bill considering only such amendments as were not contested. Now I am taking up the amendments proposed by the committee about which there will no doubt be more or less debate. I asked consent that the committee amendments might be first considered. That was given, and then I announced that I would first ask the consideration by the Senate of such amendments as I supposed would not be contested, and if when one was offered there was a contest I passed it. Now I am going back to take up those passed over upon objection being made, with a view of having them considered and finally disposed of.

Mr. MORGAN. Many amendments have been presented and many of them have been contested. We have been occupied in this peculiar kind of labor here for about three or four days on this bill, and other Senators who have amendments that they want to offer to the text of the bill it seems will never get an opportunity.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection if the Senator wants at any time to offer an amendment. I do not wish to cut him out or cause him to postpone. I will yield at any time when a Senator may wish to offer an amendment or speak upon it.

Mr. MORGAN. If I offer an amendment I want it to be the subject of the action of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I will offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after section 7 the following:

SEC. —. That any citizen of the United States who shall deposit for coinage, at any mint in the United States, silver bullion of the value of not less than $100, estimated at the rate of 371¼ grains of pure silver per dollar, and at the same time and as a part of the same deposit shall also deposit gold bullion for coinage of equal or greater value, estimated at the rate of 23.22 grains of pure gold per dollar, shall be entitled to have such gold and silver bullion coined in such lawful denominations of gold and silver coins of the United States as he shall designate, and after such deposit none of said bullion shall be withdrawn as bullion from such mint, but such gold and silver bullion shall be coined and the coin shall be delivered to the depositor, his or her assigns or legal representatives, in discharge of the certificate of deposit issued for such deposit.

The superintendent of such mint shall issue to such depositors certificates of deposit, in accordance with this act, and shall refine and coin such bullion of gold and silver for and on account of such depositors in the same manner as if the same was owned by and was coined on account of the Government of the United States, and the charges for refining and coining such bullion shall be the same as are lawfully made in such cases.

No gold or silver bullion shall be deposited for coinage under this act that has been coined or manufactured as an article of commerce, or that is not the product of mines in the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the committee has unanimously reported section 7 of this bill, which contains virtually, if not expressly, a free proposition for the coinage of silver. I will read it:

SEC. 7. That for the purpose of retiring the Puerto Rican coins now in circulation in Puerto Rico and substituting therefor the coins of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to redeem, on presentation in Puerto Rico, all the silver coins of Puerto Rico known as the peso and all other silver and copper Puerto Rican coins now in circulation in Puerto Rico, not including any such coins that may be imported into Puerto Rico after the 1st day of February, 1900, at the present established rate of 60 cents in the coins of the United States for 1 peso of Puerto Rican coin, and for all minor or subsidiary coins the same rate of exchange shall be applied.

The Puerto Rican coins so purchased or redeemed shall be recoined at the expense of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, into such coins of the United States now authorized by law as he may direct, and from and after three months after the date when this act shall take effect no coins shall be a legal tender, in payment of debts thereafter contracted, for any amount in Puerto Rico, except those of the United States; and whatever sum may be required to carry out the provisions hereof, and to pay all expenses that may be incurred in connection therewith, is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish such regulations and employ such agencies as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes hereof: Provided, however, That all debts owing on the date when this act shall take effect shall be payable in the coins of Puerto Rico now in circulation, or in the coins of the United States at the rate of exchange above named.

We have recently passed what is called the gold bill. It is now the law. My opinion in regard to that bill is that it is entirely radical in its effect upon the coinage system of the United States as well as other parts of our financial system. It is claimed on this side of the Chamber and by those who opposed that bill that the effect of it was to make the legal-tender silver coins of the United States now in existence redeemable at the Treasury of the United States in gold, not by a direct operation dependent upon a direct demand of the holder of the coin, but by the incidental arrangement of converting the silver coin into silver certificates and then taking those certificates to the Treasury and having them redeemed in gold.

I have accepted that law as fixing upon this country that condition. If that is a correct interpretation of the present condition, the silver dollars or other silver coins in use in the United States, amounting to some eight hundred and odd million dollars, are all that will ever be obtained by the people of the United States of that description of coinage so long as that law shall remain in force. It closes the door forever to the coinage of legal-tender silver dollars.

There is now no possibility, under the law as it exists, of having any silver dollars coined, either by a purchase on account of the Government, or as the personal right of the holder of silver bullion. I was much gratified to find that, in view of that condition of affairs, this honorable committee, a majority of whom are Republicans, have brought forward a measure, in section 7 of this bill, which gives to the holder of the Puerto Rican coins, or Spanish coins in Puerto Rico, the right to go to the Treasury of the United States and have them redeemed, and to have the bullion of which they consist coined; that is, the coinage of silver bullion by the Government of the United States after it has exchanged silver dollars for that bullion on the demand of its owner.

The right that is given by this bill is given to the holders of these Spanish coins whoever he may be. It is not even limited to citizens of the United States. Any holder of a Spanish peso or peseta or any other form of Spanish silver coin will have, under this bill if it becomes a law, the personal right to carry it to the Treasury of the United States and have it exchanged for silver coin at a certain fixed per cent per peso.

That is the free coinage of silver on the demand of the man who holds the Puerto Rican coin, and it is nothing else. There is nothing in the bill which indicates that anything else is the purpose. The committee have come to the conclusion that it is a right that belongs to the holder of the Spanish coins in that island, and of course it must equally belong to the holders of Spanish coins in other islands acquired from Spain, to bring their Spanish money to the Treasury of the United States and exchange it for silver coin, and then to have the bullion coined. It is the free coinage of silver bullion held by Spanish people, or Puerto Ricans, or anybody else on the demand of the holder.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator speaks of bringing Spanish bullion. This bill provides, I understand, only for the coinage of the Puerto Rican peso, which circulates only in the island, and the amount of which is absolutely limited. It does not provide for the coinage of the Spanish peseta. This is special coinage, the Puerto Rican peso, existing only in the island and circulating nowhere else in the Spanish possessions.

Mr. MORGAN. It is none the less silver bullion because it is a Puerto Rican coin. It may have been coined in Puerto Rico, but it is none the less bullion than if it had been coined in Spain. It is bullion and nothing else. It is not money in the view of our statutes. It has no money value here as a coin. Its bullion value is its only value.

Mr. FORAKER. There is this provision in the bill, which possibly the Senator from Alabama overlooked. It authorizes the recoinage of only Puerto Rican coins now in circulation in Puerto Rico.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good. That is, to say, Puerto Rican coins now in circulation, which means simply the silver bullion in circulation as coin. That is all it means. It is not coin according to our statutes. It goes the whole length of opening our mints to the free coinage of Spanish bullion, coined under Spanish law in Puerto Rico, at a fixed price of 60 cents an ounce. The right given for the free coinage of this bullion would be the same in law, if the price fixed was 100 cents per ounce. It is a right given to compel the mints of the United States to coin certain silver bullion, and this is all that the phrase, "the free coinage of silver" means.

It adopts the principle, and I approve it, and I am greatly gratified at it. The same principle was carried in the bill which was reported by a commission of which I had the honor to be a member, for the government of Hawaii. We reported a bill, and when it came to the Senate it was separated from the main measure and sent to the Committee on Finance, and it is pending there now. That provision was to take the bullion as we found it in Hawaii and convert it into coin of the United States. It was the same principle precisely that is found in this bill. It is the whole doctrine of the free coinage of silver on the demand of the holders of bullion, and is not anything else.

Now, inasmuch as we have asserted that right as a correct principle of government in this bill, which I thoroughly approve, I propose to extend it to the people of the United States, not on terms of equal liberality that we extend it to the holders of Puerto Rican pesos or pesetas, but on terms that are somewhat more circumscribed. This step takes us far in the direction of the good we must ultimately reach in our necessary return to the constitutional duty of providing for the coinage of gold and silver on equal terms.

But, before I proceed to define and to explain as well as I can the situation in regard to that particular duty and necessity, I wish to call attention to another state of facts. In these Spanish possessions we have acquired thirteen million of population, or thereabouts, all of whom have transacted almost the entire business of all the islands, great as it is, upon the basis of silver money. Now, one of two things we ought to do. We ought either to let stand in those islands the Spanish laws that make these coins a legal tender and that provide for their increased coinage, or else we ought to convert them into American coins, as is done in this bill, on the demand of the holder of the Spanish coins, for we can not put those people to a worse disadvantage or inflict upon them greater trouble than to deprive them of the silver coin which they are using in their business and refuse to supply our coins in place of it.

There is nothing that we could do which would give greater distress, bring more serious ruin and disaster upon those people, than to refuse to legalize the silver coins that they have now, and then refuse to supply their places after having stricken them down. No duty the Government of the United States owes to humanity, even to say nothing of its treaty obligations and its obligations under the laws of nations, surpasses in its imperious demand for our consideration this duty of supplying those people with money to carry on their business. It is the vital point. In all their business it is the one indispensable thing. Not only is it cruel, but, Mr. President, it is a reproach to us, that we should undertake to set up a government there and, in doing that duty, destroy the coinage of those people in which their business has been conducted for centuries and provide nothing to supply the place of it.

This bill wisely supplies the place of it, so far as that coinage is concerned. It ought to go further, and it ought to permit coins to be made at the mints of the United States for the purpose of using them in the governmental operations in all these islands, every one of them. We can not take these islands and skim the cream of commerce off of them and supply nothing to them in the way of facilities for conducting that commerce without destroying our own reputation amongst the nations of the earth for ability to govern them wisely. We can not break those people down and leave them a wreck in their financial and commercial condition without providing some substitute for what we are taking away from them.

I do not find any provision here for establishing national banks in Puerto Rico; and I suppose there is none in contemplation for establishing national banks in the Philippine Islands or in Hawaii.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, there is a provision in this bill which extends to Puerto Rico all the laws of the United States of a statutory character, all the enactments of Congress not locally inapplicable, and I presume under that provision a national bank could be established in Puerto Rico.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, if that is a correct assumption on the part of the Senator from Ohio, it shows that we can establish national banks in those islands. That is the proposition?

Mr. FORAKER. That is what we supposed.

Mr. BATE. Then it is not a foreign country.

Mr. MORGAN. Then it is not a foreign country in any sense of the word. It is a country against which you can make no discrimination, because if the national banks are carried into that new country under this bill, every law of the United States is carried in there that can be made useful or be made applicable to any condition that is found in the island of Puerto Rico. There can not be any question whatever about the logic of that proposition.

Therefore I approve, Mr. President, of the exchange of these coins for coins of the United States, with a mandatory provision that they shall be coined. I approve of the proposition that they shall be coined in the mints of the United States on the demand of the owner, and the further proposition that the individual who brings the bullion shall have the benefit of his demand and shall get his pay in the coin of the United States for his bullion at the price agreed upon. That is a good movement. That is in the right direction. That is what has contented me with this bill more than anything else. It was the fact that this movement was made absolutely necessary by conditions that were unavoidable which more than anything else has reconciled me to the expansion of our power and our influence over the newly acquired possessions, and also the further inevitable necessity which the Senate now is looking at with apprehension on the other side of the Chamber, that the tariff laws of the United States shall also be modified to suit these new possessions.

It is the fact that the Republican party, in order to expand the power and influence of this country and carry its flag into the Spanish possessions, find it necessary to come back to Democratic principles for the sake of conducting good government there which causes me to welcome an opportunity that otherwise never would have occurred, perhaps, for a hundred years, to force them to the adoption of Democratic principles and Democratic law as the true law and the true principles of the Government of the United States.

"All things come to him who waits," and, sooner than was hoped for, a protectionist Republican President demands free trade with Puerto Rico and Hawaii, and a gold Republican from Ohio reports this bill with a free-coinage provision in the seventh section.

Now, sir, I propose to use this principle thus admitted, this wise doctrine of political economy thus confessed, for an additional purpose for the benefit of those people and also for the benefit of ourselves. I want to give to the individual American citizen who owns silver bullion the right to go to the mints of the United States and have it coined exactly as if the bullion he owned were gold bullion. Under the laws of the United States as they exist now, whether gold bullion is in one form or in another, whether it is in the virgin form in which it left the mine, or whether it has even been wrought into articles of commerce, or whether it has been coined into foreign coin, if it is gold bullion, every American citizen and everybody else has the right to carry that bullion to the mint, demand a certificate of deposit for it, have it coined on his own personal account, and take that coin and circulate it through the country and through the world without the consent of any bank or banker or anybody else.

No Democrat has ever complained of that privilege being given to the American people. It has been a boast of the Democratic party always that gold bullion should be coined at the mints of the United States on the personal demand of its holder and that it should be handed out to him as coin after it is converted and stamped in the mint.

That is a principle, Mr. President, which belongs and has always belonged to American citizenship. It belongs to us under the Constitution; for at the time our Constitution was adopted and when we were British colonies and when we threw off the yoke of bondage to Great Britain, it was the law in all of the colonies of Great Britain, by act of Parliament, that every British subject, wherever he might be in all the realm, had the right to go to the British mint and have his gold bullion and his silver bullion coined into money.

That was the law at the time the Constitution was adopted, and it was with reference to that very law that that feature of the Constitution was adopted which forbids the States to permit any other kind of money to be made a legal tender except coins of gold and coins of silver. That had reference to the British statute, which secured a personal privilege—a most valuable personal right—to every British subject. It was retained, secured, and guaranteed in the Constitution and made obligatory on Congress.

Now, what is the personal right of the American citizen, at least as to gold? We have continued that right in our statutes, and under them to-day the right is perfect in any American citizen to have his gold bullion coined at the mints of the United States on his own private account.

The Democratic party, Mr. President, have always insisted that the same right should be extended to silver, and this is "free coinage." That right existed for seventy-odd years—for seventy-three years, I believe—unquestioned in the United States, and those who have denied that right to American citizenship have denied something that was guaranteed to them by the Constitution and by the laws of England at the time we became an independent power, and has always been approved and sustained by the Democratic party. It is the denial of a personal right to an individual that is just as personal to the man himself as the right to the writ of habeas corpus or trial by jury to deny him the right to have the Government convert his bullion into money, whether it is silver or gold. The Government has the sole power to convert bullion into money, and the citizen has the right to demand its exercise. The power can be regulated, but its exercise can not be refused, so as to destroy the value of gold or silver bullion.

Now, we have come to a point where, after having passed this great gold bill and put the country upon what is called a gold basis, we begin to relax in the very first bill that is presented here for consideration after that time; and in that we find the principle reaffirmed, that a man who owns silver bullion in Puerto Rico has the right to bring it to the mints of the United States and have it coined at a certain fixed rate. We are indebted to a Republican Senator from Ohio, Mr. President, for this new departure in search of the old road, I will call it, on the part of that great political organization, and I profoundly thank him for the courage, the manhood, and the recognition of duty that are involved in the report of the seventh section of this bill.

On another occasion, perhaps twenty years ago, we were indebted to another great Ohio Republican, Stanley Matthews, for resolutions which the present Senator from Ohio to-day follows out, giving to the people of the United States the right of the free coinage of gold and silver upon terms of equality, so far as the mint privilege is concerned, and at a ratio fixed by law. From that time until the passage of the gold bill in the Senate a few days ago, the Democratic party, along with some very valuable and very honorable allies who have been associated with us in our efforts, have fought year in and year out, have struggled with all possible power, energy, and determination, to get as much as we could get of silver money coined in the United States, and to enlarge, as far as it was possible to enlarge, the right of the citizens of the United States to coin silver bullion into money. We have made great progress through great difficulties, many obstructions, some of them coming from Republicans and others coming from Democrats in the Presidential office. We have made great progress.

Finally it has come to this condition, Mr. President, that this country is not only on a gold standard, but that the bond debt is made perpetual, an irredeemable bond debt, redeemable only in name and not in fact. The national banks are the sole dispensers of the power of the Government of the United States in the distribution of money and are given the absolute control of it. But in this bill the first movement is made which I am proud to say I believe will ultimately result in the entire freedom of silver as to its coinage, and it comes again from a Republican Senator from the great State of Ohio, and I welcome the movement.

It may be long delayed through the obstructions of the capitalized classes, but its necessity is confessed in this measure in a bold and, I trust, in a sincere way that can not be hereafter denied. The cerements are suddenly broken by this bill, and silver is released from its new-made grave.

The addition which I propose to make to this section I will now read. It is exactly in line with the seventh section. It does not in the slightest degree conflict with it except that it is a narrower provision than the seventh section. It places upon the American citizen some restrictions in regard to the right to have silver bullion coined that are not found in the seventh section of this proposed act.

I will read my proposition:

Any citizen of the United States who shall deposit for coinage, at any mint of the United States, silver bullion of the value of not less than $100, estimated at the rate of 371¼ grains of pure silver per dollar—

Just as here we estimate the peso at 60 cents of the American dollar—and at the same time and as a part of the same deposit shall also deposit gold bullion for coinage of equal or greater value, estimated at the rate of 23.22 grains of pure gold per dollar—

That is 16 to 1 fixed by law, just as it is fixed by law to-day, the silver dollar which we are now required to redeem in gold, as is asserted, every silver dollar now bears the relation to a gold dollar of 16 grains of silver to 1 of gold—

shall be entitled to have such gold and silver bullion coined in such lawful denominations of gold and silver coins of the United States as he shall designate, and after such deposit none of said bullion shall be withdrawn as bullion from such mint—

That is to prevent a fraudulent deposit and to force the coinage when you make the deposit, without the liberty of withdrawing it—but such gold and silver bullion shall be coined and the coin shall be delivered to the depositor, his or her assigns, or legal representatives, in discharge of the certificate of deposit issued for such deposit.

The superintendent of such mint shall issue to such depositors certificates of deposit, in accordance with this act, and shall refine and coin such bullion of gold and silver for and on account of such depositors in the same manner as if the same was owned by and was coined on account of the Government of the United States, and the charges for refining and coining such bullion shall be the same as are lawfully made in such cases.

No gold or silver bullion shall be deposited for coinage under this act that has been coined or manufactured as an article of commerce, or that is not the product of mines in the United States.

There is another limitation, a very much more stringent limitation than the one that is imposed by the seventh section of this bill upon the Puerto Rican coin. They are bullion. What I offer to have coined under this additional section is bullion. They are bullion that has been coined in the Puerto Rican mints. What I offer is the virgin silver and the virgin gold that come from the American mine and belong to American citizens and must be deposited in one deposit and in equal quantities, or at least that there shall be as much gold deposited as there is of silver in value, and when coined the coin shall be delivered into the hands of the depositor.

Now, Mr. President, where is the injustice of that? Who can suggest that there is some inequality in this proposition, that there is some advantage given in favor of silver over gold or of gold over silver? They are to be deposited in equal amounts, deposited together, coined at the same mint and under the same deposit, and the money is to be handed out when coined into the hands of the depositor. Where can be the injustice; where can be the danger to the national banks, or the capitalists of the country, or the holders of gold mines, or to any other person when every time we coin a silver dollar we must also coin a gold dollar and put it in circulation?

The silver money of this country, after it has been dethroned from its constitutional attitude of a money metal, is made to play the part of a transgressor against the law; something that has committed some public sin against the general welfare, something that is unworthy of a place in the American coinage, except in virtue of the provision that it is made redeemable in gold coin. It is the theory of the gold bill, it is the theory of the Republican party at this time, that there stands behind every silver dollar in the United States a pledge of gold redemption. That is the theory, although it is infinitely far from the fact. Now, if under this section that I propose to add to the bill you issue a gold dollar at every time you issue a silver dollar, you produce the redeemer at the same time that you create the sinner.

The alleged silver token is always attended with its redeemer and can not be coined in its absence. The antidote goes along with the alleged poison, and the redemption takes place instantly; they both pass out into the country, the one to stand for redemption and the other to be redeemed, just like it is on the presentation of a silver dollar or of a gold five-dollar piece at the Treasury Department and the taking out of a gold certificate or a silver certificate. That remains in circulation among the people for the purpose of redeeming the silver dollar that was put out at the same time, and the parity is made perfect.

Now, what effect will this have upon the country? The first effect will be to stimulate the production of gold in the mines of the United States. Is there any reason why the production of silver metal should not be encouraged in the United States from mines within our own limits when we know perfectly well that silver is not a useless and worthless thing; when we know that the nations of the earth are bound to have it, at least for subsidiary coinage; when we know that the Almighty gave us these facilities here for the purpose of enabling the people to carry on their work, and without which it can not be carried on? We can not treat or consider the possession of silver mines as being a matter of no value to the people and no source of wealth for them. On the contrary, it is our duty to make for ourselves, our people, and our Government all the advantage that we can out of the ownership of these silver mines.

The most irrational and fatuous neglect and abuse of a vast and peculiar source of wealth to our people—our silver mines—is locked up by the hand of avarice, and the key is handed over by our politicians to the money kings of Europe. I fear it will remain so until some terrible war has forced us to look to our silver resources to supply the place of European credit and capital, from which we shall then be divorced. We can prevent such a war if we will now begin to coin these treasures.

Senators know perfectly well that it is only in the Western Hemisphere that silver is produced in any appreciable quantities. The Western Hemisphere is the silver-bearing part of this world. The Eastern Hemisphere has gold in great quantities, but very little silver is there to be found—a little in Germany, a little in Russia; and where else will you go in the Eastern Hemisphere to find silver? A very small fraction is produced in China, possibly a little in Japan, but the great silver-bearing region of this world is the Western Hemisphere, commencing with the mountains of Alaska, extending to Patagonia, through the whole sweep of this great range of mountains.

As the world is obliged to have silver, and as nations and cities and dense communities could not subsist without the use of silver subsidiary coin, why should we not, being the possessors of the most valuable silver mines in the world, create a policy here which will stimulate the production of silver and also of gold? Europe and Asia must furnish us with a market for silver that can never fail. Have we got to the point where we are afraid of an inundation of specie money? Are we afraid that the time has come or is about to come or that it will ever come when there will be too much specie money in this country?

Well, Mr. President, I can say for a vast mass of the people of the United States who are called Democrats that there is not one of them who ever shivered at that prospect, not one. The Democrats of the United States would gladly welcome an extension of the specie basis of this country, and at the proper time—which, I think, is any time—a motion will be made to compel the national banks of this country to substitute in place of the national bonds as a basis of their banking circulation this specie basis of gold and silver. We shall have to come to that pretty soon.

Ultimately we will be bound to come to it; we can not avoid it. This country can not go along on the plan of issuing bonds and continuing to issue bonds, to be charged as interest upon the labor and industry of the country, in order to furnish a foundation for a national-bank system. We have got to get some other foundation for it. The laboring men of this country are not going to consent to be taxed, they and their children, for ages and ages to come, to sustain the national banks and the classes of society to which they pander and which they assist in building up into exclusive and masterful communities in this land.

The Democratic idea, Mr. President, will prevail upon this question. It is bound to work out. It may be said that the silver question is dead. Suppose it was dead, Mr. President—dead as Hector. We have found the Republican Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] bringing it up in the seventh section of this bill and opening it again. He is obliged to bring up the silver question and put it into the bill in order to keep those poor Puerto Rican people from starving to death, and that is exactly what we have got to do in the United States to keep a great many other people from starving to death after a little time.

This is what is destroying India to-day. Seventy million people in India to-day are in starvation. The Senate of the United States, it seems, can look at that with perfect complacency. We, perhaps, need not disturb our slumbers or our dreams in our own splendid condition of present enjoyment by reflecting that there are 70,000,000 people in India to-day who are starving. It is very hard to get our people to believe it, and yet that is the fact. The British Government is straining every possible energy and using all of its vast resources for the purpose of trying to prevent the starvation, which they themselves have caused.

Mr. President, it is not the withholding of the rain, or the refusal of the hand of labor, or the presence of disease or of war—for there is no war in India—that has caused this starvation there. What has caused it? The British gold policy. How has it caused it? By taking off the supply of money from the poor people, who live on small amounts of money daily. It has reduced the supply of money in India, and food can not be obtained, not so much because of the failure of the crops as because you can not get interchange of produce from one part of that country with another, even where they have railroads and canals, but where the money is not in the hands of the people to buy provisions. When the British Government carries the provisions to them, they must do it as a bounty, the people themselves not being able, for want of a sufficient circulating medium in that country, to buy anything.

That is the condition of India. Senators may make light of it, but they can not find any other reason for it. That is a plain and palpable fact, and it will come in this country when our populations get congested to two or three times the number of people we have got here unless we accept the invitation of the Almighty and open our mines of gold and silver and allow the people to use gold and silver as coin in the conduct of their business, as they have the constitutional right to do.

The first impression that will be produced by the passage of this bill is that it will stimulate the silver mines in this country to production. That ought to be done. They ought not to go to waste. The silver ought not to be allowed to remain locked up in the bowels of the earth. Silver ought to be doing its duty among the business men of this country, rich and poor, but particularly and chiefly amongst the poorer classes of the people. There will be an addition to the value of money in this country. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. President, when we think of the enormous additions of population to our country even through immigration, to say nothing of the natural increase from year to year, we find that it is necessary to increase the volume of money to correspond with it. Can any Senator here name a country in this world, except Argentina, that is receiving an acquisition of population by immigration besides the United States? If so, what country is it that in its daily reports of its population shows that it is receiving an increase of popular strength from the other parts of the world?

To what country is it that the American emigrates? What line of migration has ever started in any part of the United States to draw our people away from this country, to carry them to some more favored land? Nothing of that sort has ever occurred.

Mr. President, so long as our institutions are what they are and so long as we carry into effect that grand, splendid pledge of individual liberty found in the Constitution of the United States, this emigration will never take place. It may follow expansion into distant places, under the flag of the country, but there is no man who has ever tasted of American liberty who is willing to exchange it for the liberties of any other country in the world.
